I shall quote some individual cases of how people have been treated. This information has been given to me this morning by Mary Dines who is the organiser of Rights and Justice, a well-respected humanitarian organisation. Mary's own record of working for humanitarian causes and refugees for many years is well recognised and she is rightly well respected for it. Example one is a man who was held by the police on three occasions in 1987 and 1988; during which he was immersed in cold water for a whole day, suspended by his hands for a whole day and severely beaten. He was not a member of an illegal organisation.

Example two is a political activist:

"Owing to persecution during martial law (1980 to 1985) he was forced to leave his village and go to Istanbul. He was arrested four times in Istanbul and detained for nine months for distributing leaflets. During detention he was tortured by falaka (trussed up like a chicken and beaten on the soles of his feet). He was given electricial shocks to his testicles, tongue and teeth, covered for long periods of time by cold water, hit with sacks of sand (which are supposed to leave no marks), hung upside down and hit with truncheons. He was last arrested in 1988. He has a damaged kidney."

The case of example three is as follows:

"Arrested in 1981 for taking a wounded man to hospital in his taxi. Had seven stitches in his head after assault and still suffers from blurred vision and headaches. Arrested in 1988 with his seven months' pregnant wife. They were held in the army camp for four months. The baby was born in detention. After he left Turkey his wife was rearrested and is now in prison with the baby."

Another example relates to a man who was a member of the Social Democratic party and also a member of an illegal Kurdish organisation. His story is as follows:

"Arrested in 1981—imprisoned for one month. Arrested in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988. During detention he was forced to run kms over rough ground in bare feet, beaten with a bag of concrete, hot eggs were put in his armpits, he was beaten with sticks and batons and hit in the eyes. Since 1987 he has been in constant pain. His father was killed by the army in 1975. His mother was also beaten up and is still suffering from injuries to her head. One cousin has been imprisoned. One cousin is missing. Other family members have been imprisoned."

[Mr. Jeremy Corbyn]

We are dealing with the systematic torture of Kurdish people by the Turkish Government. I understand that attempts are now being made to stop people leaving Turkey to seek political asylum elsewhere because it is believed that that damages the image of modern Turkey. Nothing damages the image of modern Turkey more than the factual, accurate accounts I have given, of the way in which people are treated by the Turkish army. We now look to the British Government to fulfil their obligations under the United Nations charter of 1951 to provide urgent humanitarian aid. That aid is necessary because the voluntary organisations are relying totally on voluntary donations and a little bit of assistance from local authorities.

It is the responsibility of the British Government to provide the financial assistance and they should not throw the job on to the voluntary organisations and the local authorities. Willing as they are to help, those organisations and authorities have enormous problems of their own. The Kurdish people should be properly treated and the Government should give assistance to the suitable local organisations.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): We are all indebted to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) for bringing this subject to the attention of the House today, as well as for the moving and sensitive manner in which he presented his case.

I was talking to another hon. Member yesterday about this issue and he said that he believed that the Kurdish people were the victims of some of the worst atrocities perpetrated in the modern world. That hon. Member was not a Labour Member, but a Conservative who just happens to be a senior member of the Government.

I cannot help contrasting the way in which some spokesmen have talked about this issue to the media, including reports on television yesterday, with the visit of the Roman Catholic archbishop, Basil Hume, to the east and north of London yesterday. He brought with him not only sympathy, but money and moral support. I hope that his visit to our local region will help to persuade the Government to take some action.

If we consider the action of the various Government Departments it would be fair to say that the Department of Social Services has acted promptly and efficiently and it has been extremely helpful. My hon. Friends and I were grateful that the Minister of State, Home Office discussed this matter with us earlier this week. We had a civilised discussion, although there were some obvious differences between us. At that meeting, the Minister said—I hope that he will reaffirm that statement today—that he would consider giving money to help the British Refugee Council to set up a hostel at Tower house in Tower Hamlets. He also said that he would consider giving extra money to some of the voluntary agencies.

Yesterday I spoke to most of the voluntary agencies and they have simply run out of money—there is no more cash in the till. On the debit side, I am bound to say to the Minister that the idea of putting the Kurdish people in prisons in the south-west of England is deeply disturbing. On the credit side, some prison officers came up from the west country yesterday to talk to representatives of the Kurdistan Workers Association to see how they might best help if the threat to detain Kurdish people in prison was carried out. Underneath the cynicism and some of the meanness on the part of the Home Office there is a deep undercurrent of sympathy for the Kurdish workers.

The Department of the Environment is also concerned and it is likely to become deeply involved over possible rate support grant and the need to help local authorities regarding the temporary and the possible permanent rehousing of those people.

What has disturbed me about the public statements that have come from the Home Office is that various officials have said—I have no doubt with the concurrence of the Minister—that they believe that many of the Kurdish people who come here do so for simply economic reasons rather than through fear of persecution. That the Home Office should make such unattributable briefings is disturbing. That Department must consider in a judicious and judicial manner all the cases that come before it. It is extremely difficult to believe that it can do so fairly when spokesmen publicly say that they believe most of the people concerned are not valid refugees. The Home Office, in order not to make itself look silly, has therefore had to reject a lot of the cases for asylum and send people back. In other words, the public pronouncements by Home Office officials are liable to produce self-fulfilling prophecies.

I hope that the Home Office will get on with the business of dealing with each case in a humane and sympathetic manner. Its officials should stop making adverse public statements, which do not suggest to the public that they are dealing with the matter in a proper, judicial fashion. I hope that the Minister will relent a bit today and open his heart to the Kurdish people. I hope that he will offer some constructive suggestions to the House.

11.29 am

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Tim Renton): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) for giving us the opportunity to discuss the recent increase in the number of Turkish people, mainly of Kurdish origin, coming to this country, who have claimed asylum on arrival here. I am also grateful for the opportunity to talk, as the hon. Members for Islington, North and for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) have asked me to, about the Government's response to that problem.

This debate was immediately preceded by a shameless piece of news manipulation by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) who came to the Chamber and made a fuss about what the BBC had said in relation to Labour Members——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I must remind the House that when I dealt with that point of order, other hon. Members were trying to catch my eye to pursue the matter. Out of regard to private Members' time, I disregarded them and did not allow them to speak. It would be quite wrong for the Minister now to try to do what I did not allow earlier.

Mr. Renton: I understand your warning, Mr. Deputy Speaker. However, the hon. Member for Islington, North spoke movingly as a result of his experience—as he lists

Turkey in the reference books as one of his special subjects of interest—for 10 minutes or so about the problems of Kurds in Turkey moving between Iraq and Turkey. The shadow Foreign Secretary, the right hon. Member for Gorton, having come to the Chamber to make his little fuss about the BBC and Labour Members, might have had the courtesy to remain in the Chamber to listen to the points which the hon. Member for Islington, North was making. That would have been the appropriate thing for the right hon. Member for Gorton to do rather than to engage in a little bit of shabby publicity-seeking, which is what we have come to expect from him.

I want to consider the serious subject of this Adjournment debate and I will begin by explaining the general context of the Government's policy towards people who claim asylum. As the hon. Member for Islington, North reminds us, the United Kingdom was one of the earliest signatories to the 1951 United Nations convention on refugees. We take our responsibilities very seriously, despite what is sometimes said by organisations such as Amnesty International.

No one who does my job can fail to be affected daily by the plight of people who are fleeing from persecution in their own country. Each day, about half a dozen people arrive at our airports seeking political asylum. Another dozen or so apply from within the country. They are all dealt with without fuss. In every case, as the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch said, a carefully organised series of actions takes place. An application for asylum, I fully realise, as do Home Office officials, is important, sensitive and under our law must be properly and exhaustively considered.

No one is refused asylum in the United Kingdom until full inquiries have been made, interviews conducted and the opportunity given for further information or representations to be submitted. In the great majority of ordinary cases, the claimant is allowed to remain in the United Kingdom. However, as the hon. Members for Islington, North and for Hackney, South and Shoreditch will be aware, as they both have a great deal of knowledge on this subject, the fundamental obligation that we accepted under the United Nations convention is that no one claiming asylum should be returned to a country where they have a well-founded fear of persecution. The practical effect of that is that unless the person has arrived from a third country which is safe for him to return to, he must be admitted to the United Kingdom either on a temporary basis, or held in detention while his claim is considered.

If the interests of people genuinely fleeing from persecution are to be safeguarded, it is vital that the system designed to protect them should not be exploited by people whose main motivation is economic migration.

I want now to consider the particular circumstances of the recent influx of Turkish asylum claimants. Over the past two years we have come to expect an average of one or two asylum claims each day from Turkish nationals. Some have been given refugee status and many others have been allowed to remain, exceptionally. Earlier this month, young Turkish men began to arrive at the rate of about 50 a day claiming asylum here. In one instance they almost filled an entire charter flight of over 100 passengers. On another weekend, more than 300 arrived on a variety of flights. In every case where asylum was claimed, they have been admitted while we examined their claims. We are now looking at more than 1,000 Turkish cases who have arrived in the past four weeks.

Some pattern is beginning to emerge which begins to explain this surge. It is clear that for a substantial number their real objective is to find work in the United Kingdom. Some have said so explicitly. There is evidence that middle-men selling air tickets have been exploiting the economic situation in Turkey, with stories of job opportunities in London, and briefing on how to claim asylum.

How do we know that? More than 80 people who initially claimed asylum have already gone back to Turkey of their own accord, realising that jobs and housing are not going to be so easy to obtain as they were led to believe. Many of them were, quite simply, led up the garden path in their own towns and villages. That is not the action of people who fear imminent persecution. We are seeing a gross and transparent abuse of the asylum procedures as a means of obtaining jobs, housing and perhaps social security benefits in the United Kingdom.

The tragedy is that we know that among the spurious claims there will certainly be some which are genuine. The hon. Member for Islington, North gave details of one case which sounded particularly horrific. We are well aware that the human rights standards in Turkey still fall somewhat short of those that we consider to be acceptable. I must look to my right hon. and hon. Friends at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to respond on another occasion to the details referred to by the hon. Member for Islington, North.

We have already given exceptional leave to some Turks from the recent arrivals on those grounds. However, it takes time and detailed inquiry to assess each asylum application. It will now take us some months to sort out the genuine from the abusive claims which continue to come at the rate of 50 a day.

It cannot be in the interests of the genuine refugee that he has to remain in a state of uncertainty for some months. That is now inevitable, given the numbers involved. Hon. Members and the courts would justifiably criticise us if we were to cut short the process of considering claims. In those circumstances, I wish from time to time that Opposition Members would support us in criticising those who so clearly take advantage of the difficulties.

An immigration officer may either detain an asylum applicant while his claim is considered or grant him temporary admission. A very small percentage are detained. The vast majority of applicants for asylum are granted temporary admission pending a decision. They frequently have relatives or friends in this country who are willing to look after them but a large number of the recent arrivals from Turkey are young single men who know no one in this country. Various welfare organisations, including the British Refugee Council, have helped to find them temporary accommodation which understandably is frequently with members of their own community. There is a large resident Turkish community in north London, and many of those granted temporary admission are now in that area. A number of Turkish organisations have offered to look after them.

Those people have come here without any notice or invitation. In many cases they do not appear to be political refugees by any stretch of the definition. They are in an entirely different situation from the Ugandan Asians or the Vietnamese boat people where reception centres were set up in this country in advance. The Turks are here on a temporary basis until such time as decisions are reached on their applications. The Government have no special responsibility for those people who are not refugees coming here as part of a Government programme. However, we recognise that there is a human problem to be addressed.

Community organisations have helped and continue to provide, emergency shelter and food. I whole-heartedly thank them and commend them for their efforts. I have undertaken to consider reimbursing specific costs which they have had to incur.

I confirm that I have also said that we are willing to consider financial help towards the establishment of a short-term hostel in Tower Hamlets. My officials are in urgent discussions with the director of the British Refugee Council with a view to having this available for new arrivals at the earliest possible opportunity. More widely, my officials in the Home Office's voluntary services unit have been in touch with their usual contacts, and others, across Government Departments to let them know of the problems that these people may face while their claims are considered.

When I met a delegation from the Association of London Authorities and Hackney a few days ago, to which the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch referred, I agreed that my officials should set up a meeting between the ALA, Hackney and Government Departments to explore in more detail than was possible at that meeting—I agree with the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch that it was a courteous meeting, even if we did not agree on every objective—the problems that Hackney and other inner London boroughs are having to address as a result of the arrivals. I understand that that meeting has now been fixed for 5 June.

Meanwhile, we shall continue as quickly as we can to consider the individual claims and to reach decisions accordingly. This will be done on a case-by-case basis, as I have already said, against the criteria of the convention. There will certainly be some applicants where there are good and valid compassionate reasons for allowing them to remain here and they will be allowed entry on an exceptional basis. Where there are no compassionate features and where the applicant does not qualify for entry as a refugee or under any part of the immigration laws, refusal of entry and removal must follow. I listened with great interest to what the hon. Member for Islington, North had to say about the general situation of the Kurds in the middle east. However, we do not accept that all Turkish nationals of Kurdish origin, regardless of individual circumstances, qualify to remain here as refugees under the convention.

We have so far reached decisions on 26 applicants who arrived here at the beginning of the month. Ten have been given leave to enter. Sixteen have had their applications refused and, after their solicitors' representations had been considered, were returned to Turkey.

Additional immigration officials have been brought in to deal with a sudden increase. I can assure hon. Members that every effort is being made to resolve these applications as quickly and as fairly as possible. This process will be hampered, though, if applicants on temporary admission do not co-operate or attend for interviews at the times requested. The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch referred to the remarks made by His Eminence Cardinal Hume yesterday and his visit to the area. Of course I understand that it is desirable to provide accommodation for all asylum seekers in the community rather than in prisons. The cardinal called for Government funding. Our resources are very limited.

We are considering giving help to increase the amount of accommodation within the community, but I warned the hon. Members for Hackney, South and Shoreditch and for Islington, North when they came to see me on Tuesday or Wednesday that I thought that it would be necessary in appropriate cases, where we were concerned about applicants on temporary asylum, to place them temporarily in prison. About 20 applicants are now detained in prison. A further 80 places have been made available in prison accommodation. That will be for those whom we think are unlikely to co-operate with interviewing officers. It will help in the speedy consideration of those cases. That can only be to the benefit of the genuine applicant.

In the past, as the hon. Member for Islington, North certainly knows, Opposition Members have repeatedly extolled the benefits of an appeals procedure for port asylum applicants within the United Kingdom, but I wonder whether they have really thought through the implications. We already normally refer all applicants, on a non-mandatory basis, to the United Kingdom immigration advisory service when we refuse their application. I personally look at any refusal whenever there is a difference of view between UKIAS and Home Office officials. A formal appeals system would be hamstrung by delays, as is the appeals system which already exists for ordinary immigration cases.

The longer the delay, the more attractive it must become for some applicants to exploit it. The experience of our European partners who have full appeal systems is precisely that. In France, asylum applications are running at the rate of over 30,000 a year and in Germany at over 100,000. In both countries, the delays in hearing appeals are in the order of years. Meanwhile, the applicant is free to stay in the country, to work, to marry and to raise a family. Removal soon becomes impossible because of the ties that have been established. None of this would be of any benefit to the genuine refugee fleeing persecution. It could only be an invitation to exploit the system.

Members on both sides of the House are united in agreeing on the need for measures to protect the genuine refugee. I am deeply disheartened that, where we have circumstances that are clearly being exploited to the disadvantage of the genuine refugee, Opposition Members never join me in condemining the abuse. In the long run, their failure to do so, and the encouragement that that gives to people who abuse the system, can only threaten the proper working of the very machinery that has been so important a part of the protection of refugees since 1951.

Cyprus

11.45 am

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity to raise the subject of Cyprus.

Cyprus is a small island, some 3,000 miles away with a population of about 650,000. The United Kingdom has very strong historical, strategic and emotional ties with the island. They stretch back to 1878 when Cyprus was annexed from the Ottoman empire and continued until 1960. During that period the island was a colony of Britain. We still maintain sovereign base areas on the island, in which 10,000 service men live. Moreover, Cyprus is an extremely important strategic base in military and geopolitical terms in the eastern Mediterranean. Therefore, its stability is extremely important. Britain also has significant economic ties with the island and is its largest trading partner. At present, 200,000 Greek and Turkish Cypriots live in the United Kingdom.

Most important, however, is the United Kingdom's legal role as a party to the treaty of guarantee that set up the present Republic of Cyprus in 1960. The treaty obliged the United Kingdom to protect the constitutional and territorial integrity of the island. Incidentally, it is a constitution about which, with a somewhat curious use of the double negative, the former Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Baroness Young, said that the British Government have "not accepted that the Constitution is not still in force".

It is generally accepted that the British Government failed to carry out their role under the treaty. In 1974, it led to the partition of the island, to the effective occupation of just over one third of it by the Turkish Government and to its division ever since.

Today, 200,000 refugees from both sides are denied access to their homelands. Moreover, 2,000 people are missing and still unaccounted for, despite the efforts of the United Nations. A kind of Mediterranean iron curtain has been drawn through the island. Most important of all, when he last visited the United Kingdom, President Vassiliou said that Cyprus—a Commonwealth country and an associate member of the EEC—will, at the end of this year, following the Vietnamese withdrawal from Cambodia, the South African withdrawal from Namibia and the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, be the only country in the world that is occupied without its consent by troops of a foreign power. As The Independent recently said:

"The spirit of détente and co-operation which has run across other parts of the globe has yet sadly to reach Cyprus."

That is not through want of trying. In the past 14 years, through the United Nations and through bilateral negotiations, culminating in the present negotiations between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities, under the auspices of the United Nations, that began last September, efforts have been made to reunify the island. However, it is still occupied and divided, and in terms of the stability of the region and natural justice, that is dangerous.

The Foreign Affairs Select Committee studied relations with Cyprus in May 1987. It reported:

"The permanent partition of Cyprus would be an injustice to those who have been forcibly removed from their traditional homes and possessions, a tragic concession to racial and religous bigotry, and a continuing irritant to the political stability of the region."

If that stability is to be regained, if unity is to return to the island and if injustice is to be removed, the United Kingdom must take a proactive role in diplomatic terms to bring it about. There is a danger in relying, as we do now, on a bilateral approach by the Turkish and Greek communities, as the Turkish side seems to have a continuing investment in the status quo. There is a danger that such an approach may be unsuccessful.

I shall not repeat the historical arguments or apportion blame. Ever since 1891, when there were 346 mixed villages, to 1960, when there were only 114, the two communities have taken paths of separate development, although it must be said that, at least until independence in 1960, they lived together in reasonable toleration of each other.

It is understandable that Greek Cypriots are fearful of a Turkish takeover—they are only 40 miles away from Turkey. It is also understandable that they are emotional, and feel strongly, about the fact that many of them have lost everything—property, fathers and sons and other family—during the Turkish occupation. They resent the continued and unlawful military occupation of the island and what they regard as the raiding of many Cypriot treasures in the north of the island with the acquiesence, or even knowledge, of the Turkish authorities there.

We can also understand the Turkish Cypriots' perspective. They are outnumbered six to one. There is no doubt that they were subjected to significant atrocities by the Greek community between 1963 and 1974. Perhaps the worst were the activities of General Grivas in 1967. They are rightly suspicious of enosis, or union with Greece. In 1966, Archbishop Makarios talked about the 1960 agreements being abrogated and buried. No doubt that is a significant reason why, from 1963, the Turkish Cypriots effectively withdrew into their own enclaves. They regarded their security as paramount.

Objective analysis, no matter how genuine may be the attempt to be even handed, will not remedy injustice or provide sufficient impetus for reunification of the island, which time is gradually pushing apart. Certain facts are patent in this respect. It is not just the Greek Cypriot community, but the international community and the United Nations Security Council, who regard the Turkish occupation of the north of the island as illegal. Resolutions 541 and 550 of 1983 state that. Moreover, it could be argued that article 3 of the 1949 Geneva convention, which states:

"An occupying power shall not deposit or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" is being contravened, as Turkey is introducing a significant number of mainland settlers to the island.

Although, over the years, the Greeks have abandoned enosis in their proposals and have talked of multilateral guarantees for a sovereign independent state of Cyprus, the most recent Turkish constitution, which was adopted in 1983, talks of the Turkish Cypriot people as "an inseparable part of the great Turkish nation".

Assembly members in the north of Cyprus have to take an oath of allegiance to the "principles of Ataturk".

Although Turkey justified the invasion in terms of protecting the 1960 constitution and its position as a guarantee power and has used that to argue for the legitimacy of northern Cyprus ever since, the treaty argued against any partition of the island. In 1987, the Select Committee said:

"While the first Turkish invasion of Cyprus in July 1974 could have been regarded as a legitimate and successful exercise of her Guarantor rights in order to prevent Enosis, the subsequent Turkish occupation of the whole of the area north of Nicosia has been, and must be, seen as an illegitimate . . . attempt to impose partition. In July 1974 Turkey appeared to be acting in support of the 1960 settlement; in August 1974 Turkey was undoubtedly using force to prevent its restoration."

Turkey has allowed 60,000 settlers from Anatolia to populate the north of the island. Mr. Denktash, the Turkish leader, through his New Birth party, relies on their support to remain in power. When we take into account the fact that 30,000 native Turkish Cypriots have left Turkey during the past five years, we realise that Turkification has effectively taken place in the north of the island.

I rely on personal observation and on the words of the leader of the Republican Turkish party in north Cyprus, Mr. Orker Ozgur. He addressed the congress on the Nicosia branch of his party on 14 April and said:

"In accordance with this strategy,"

—of the National Unity party and Mr. Denktash—

"the Turkish Cypriot Community is being dissolved and North Cyprus gradually turned into a province of Turkey . . . The workers and peasants brought from Turkey are being exploited as a means towards permanent partition. They are being used to turn North Cyprus into a province of Turkey. They have been brought here in order to destroy the Turkish Cypriot identity."

He said that he estimates that, in five to 10 years' time, if such deliberate policies continue, the result will be the effective annexation of the north of Cyprus.

It is, therefore, not surprising that questions have been asked about the sincerity of Mr. Denktash and his allies in Turkey in their recent negotiating stance. Mr. Ozal's position, and especially that of his Motherland party, was substantially weakened as a result of the Turkish local government elections in March. That fact is highlighted by the negotiating positions taken by the Greek and Turkish Cypriot sides during the United Nations talks. On the three freedoms—of movement, settlement and property—the Greeks have admitted that, although they regard them as of cardinal importance, they are not perfectly attainable and that there will be a transitional period during which they can take place. Yet the Turkish side has merely said that it is prepared to look at the problem and consider it in 18 years' time, and even then only on a limited basis. That will effectively mean that the partition of the island will have become virtually permanent after 32 years.

On territorial guarantees, the Greeks have specifically excluded Turkey and Greece and have called for the supervision of any future agreement by the Security Council or, at least, by an international force. The Turkish side has merely stuck to its major and first principle that there must be a physical presence of Turkish troops in the island.

On the security of the community, the Greek side has called for what has been generally regarded as the most effective way of ensuring that troubles do not re-emerge—the general demilitarisation of the island and the stationing there of an independent international police force to ensure that a bizonal policy is effective. The Turks have said that Turkish troops must remain, despite the fact that it has been calculated that it would take only one hour for troops to reach the island from the Turkish mainland in an emergency.

Equally important are the attitudes of the Turkish and Greek sides to confidence-building measures which are regarded as crucial to maintain contact between the two communities and create the undercurrent of trust which must underpin any effective reunification of the island. For instance, Friends of Cyprus has recently attempted to bring together Greek and Turkish Cypriots in a number of conferences for women, environmentalists, journalists and so on. Although there has been the will to co-operate among the leaders of the Turkish and Greek communities in, for instance, Nicosia, there have been continual attempts by the Turkish Cypriots to ensure that their representatives do not attend.

That does not mean that I believe that good will does not exist: it does. Most ordinary Turkish and Greek Cypriots and the civil authorities in Nicosia wish to co-operate and have been successful in doing so in several ways such as electricity, planning and a joint sewerage system in Nicosia. However, it would be wrong to ignore the differences, since they explain the painfully slow process of the negotiations which will reach the end of their present phase in June.

It would be wrong not to wish them well—I do. But if bilateral negotiations fail, I urge on the United Kingdom a proactive role which will see that the reunification of Cyprus can be effectively dealt with in a multilateral context. I urge on the United Kingdom a number of steps which would help bring about reunification. It should organise with the EEC a joint statement which will say to Turkey, whose troops are occupying Cyprus, that until it substantially reduces its forces or comes up with a timetable for their withdrawal, there is no possibility of a positive and successful result to the negotiations on its application for EEC membership. At present, that application and the fact that it may not be further processed relies purely upon a Greek veto. Given the international and legal circumstances, the EEC should take that proactive stance.

To be even-handed, Britain should insist that the south ends its campaign to isolate the north economically and by its trade embargo. That would give the north more confidence that trade relations can take place.

A financial package led by the United Kingdom should be put in place to allow the redevelopment of the north following reunification and to pay for the enormous resettlement claims that will no doubt be put forward once reunification occurs.

The United Nations force should be taking a more proactive role, instead of supervising division, in encouraging unity between the two communities. It has an important role in confidence building, arranging conferences, supervising exchanges of people between the north and south and applying pressure on the Turkish and Greek communities to allow those exchanges to take place successfully.

In 1979 it was agreed between the two communities that Varosha, the industrial area near Famagusta should be opened up for the benefit of the entire island. That has not taken place yet and it should happen speedily.

The United Kingdom should use its membership of the Security Council to propose ideas to allow for an effective guarantee of demilitarisation of the island and a federal police force once the island is reunified. That would give confidence to the two communities that once an agreement had been reached, it would be made effective and their security would be protected.

Those are initiatives which the British Government are uniquely qualified to take. They have good relations with Greece and Turkey, they are members of the Security Council and the EEC and they have guarantee status on Cyprus. More than that, the Government have an historical and moral responsibility to ensure that peace and unity return to Cyprus. That task is not easy but the rewards are great. I urge the Government to act with their customary imagination and sense of purpose.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. William Waldegrave): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) for providing this opportunity to have a short debate about relations with Cyprus. I congratulate him on a thoroughly comprehensive and scholarly speech in which his expertise and commitment shone through. I know that he has developed that expertise through visits to the island and through his membership of Friends of Cyprus, to which he referred. As my hon. Friend said, Friends of Cyprus does extremely valuable work in the cause of fostering contact between the two communities. I applaud its efforts and my hon. Friend's efforts in support of it. I wish Friends of Cyprus continuing success.

This is a good time to have this debate. It is some time since the House last debated Cyprus. We had an Adjournment debate in October 1987 when we heard the views of my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend). A little later, in December 1987, my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Sir W. Shelton) initiated a longer debate on Cyprus, which allowed a number of hon. Members to speak. But there has been a long gap since then, and much has happened in that period.

As my hon. Friend said, there has been an improvement in the international climate in a number of regional disputes and problems. There has been a solution to a number of thorny issues. Sadly, as my hon. Friend said, we cannot say that the problem of Cyprus has been solved.

At the risk of being proved wrong by events, I think it is fair to say that the prospects of a solution are better than they were 18 months ago. I shall explain the reason for that qualified optimism in a moment when I deal with the present state of play in the international talks and how that fits into the context of Britain's relations with Cyprus.

I shall first run through some of the other aspects of those relations. I am glad to say that they are generally excellent. That is something to be proud of, and hon. Members from both sides of the House are to be congratulated on playing their part in bringing that about. Nearly 30 years after Cyprus was brought to independence, memories of the difficult last years of the colonial period are dimmer. But the links forged by earlier generations have proved remarkably durable. Admittedly, relations with Cyprus since then have, at times, been conducted in extremely difficult circumstances.

I shall not go into the old arguments about what Britain might have done, but shall show briefly that although our relations have been through the fire they have emerged tempered and are in excellent condition.

Bilateral trade is reasonably healthy. Latest figures show an increase in our exports to the island from £141 million in 1987 to £160 million in 1988. Imports from Cyprus reached £122 million last year, so the balance of visible trade is in our favour. However, that is redressed by the income that Cyprus derives from British tourism. Our statistics rightly do not separate trade with the south of the island from that with the north. The healthy overall picture is reflected in the Cypriot Government's statistics and in those produced by the Turkish-Cypriot authorities. They clearly show that Britain is the largest overseas market for both communities. Indeed, we take far more of the north's exports than does Turkey, demonstrating Britain's position in the island which was one of the underlying themes of the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest.

Our bilateral aid through the European Community to Cyprus takes the form of technical and educational co-operation and training. As the Government have made clear many times, notably when replying to the previous report on Cyprus of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee, we believe that our aid should benefit both communities. Some hon. Members would like us to give all our aid money to the north, where the gross domestic product is much lower, or split it 50-50 between the two sides. We believe that the first course would not be right—the provision of training, scholarships for study in Britain and so on should be for the benefit of both communities—and that the second would be impracticable because the size of the two communities is not equal.

I am sure that the majority of hon. Members agree that we must proceed according to the needs of the moment and whatever viable projects may be available. It is no use to say that we should give X thousand pounds a year to provide scholarships for Turkish Cypriots if there are insufficient qualified candidates to use the money. We therefore proceed pragmatically and apply funds to meet the needs.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development recently gave the House up-to-date information, in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), on commitments of public funds that the Government have made to the two communities over the past 12 months. They show what we are doing and what we are trying to do. It would not be right in this short debate to go into detail, but the Cyprus fee support scheme is winding down at the same time as the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme is winding up. We expect Turkish Cypriots to benefit more from our educational provision in the future. I repeat that how much they benefit will depend on how many suitably qualified candidates are identified.

We contribute our fair share to the provision of EEC aid to Cyprus. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development told the House, the Community allocated £29 million under the second five-year financial protocol for Cyprus, which expired last December. A further financial protocol was agreed earlier this year, under which £41 million will be provided over the next five years. The Community tries to support projects of benefit to the whole population of the island. In particular, it has met the cost of water, sewerage and electricity works. I am afraid that I cannot break down how the sums benefit Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots as the information is not available.

Links between friendly countries depend in large measure on people and the cross-fertilisation of cultures and interests that they make possible. Our links with Cyprus are very healthy. About 200,000 Cypriots from both communities live in our midst. Many of them hold British citizenship, and I am proud to have a considerable number, especially Greek Cypriots, living in my constituency. They play a full and active part in the political life of this country.

More than 300,000 Britons visit Cyprus every year, going to both northern and southern Cyprus. They make a large contribution to the economies of both communities. There are about 3,000 British residents on the island, which shows the long-lasting ties of affection that still exist, divided between south and north.

At the pinnacle of importance are contacts between the two Governments of Britain and Cyprus and the Turkish-Cypriot community in the north. I am happy to say that contacts between the two Governments could hardly be closer. The best illustration of that is that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has met President Vassiliou no fewer than four times in his relatively brief term of office, which is remarkable. We have welcomed here two of President Vassiliou's Ministers. I met and gave a dinner for its Interior Minister, Mr. Venyamin last year. The traffic in high and low ranking officials in both directions is considerable. The strength and diversity of links are, I am sure, all that hon. Members could wish for.

We have good contacts with the Turkish-Cypriot leadership in the north; some would say that we have too few and others that we have too many. As usual, the Government are criticised by both sides. It is a difficult balance to achieve, but I believe that we have done so.

I say to those who believe that we should cut off or reduce links with Turkish Cypriots that it would serve no one's interest, and my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest was not arguing for that. He argued that we should use all our contacts to work for the unity of the island. The Government have made clear their attitude in reply to the report of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee.

To those who believe that we should be according the same treatment to Mr. Denktash, who is the Turkish-Cypriot leader, as we give to President Vassiliou, I say that we recognise only one state in Cyprus, whose Government is now headed by Mr. Vassiliou. Mr. Denktash made it difficult for us to give him the access that he used to have to Ministers when the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" was declared in November 1983. We can have no truck with separatism and must guard against any action that might be construed by one side or the other as conferring recognition on an illegal entity. I do not say that we rule out for ever and a day a meeting between Mr. Denktash and a British Minister. If my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary were satisfied that such a meeting would materially assist the achievement of a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement in Cyprus, I am sure that he would consider sanctioning one. I am sure that my hon. Friend agrees that in those circumstances that would be the right course to take. However, the conditions that will make such a meeting possible are not yet available.

Mr. Denktash's lack of access to the higher levels of the Government does not mean that his voice and that of his community are not heard—they are. Turkish-Cypriot views are fully taken into account. Our high commissioner in Nicosia sees Mr. Denktash frequently. Mr. Denktash has also been received three times in the past 18 months by a deputy under-secretary in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The most important aspect of my hon. Friend's speech was the state of the current inter-communal talks about a settlement of the Cyprus problem. When my predecessor replied to the debate in December 1987, he said that it was time for both sides to try to reacquire the habit of continuous and constructive co-operation—that marked the earlier stages of the inter-communal talks, which have been going on for a decade and more—and that we believe that the newly announced appointment of Mr. Camilion as the United Nations Secretary-General's special representative in Cyprus was a challenge to which both sides had to respond.

We congratulate the United Nations Secretary-General on having grasped the opportunity provided by the election less than three months later of Mr. Vassiliou as President of the Republic of Cyprus to relaunch the inter-communal talks. That took some doing, given the mutual mistrust that has built up between the two sides over the years, but the secretary-general managed to do so. With the active support of the British Government and others, he persuaded the two Cypriot leaders to meet him in Geneva last August, when they accepted his proposal that, without preconditions, they should attempt to negotiate a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem by 1 June 1989. President Vassiliou and Mr. Denktash have subsequently held an unprecedented number of one-to-one meetings, largely in the presence only of Mr. Camilion, to whom I pay tribute. They have had two further meetings with the secretary-general in an effort to cut the knot that has tied up the negotiating process for so long.

The going has been predictably tough. There are too many people with influence on both sides who insist on maximalist solutions, believing that they are 100 per cent. right and the other side is 100 per cent. wrong. That is not the way to conduct any negotiation, because it nips the flower of success in the bud before it has a chance to bloom. We believe that both Cypriot leaders have been negotiating with a degree of flexibility. We call on them to show yet more flexibility and imagination, more of the spirit of compromise, to crown the secretary-general's efforts with success, reunite the Republic of Cyprus and remove a cause of instability in the eastern Mediterranean.

We genuinely believe that a settlement is a possibility. True, Mr. Vassiliou and Mr. Dentkash may not yet have been able to achieve the understanding of each other's positions and the necessary compromises on the main issues that would allow the secretary-general's original 1 June 1989 target to be met. We believe that there has been genuine progress after so much effort, and we call upon both leaders to redouble their efforts and continue the talks after their next meeting with the secretary-general, which we understand is likely to be in late June. We believe that both sides are ready to continue talking, because they recognise that there is a great prize to be won by both their communities. We hope very much that they will be able to agree on a draft outline settlement before their next meeting with Mr. Perez de Cuellar, which is the task they are engaged on in the present phase of the talks.

We are often urged to do more to assist the efforts to reach a settlement. Understandably, my hon. Friend urged us not to hold back. We believe that we are doing as much as is practicable, but we are always open to suggestions on how we should do more. I do not think that my hon. Friend would expect me to reveal the nature and detail of the diplomatic contacts with the parties directly concerned and all those others who have an interest in the Cyprus problem. I assure the House that they are continuous and extensive. Our policy and actions are based on one essential principle: that the secretary-general's mission of good offices, which he pursues by mandate from the Security council, represents the best prospect for achieving a settlement. Everything that we do is done with his support and in a way that does not cut across his and Mr. Camilion's efforts.

Beyond that, the biggest single demonstration of our active involvement remains our participation in the United Nations force in Cyprus. Our contingent, all of whose costs we absorb, is the largest in the force. The Unficyp has played and continues to play, a vital role in providing a background of stability against which Mr. Perez de Cuellar can pursue his initiative. I pay tribute to the work of the often very young British soldiers in that force. The British contingent and our other contributions to Unficyp, on which we shall spend about £23 million this financial year, are a living rebuttal of the charge that we are losing interest or are not doing enough.

We see no advantage in an independent British initiative on Cyprus, which some urge us from time to time to take. This would do no more than cut across the secretary-general's efforts and would be counter productive. I am sure that the policy of giving full backing to the Security Council-endorsed policy is right. It offers the only prospect of putting our influence with all concerned to its best use.

I do not think that my hon. Friend was urging us to cut across the initiative if it still had momentum. He was asking what would happen if it failed. If the talks break down, we shall be in a different ball game. My hon. Friend would not expect me to lay out in detail the strategy that we would follow. Although we hope that this contingency will not arise—I have argued that there is still a momentum and we hope that the next crucial stage builds on it—our historical role would not be abandoned. We would have to think carefully about our next steps and how best to use our considerable influence and concerns. We would try to do that in close consultation with the secretary-general, to whose tact and patience I pay tribute. We would seek to be guided by him and the experience that he has gained. We would analyse the position. I assure my hon. Friend that we would not at that point lose interest in Cyprus nor would it fall on our list of priorities. It is a difficult but solvable problem.

I take up my hon. Friend's point about Turkish settlers in the north. As many hon. Members are aware, this is a complicated issue. We receive much correspondence about it. There is no agreement on the numbers involved—perhaps one would not expect there to be—or on who is a settler and who is not. Greek Cypriot sources quote the figure, which my hon. Friend used, of 65,000. Turkish Cypriot sources go as low as 15,000. Our guesstimate is somewhere in between, at about 35,000. Turkish Cypriots claim that the figure includes large numbers of people who have been granted what they call "Turkish Cypriot citizenship", and the children that they have borne since settling on the island.

It is not for me to say who is right and who is wrong in this numbers game. This is an issue of vital concern to both sides which must be resolved before a settlement is reached. There is no way, in our view, that an accommodation can be reached, except in the context of the overall negotiations. Many other issues are of equal concern to one side or the other—for example, for the Turkish Cypriots, the need to find ways to overcome practical difficulties in the way of implementation of the freedom of movement, settlement and property rights is equally important and pressing.

Hon. Members will agree that we must look forward to the day when harmony prevails again in Cyprus and the tragic division of the republic ends. When that day comes, we shall continue to have the closest possible relations with the island, to our mutual benefit. If that happy outcome is achieved, not a little thanks will be due to the many people in this country who have not lost interest in the future of Cyprus since independence. This is reflected partly by the large Cypriot community in Britain, but in addition there is a long-standing feeling of affection for, and solidarity with, the people of Cyprus. Important strategic and other interests are at stake. Cyprus is an island that perhaps many of us first viewed through the writings of Lawrence Durrell, who painted an affectionate picture of how the underlying bonds between Cypriots and Britain survived even the dark days of war between some groups and the British colonial power. Those bonds will not be broken. The British Government will continue to attach great importance to their Cypriot policy and, in doing so, will have the support of the expertise available on the Back Benches, not least that of my hon. Friend.

Patients (Medical Files)

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I am pleased to have the opportunity to raise the issue of the right of people to access to their medical records. The debate has been occasioned by the recent publication by the Department of Health "Communicating Information to Patients and their Access to their own Manual Health Records". The House will agree that it is an important subject, developments are moving quite fast and therefore it is important to spend some time rehearsing some of the arguments in public to inform and promote the process of consultation now in hand.

Two years ago I sought to create a statutory right of access to medical records when I introduced my private Member's Bill, the Access to Personal Files Bill. That Bill is now an Act, sadly in a greatly reduced form. It provides a right of access to housing and social work records, but medical records are excluded as a result of Government objection to creating a statutory right of access to medical records. At the time, the Government supported the principle of access and would seek to encourage it on a non-statutory basis through discussions with the medical profession, and the draft code of practice on access to records, which the Department published earlier this month, and which is now undergoing consultation, is the result of such discussions.

I welcome the draft code of practice. It is certainly a step in the right direction. However, my welcome is seriously qualified. A voluntary code of practice is a very poor alternative to legislation because it cannot be enforced. It allows doctors who do not like the idea of patients seeing what is said about them—and there are many—to opt out altogether. I fear that that is precisely what will happen on the implementation of the draft code of voluntary practice.

Let me explain why I seek a statutory right of access. I wholeheartedly agree with the preamble to the code which states that, normally, the best way of informing patients about their conditions and treatment is by full discussion. That must be right, sensible and proper. I am sure that, if it is handled well, proper discussion will satisfy most patients most of the time.

Those of us who advocate patient access as a matter of right do not regard it in any way as a substitute for a patient asking his GP questions in the normal way. But I believe that a statutory right of access would supplement that process, and perhaps compensate for some of the potential shortcomings. A statutory right of access would exist for a patient who wanted to be 100 per cent. in the picture, who wanted to know all the details and to understand them, rather than to rely unquestioningly on medical advice. A statutory right would exist when a doctor could not meet a patient's expectations because he might be too busy to spend enough time with a patient, or, alternatively, when a doctor was being over-protective and wrongly shielding a patient who wanted to know the full recorded facts.

I fully accept that some people do not want to know the truth, but in my experience others who do have no access to it at present. A statutory right of access would be available to patients who suspect—sometimes wrongly—that the truth is being withheld and who would be satisfied only by access to the written record. A statutory right of access would exist for people who felt that their conditions were not being taken seriously enough and who wanted to check that their full medical history was being recorded and contained no mistakes. Finally, a statutory right of access would help patients who believed that their treatment had gone wrong in some way and wanted to know what had happened.

For all those reasons, it is important that we allow a statutory right of access to medical records.

As I said earlier, I am pleased that the Government endorse the principle of patient access, but, given that they accept the principle, I find it difficult to understand why they object to a statutory codified form of legislation. I am amazed that we should still be so tentative about legislation. People now have a legal right to see their social work and housing records. We have been promised regulations on access to education records later this year, so why are medical records so different?

There are significant though inconsistent rights to medical records already. As I am sure the Minister knows, if medical records are held on computer, patients have access to them under the Data Protection Act 1984. An increasing number of general practitioners are computerising their surgery records, and those who belong to a practice which has a computer can check the records for accuracy, see the details of any test results and talk to their doctors from a more informed position. All those benefits are denied to those whose records are held on paper in manilla folders. In addition, since this January, patients have had the right, enforceable under law, to see reports which their general practitioner sends to an employer or an insurance company. That right is available to patients under the Access to Medical Reports Act 1988, which I introduced through the private Members' procedure last year. Therefore, precedents already exist for a statutory code of access.

Lest the House is worried about the unfettered nature of the proposal and the problems that may flow from legislation rather than a voluntary code, let me say that the legislation will not mean that access is absolute and completely unrestricted. The order introduced under the Data Protection Act 1984 contains entirely reasonable and proper exemptions and exceptions. For example, a doctor can withhold information which might cause serious harm to the patient. It is right and proper that a doctor should have such a legal let-out. Information about other family members or individuals can also, quite properly, be withheld. Information which identifies someone who has spoken to the doctor in confidence about the patient can also be withheld. A sophisticated framework of exemptions and exceptions already exists.

Legalising access will not mean that important concerns will be overlooked. It will make it clear that doctors cannot refuse access simply because they do not like the idea. The law does not, and should not, give way merely because doctors are accustomed to a paternalistic style of medicine and are not prepared fully to share information. If patients think that that is happening, they may go to court to enforce their rights. That approach was adopted under the Data Protection Act and the Access to Medical Reports Act, and I cannot understand why the Government are backing off here and implicitly endorsing an approach that will allow doctors who do not like the idea to ignore patients' requests for access to their medical records.

I agree that the system will work better if it is embraced by the profession in a positive spirit. The signs are not good that the code of practice will be so embraced. As the Minister knows, and as I said earlier, an agreed code was promised in April 1987 and has taken more than two years merely to see the light of day in draft form. Even now it apparently has only the profession's provisional support. I fear that rather than encouraging compliance in a positive spirit, a voluntary approach will lead to large scale opting out.

I have some specific comments to make on the draft code and should be obliged if the Minister would clarify those points which are still vague. First, as it stands, the draft code proposes to allow access only prospectively to what is recorded after it comes into force. I understand that there are good reasons for that.

The code contains a serious restriction. It seems that, under the draft code, patients will be unable to see everything recorded after the starting date, but will be limited to information about individual consultations or specific episodes of treatment. Someone who suspects that a mistake has been made in the records will be unable to go through them all to find it. Someone with a chronic illness or personal disability will be unable to review what has been written during a certain period, but will be allowed only small peeks at specific parts of their own medical records. Certainly no such restriction exists under the Data Protection Act, and there is no reason why it should possibly be justified here. I would be interested to hear the Minister's justification of it.

Secondly, in the draft code, health professionals are given much wider discretion to withhold information which they believe might harm the patient. As I said earlier, some exemptions and exceptions must be available to the health professionals so that they can protect patients when necessary.

Under both the Data Protection Act and the Access to Medical Records Act, the doctor must believe that there is a risk of serious harm to the patient's health before information can be withheld. The code of practice uses a different formulation. It says that information can be withheld where access would be likely to cause serious risk of harm. That is a simple but important difference. It means that if there is a real risk of minor harm, for example, of upsetting the patient, information can be withheld.

I hope that the Minister will be able to explain why the formulation used in previous legislation has been changed in that way because one argument of which the Department convinced me was that there is merit in having consistency throughout both the data protection legislation and the other Acts dealing with access to various personal files.

Thirdly, I notice that the code proposes that access will be permitted to allow patients "to better inform themselves about their health but for no other purpose".

What does that exclusion mean? Suppose someone is applying for a disability benefit and wants to support his or her case by citing extracts from the medical record. Will that be permitted under the code? Suppose a patient wanted to document a complaint to the Health Service ombudsman, to a family practitioner committee or to the General Medical Council about the way in which he has been dealt with. Are they to be denied access under the specific part of the code that I mentioned earlier? Is the object of the exclusion clause to restrict the access of people who believe that they may have been the victims of a medical accident? If so, again I wonder why. The Minister would help and inform the process of consultation if he could say a word about the background thinking on the exclusion clause.

The Government may think that I am being slightly churlish about this because, of course, a voluntary code is a step in the right direction. It gives the right signals—and I support that—but it does not give very much more than a signal to the medical profession. I know that the Government want to see progress, and I very much appreciated the help that I received from the Department and from the Minister's predecessor in putting the Access to Medical Records Act on the statute book. I understand that that was not an easy thing for the Government to do. However, if the Government accept that the principle of access is correct, the logical conclusion is to make access a right that cannot be avoided without good reason. That would require legislation as a basic framework for enshrining the rights. I believe that those rights will come sooner or later, and I believe that the time to introduce them is now because otherwise these voluntary regulations will merely create a medical backwater that will allow doctors who do not like the idea to resist disclosures in future.

As far as I am concerned, the regulations are now on probation. If the profession does not respond positively, I warn it fairly and squarely that it will face a continuing clamour for statutory action to be taken as a matter of urgency to provide patients with the legal rights to which they are entitled, but which they are currently being denied.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Roger Freeman): I congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on his success in the ballot and pay tribute to his intitiative in the past in this area and to his sustained interest in this subject, which we all respect.

Although I am a relative newcomer as a Health Minister, I have focused my mind on this subject recently thanks to the hon. Gentleman drawing my attention to it in a meeting that I had with him and other colleagues. It is an important subject and I assure him that I take it seriously, following through the commitments and promises made by my predecessor and other Government colleagues.

Although there has been no automatic right of access to manually stored medical records, the Department has always recognised that it is good practice for health professionals to be as open and informative with their patients as possible.

I fully accept that what we are talking about in this debate are manually stored records and not those on computers, which are already subject to the Data Protection Act 1984, and, indeed, medical reports which are subject to the legislation to which the hon. Gentleman referred. I would draw a distinction, as I am sure he would, between medical reports and medical records, by the very nature of the way in which they are prepared. Medical reports are specifically written for external consumption and are entirely different from the kind of medical records about which we are talking, which are very often hand-written and not put on computers. One of the regrets is that in the area of primary care we have not made perhaps the advance that we should have made in providing computer assistance to general practitioners—both the hardware and the software—to store data about patients.

I can confirm that the Department of Health will be taking an initiative in this area to accelerate the wider use of personal computers by general practitioners. Only about 50 per cent. of doctors have access to computers, which I believe can play a valuable role not in storing the complete medical records of patients, but in storing key data—for example, for call and recall systems for screening, for providing a profile that might be useful in setting indicative budgets, and for managing their practices.

While supporting a policy of openness, the Government have not inclined towards the need to legislate to provide access to medical records. Apart from the need to protect those patients who might be susceptible to harm from the information itself, the procedures to provide a statutory right of access, combined with appropriate safeguards to ensure that information about third parties is fully protected, would be complex.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire was a little illogical. He welcomed the new draft code of practice, which we are putting out to consultation and which we hope will be adopted and operational from the end of the year, but he also argued that it would not work and that we should move to a statutory system. I believe, because we need the co-operation of doctors, that it would be better to move to a system of voluntary practice and to see how that works. I accept that there may be problems and that the House will return to the problem of individual cases of access. The Government do not rule out legislation for all time. However, we are firmly saying that we want the co-operation of the medical profession and that the best way to proceed at present is by way of a voluntary code.

In recognising those impediments to statutory provision for patients' access to medical records, the Government also acknowledge the view of those representing the interests of patients, including many Members of this House and in another place, that the current arrangements fall short of public aspirations and even greater openness must be achieved, on a voluntary basis if possible. As I have said, many representations have been made that, if that does not work, it must be achieved ultimately by statute. However, we should first try the voluntary code.

Hon. Members may remember that during the passage of the Access to Personal Files Act in 1987, there was not insignificant pressure to include medical records within the provisions of the Act. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Waddington), then Minister of State for the Home Department, was able to give a clear undertaking that Health Ministers would enter a dialogue with the profession. At the Committee stage of the Access to Personal Files Bill, he stated:

"If more openness is what hon. Members on both sides of the Committee want, they should know that they are pushing at an open door. The Government and the profession are in favour. Therefore, I am willing to give an undertaking today on behalf of my colleagues with responsibilities for health that they will enter into talks . . . at an early stage with a view to achieving substantive and timely progress in opening up medical records further on a non-statutory basis."—[Official Report, Standing Committee C, 1 April 1987; c. 60.]

I believe that the Department has honoured that undertaking, and has sought the agreement of the medical profession to a statement and code of practice concerning access by patients to their medical records. In the course of discussion, representatives of the profession recognised the need to encourage the profession in good communication with patients. Nevertheless, they conveyed serious reservations about a code giving patients the right to see their records and the dangers if patients were to rely on their own interpretation of doctors' notes rather than on the professional advice of their medical practitioners.

These anxieties were discussed with the profession's representatives in March 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister of Trade and Industry, then Minister of State for Health, and my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health. My hon. Friends noted the points made by the profession and advised that its proposals for giving more information without conceding access to the records would be unlikely to satisfy public expectations or parliamentary demands. The Department of Health then accepted the profession's suggestion that discussions should continue further.

I can assure the House that, in continuing the discussions, we were and are mindful that positive progress must be made. For that reason, in my contribution to the debate on the Access to Personal Files (Social Services) Regulations 1989 on 7 February this year, I advised the House that discussions on a voluntary code of practice on access to medical records were proceeding and that, although agreement had not yet then been reached, substantive progress had been made.

As the hon. Gentleman knows—he intervened in that debate—I gave an assurance that, if progress could not be made in negotiations at the official level, I would personally intervene. That intervention was not necessary, because, I am glad to say, with the willing co-operation of the medical profession, we produced a draft code, and it has been placed in the Library of the House.

I announced also the Department's proposals to consult over a three-month period with interested parties. It is important that, having accepted the principle of access to patients' manual records, such access should not be confined solely to medical records compiled by doctors, but should encompass records compiled by other health professionals about their patients. We are talking about more than general practitioners. The code of practice will therefore refer to manual health records, and consultation will be extended to representative bodies of health professionals other than doctors. The hon. Gentleman has probably seen in the annex to the draft code a list of the health professionals as defined. It includes registered medical practitioners, registered dentists, registered opticians, registered pharmaceutical chemists, registered nurses, midwives, health visitors and so on. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman and the whole House would welcome that.

The draft code of practice is a commendable compromise between what I believe most hon. Members would like to be achieved in removing obstacles to patients having access to information recorded about them and the legitimate concerns by some of the medical profession's representatives for the implications of such a code for patient care.

I will now deal with the hon. Gentleman's four specific questions about the code of practice. It is a relatively brief document, which is out for consultation at the moment. The principle behind it is that it is the health professional's duty to inform patients about their condition.

Mr. Kirkwood: Of course.

Mr. Freeman: The hon. Gentleman says, "Of course." That will happen in most cases. It is a sensible way in which to proceed. The hon. Gentleman is concerned about the minority of cases in which that does not happen.

The code provides also that health professionals may judge that, normally, the most helpful way of informing patients about their condition and treatment and meeting their expectations is by full discussion. Health professionals may consider it necessary to show patients the information that is recorded about them. The hon. Gentleman and I would hope that that will happen in appropriate circumstances. However, the code states that those who remain dissatisfied must be allowed to see information recorded about them.

The hon. Gentleman's first question was about why that is prospective and not retrospective. General practitioners' manual records will be voluminous, extensive, make references to third parties, and may make unflattering remarks about a patients' lifestyle and whether advice has been taken. It is fair and sensible to operate the code of practice prospectively from the date on which it comes into force, which I hope to be by the end of the year. Then, the medical profession, whose co-operation we need on this subject, will be on proper notice that the information that they record at each consultation, after each diagnosis and after each hospital visit will be open to inspection. I believe that that is the fair, practical and proper way to proceed.

If the patient asks for access to his records his request must be in writing. The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire asked why there was not wider right of access not just to episodes in the patient's clinical history, but to information relating to a number of years. He wanted to know why a patient could not go to his doctor and say, "I want to see my medical records for the years when I lived in place X, spanning years Y and those covering a specific series of ailments from which I suffered". We require the co-operation of the medical profession and, therefore, we must put ourselves in the position of the GP. He is a busy man and under the new GP contract——

Mr. Kirkwood: He will be even busier.

Mr. Freeman: No, he will not be even busier. That will not be the result of the new contract that we have negotiated or the changes that will be introduced in two years' time as a result of the White Paper.

We appreciate that doctors seek to do their best for their patients in terms of health promotion and care. They are, and always have been, busy people. Therefore, I believe that it is reasonable and sensible that patients' requests for access to their records should be specific and should be in writing. Doctors, their secretaries and the practice managers do not have the time to search through a whole range of material to provide a precis or a photocopy of it. Initially requests should be episodic and specific—they should relate to a particular ailment at a particular time.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will accept that computer records are specific and they are normally presented in a clear chronological, sometimes abbreviated, format. It is much easier to gain access to computer data than manual records which might not be organised in a coherent or even a legible manner.

A health professional responding to a request for access may, at his or her discretion, let patients see what was recorded about them prior to the code of conduct coming into operation. That is permissive.

The hon. Gentleman is right to say that access may be modified by witholding such part or parts of information as would, in the judgment of the health professional responding to a request, be likely to cause serious risk of harm to the physical or mental health of the patient or another person. The hon. Gentleman asked why we specify "risk of harm" as opposed to simply "harm". I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for drawing my attention to that. When I read the draft code of practice I did not appreciate the difference between its language and precise legislative language. During the consultation procedure I shall inquire as to whether any significance is implied by the langage used. I am not aware of any significant difference, but the hon. Gentleman's remarks are on the record and they will serve as part of the process of consultation.

Access should also be modified by withholding such part or parts of the information as would identify another individual, other than a health professional acting in that capacity. I did not catch all the hon. Gentleman's remarks, but I assume that the hon. Gentleman was concerned about that modification. The exclusion clause is designed to protect another individual, a third party, other than a health professional, to whom reference might be made. It might be a member of the family, an employee or an employer. It is sensible that a patient demanding in writing access to information about a particular episode in his care, should not have the right to obtain information written by his or her doctor about another individual. That is sensible, equitable and fair.

Initial reaction to the draft code indicated a broad level of contentment with the proposals from some non-medical and patient interest groups. However, some have also registered reservations, like those which have been raised today. We intend the consultation exercise to be meaningful and my officials will consider most carefully any comments that are received. The medical profession will be advised directly about the outcome of the consultation exercise which I hope will be completed shortly and enable the code to be introduced before the end of this calendar year.

Eastbourne Water Company

1 pm

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): The Eastbourne Water Company is one of the 29 statutory companies which provide fresh water to almost a quarter of the people in England and Wales. One hundred and thirty years ago, when Eastbourne Water was incorporated by Act of Parliament, it had 5,000 customers. Today, the company serves nearly 220,000 domestic customers as well as industry for the whole of my constituency and for parts of the constituencies of my hon. Friends the Members for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith), for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone), and for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle). They have authorised me to say that I speak for them as for myself this afternoon.

In January this year, the Eastbourne Water Company increased its charges by 19·5 per cent. In February it was taken over by a French company called SAUR. In April, now French-owned, it put up its charges by a further 15·8 per cent. amounting to an increase over 15 months of 38·4 per cent. Quite rightly, those increases have caused dismay to my hon. Friends, to me and to our constituents. That was the second highest increase in the kingdom. Only the West Kent company, with a 42 per cent. increase, has a more shameful record. West Kent, like Eastbourne, has recently been acquired by SAUR.

In his statement of 27 February 1989 published in the annual report of the Eastbourne Water Company, the then chairman said:

"At least half of the January increase of 19·5 per cent. could be attributed to the Government's policy of privatisation."

On 3 May, my three hon. Friends and I had a meeting with some of the directors of the company. The meeting took place in a Committee Room. It would have been a fascinating experience for you, Madam Deputy Speaker, had you been able to join us. We listened with disbelief as the managing director of the company told us in the presence of one of the newly appointed French directors that no other member of the board agreed with the chairman's statement or with the chairman's refusal to accept the invitation from my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning to meet him in London. It was clear to me and my hon. Friends that the board, in their failure to stand up to the chairman, was composed of mice rather than men.

It was clear that the prospective privatisation of the water industry, bearing in mind in particular that the Eastbourne Water Company was already in the private sector, could have had nothing to do with the increase in the charges announced with effect from 1 January. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister wrote to me on 15 March stating:

"The increase he is proposing"— the increase of 19·5 per cent.—

"cannot be justified by privatisation or anything to do with it."

I am pleased to say that the new chairman, in a letter to the Minister dated 15 May, a copy of which he was kind enough to send to me, has offered to meet my hon. and learned Friend. I welcome that warmly. What I do not welcome is the decision of my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs not to refer these price increases to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. I wrote to my noble Friend Lord Young on 6 April. On 19 April he replied:

"You requested that the matter of the water charges increases should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Your request has received the most serious consideration but we do not propose to make such a reference. I understand the concern of your constituents, faced with a price rise of this order."

"The new pricing régime for the water industry introduced in the Water Bill does provide for the regulation of price increases. While these prohibitions will not have any retrospective effect, I understand that appropriate adjustments will be made to the price ceiling set initially by the Secretary of State where the price for this year cannot be justified."

I pause there to ask the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) whether he can reassure my three hon. Friends, me and our constituents that if, when my right hon. Friend reviews the charges that the Eastbourne Water Company will seek to levy with effect from 1 April 1990, he considers that the charges for this year are unreasonable he will require the Eastbourne Water Company to abate the charges for the next financial year. That is what was said by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs. I want to receive an identical assurance from my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East who is to reply to the debate.

Another aspect of my concern is the decision of my right hon. Friend, announced on 11 January, that there could be a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission only if the assets of a privately owned water company exceeded £30 million. I have before me the Official Report for 11 January. In answer to a question from me, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment said that

"at present three water companies are controlled by non-British companies."—[Official Report, 11 January 1989; Vol. 144, c. 847.]

Since 11 January the position has changed dramatically. There are now 12, or perhaps even more water companies that are controlled by non-British companies. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to tell us how many are controlled by those companies. In answer to a question by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 10 April my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning told the House that 12 of the statutory companies—that is getting on for half—were owned at that date by the French.

My right hon. Friend should reduce the figure of £30 million to £20 million. The asset value of the Eastbourne Water Company is approximately £20 million. It should have been possible for my right hon. Friend to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed takeover of that company by the French company SAUR, which now owns four of our statutory water companies —Eastbourne, Mid Southern, Mid Sussex and West Kent; West Kent being the company which had the largest increase in the whole of the United Kingdom, and Eastbourne being the company which had the second largest increase in the whole of the United Kingdom.

One aspect of the takeover has caused me concern. I have sent the Minister a copy of page 36 of the offer document that was sent out before acquisition of the Eastbourne Water Company by SAUR. There we read:

"Eastbourne Water employees' share club was established in 1987 to facilitate the acquisition of ordinary stock by Eastbourne's employees."

I want to make it absolutely clear that I am strongly in favour of extending the opportunities for home ownership. I believe deeply in the concept of worker shareholders. I approve of the policy whereby those who are employed by the Eastbourne Water Company or by other companies within and without my constituency, have an opportunity to become shareholders. I have always believed that, and I believe it strongly today.

What worries me is that, at the time of the takeover, there was an acquisition not by those whom one might think were employees but by the then managing director who is presently the chairman, of the company. I wrote on 17 May to the chairman, Mr. Hoskins, and this is the question I put to him:

"Am I correct in concluding from page 36 of the recommended offer that in March and April last year you bought for £8,000 ordinary stock from the Eastbourne Water employees' share club and that subsequently you sold that ordinary stock for £240,000?"

I sent copies of the letter to my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning and to my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, with both of whom I have been in correspondence about the Eastbourne Water Company for many months.

Mr. Charles Wardle (Bexhill and Battle): I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way. He has already referred to me and our hon. Friends the Members for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) and for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone), and we wholeheartedly support his vigorous representations on behalf of Eastbourne Water's customers.

Does my hon. Friend agree that it is reprehensible that, at the meeting on 3 May here in the Palace of Westminster, the managing director of Eastbourne Water told us that he was unable to contain this year's price increases, that he had been unable to persuade the late chairman to meet our hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning that he had been unable to prevent the late chairman from writing a chairman's statement for the annual report which was highly critical of Government policy and that he was unable to declare to us that he had bought and sold shares within a very short period of time? What are his customers to make of that? They have been saddled with a price increase of 38·4 per cent. I believe that they will discover that the new chairman, until recently the managing director, has dealt quickly in and out of the shares at a very considerable profit. Presumably he has no faith in the new controlling shareholders because he decided not to stay for the ride with his equity investment. What are customers to make of that?

Mr. Gow: The questions posed by my hon. Friend will be asked by some of the customers of Eastbourne Water Company.

My concern is that it was from a club, whose purpose was to offer opportunities for employees to become shareholders, that in March and April last year the then managing director bought the shares—£8,000 worth nominal of ordinary stock for which he paid £8,000—which he sold for £240,000 well under a year later.

Should there have been an opportunity for other employees to acquire shares? That is a matter about which I have already written to my hon. Friend the Minister. I have already read out to the House part of my letter dated 17 May and I want to read the reply dated 23 May, from the present chairman. It says:

"The figures in the offer document you quoted and your conclusions therefrom are correct."

I asked for a copy of the trust deed which set up the club, but no copy has been forthcoming. The chairman wrote to me saying:

"The share club was set up at short notice."

We are told in the offer document that it was set up in 1987. He went on to say that it was set up

"along the lines of an existing club in another water company. I am informed that the declaration of trust was still at the stage of a draft prepared by counsel for the trustees at the time the bid was made."

If the club was set up in 1987 and the bid was made in 1989, it took a long time to draft the document.

The letter went on:

"The next meeting of the trustees is expected to be an annual general meeting at which it is most likely a resolution will be proposed to wind up the club."

I have asked for a copy of the rules of the club and when I receive them, I shall send them to my hon. Friend the Minister.

When I arrived at the Department of the Environment in June 1985 I did not realise that, in addition to being the Minister responsible for housing, I would also be responsible for water. Since that time—I spent nearly two and a half years in my hon. Friend the Minister's office—I have retained a deep and concerned interest in the well-being of the water industry. Over the 15 years in which I have had the privilege to represent Eastbourne I have had a happy relationship with Eastbourne Water Company. It is a matter of deep regret that since January this year the trust that I used to have in the company has been eroded.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): It is with some trepidation that I rise to respond to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) for today he is sporting his MCC tie. He has bowled a consistently difficult and tight line to my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department of Trade and Industry as well as my Department. I congratulate him and the England team on their winning streak. I shall try to keep the Government's wicket standing to the best of my ability.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne has dwelt in some detail on the increase in the charges imposed this year by Eastbourne Water Company and the circumstances of the takeover of that company. I shall discuss the increase in charges imposed this year by water companies in general and Eastbourne in particular. My hon. Friend asked whether the two price increases by the company earlier this year—20 per cent. from 1 January 1989 and a further 15·8 per cent. from 1 April—should have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Two forms of reference can be made in such cases: first, a reference under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 but that covers efficiency, not prices; and, secondly a reference under section 51 of the Fair Trading Act 1973, which normally takes much time. Any recommendation would not have been retrospective and could not have been implemented before the operation of price control under the Water Bill. We did not rule out the possibility of reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, but we believed that it was in everyone's interests for the issue to be sorted out as quickly as possible, and we sought to do so by voluntary means.

I should explain why Eastbourne Water Company was granted powers in December 1988 to fix a rate poundage for a three-month period, with the effect that consumers had two charge increases within a short time. As one of the 29 private water companies, Eastbourne is subject to statutory controls on many of its financial limits, which include controls on the amount of capital that it may hold, its rates of dividend and interest and the amount that it can put in reserves. They constitute an indirect control on charge increases because income that is surplus to the authorised limits must be used to reduce charges. At present, there is no direct control on the level of charges. The restrictions meant that Eastbourne could not move to a charging year beginning on 1 April without first obtaining the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

There were sound reasons in favour of such a move, including the desirability of bringing the company's charging year into line with the majority of companies under the new regime of direct controls on charges. The Secretary of State gave his consent last December for the company to levy a three-month rate for this purpose. It raised a three-month rate from January 1989 and a 12-month rate from April. Due to the nature of the current controls, the maximum amount that the company could raise for the 15-month period from January 1989 to March 1990 was fixed. The company was unable, therefore, to raise additional money from customers by setting two rates for the period.

On 5 February, the Water Companies Association announced in a press release that its members were likely to raise their charges by 30 per cent. or more. In some quarters, increases as high as 50 per cent. or more were anticipated. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning wrote on 7 February to each water company chairman, inviting those proposing increases of more than 10 per cent. to see him and to make the relevant financal information available to his consultants, Deloitte Haskins and Sells. Most of the chairmen responded to that invitation. As my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne has made clear, Eastbourne's chairman's response was different from that of the other chairmen.

My hon. and learned Friend was able to report the results of the discussions that he held to the House on 14 March in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel). At that time, the average increase in all water company charges was estimated to be about 22 per cent. A later estimate of 23 per cent., based on more complete information, was given in a letter to my hon. Friend. I should emphasise that both figures related to the generality of water company charges, not those faced by domestic consumers paying on a rateable value basis—commonly called the water rate. The latter figures are being collated and will be reported to the House in due course.

My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning has, on several occasions, made clear his anxiety about the scale of increases. He was able to report to the House on 14 March that, as a result of his discussions with chairmen, the average increase in charges had been reduced by 5 per cent., which is equivalent to £16 million in water charges. His consultants' investigations were carried out with the full and voluntary co-operation of each company. Not all the companies accepted the report that the consultants made to the Department of the Environment. Water companies are independent statutory companies and, provided the charges that they propose are within their vires, the final decision lies with the board of each company. My hon. and learned Friend is unable to agree or disagree with companies' charges under the present legislation.

The Water Bill provides for a price control to be set, in the first instance by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and subsequently by the Director General of Water Services. In setting that control, account must be taken of the spending needs of each appointed undertaker, whether they are statutory water companies or successor companies to the water authorities, which we intend to privatise later this year. Those spending needs over the next 10 years or so are the subject of a far more detailed scrutiny than the exercise earlier this year, to which I have referred.

Each undertaker is required to submit detailed financial projections, supported by engineering studies, to show what is needed to enable undertakers to meet the standards of service that the law requires and the companies expect. I said, "what is needed"—the price control will take account only of what an efficient company needs to spend and will incorporate targets for efficiency savings which will take account of differences in achievements.

With regard to Eastbourne's charges, the company co-operated in the review of this year's increases and in providing information on its future spending needs to enable the price control to be set. However, the late chairman of that company fiercely maintained his independence under the existing statutes and declined all offers to meet my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning to discuss the increases. I regret that, but I must remind the House that he was perfectly within his rights so to do.

As to the consultants' report, the company has informed its consumers that Deloitte, Haskins and Sells has agreed that the operating costs in its budgets were reasonable. Without going into the detail of that report, which must remain confidential to the company and the Government, I can say only that the company's statement is correct. That does not mean that every aspect of this year's increase by Eastbourne, or by any other company, was fully justified. I can reassure the House, as my hon. and learned Friend has already done, that before the price control is set, a much more searching financial and engineering scrutiny will be carried out. That work began several months ago and has yet to be completed, whereas the investigation into this year's increases was undertaken in days. Every undertaker will be examined with equal vigour, irrespective of the size of this year's increases.

To respond specifically to the first of the questions put by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne, if, when setting K with effect from 1 April 1990 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State considers charges for this year to be unreasonably high—for example, for the reasons outlined by my hon. Friend—charges could be abated. That is certainly a possibility and an important consideration for my right hon. Friend. To be precise, Eastbourne's charges in 1990 will not necessarily be lower if its current charges are too high, but the K charges ceiling would be lower in that circumstance.

The possibility of insider dealing in relation to the securities of the Eastbourne water company was brought to the attention of my right hon. Friend some time ago. The information then available was not considered to be sufficient on which to base a decision whether to investigate under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986. Accordingly, as is the practice in such circumstances, officials asked the stock exchange to make some preliminary inquiries. I assure my hon. Friends the Members for Eastbourne and for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) that such matters are treated seriously, but I cannot undertake to reveal whether any further investigation is being or is to be made. That is because, in the interests of efficiency and justice, our policy is that investigations of possible insider dealing should normally be kept confidential. However, I believe, on hearing my hon. Friends' contributions, that it is important that their contributions to the debate on this specific point are brought to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and I will ensure that that is done.

On the merger policy and Eastbourne, it is often remarked, and is certainly not disputed by the Government, that the supply of water and sewerage services is a local monopoly and that the incentives of product competition, which usually work to improve efficiency and standards of service to the customer, cannot apply to privatised water companies.

Under our proposals in the Water Bill it will be for the Director-General of Water Services to monitor and protect the standard of services to customers and to ensure that essential infrastructure is maintained, and, bearing in mind the relative performance of companies in the industry to make periodic reviews of the K settings. If the director-general is to have a proper spread of comparative competition, there clearly needs to be an adequate number of independently owned and managed companies in the industry. Our special mergers policy is designed to safeguard that comparative competition. The £30 million asset test applies in existing merger legislation and, applied to the water industry, I am confident that it will ensure that there is an adequate number of companies for comparison. There is no merit in protecting every single company so that the entire structure is preserved like a prehistoric mammoth trapped in ice. That would simply remove the incentive to better management performance that private sector disciplines, including the possibility of takeover, will bring.

I hope that in a very brief response I have managed to cover some of the points raised by my hon. Friends. I am most grateful to them for bringing these issues to the attention of the House.

African Elephants

1.30 pm

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): The Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, who is just approaching the Dispatch Box, is making quite a name for herself. I have just returned from having another look at the Roman baths at Huggin hill about which she was able to make a halfway decent announcement. The Roman baths are to be preserved, but unfortunately we will not have access to them. She has also done some good work in regard to the Rose theatre. While she is catching her breath, I should tell her that I have a few other campaigns that she might care to join me in pursuing—the preservation of county hall, the restoration of city-wide local government in London—if she sticks with me I shall make her famous.

Today, the Minister has the chance to cover herself in more glory by taking the political initiative to help to save the African elephant by imposing an immediate ban on all raw and worked ivory being imported into the United Kingdom. The plight of the African elephant is one of impending catastrophe. I have been campaigning on the matter for the past five years, and during that time perhaps as many as 500,000 elephants have been slaughtered in Africa.

I am grateful for the recent upsurge of public and political concern, and I should like to place on record the thanks of the entire House to the television companies, newspapers and organisations which have helped to generate the great tide of feeling which is sweeping across Europe in defence of those beautiful and gentle creatures, the elephants. The Worldwide Fund for Nature recently announced that it received about 20,000 letters and calls in one week in support of a ban and in protest against the slaughter of elephants.

The centre of the problem is the massacre of those beautiful creatures for their ivory. The truly criminal element is the illegal slaughter, but the legal culling is little better. In 1970 it was estimated that there were about 2·3 million elephants in Africa. In 1979 the number had dropped to about 1·3 million—the figures are very approximate. Today it is estimated that about 750,000 elephants remain in Africa, but a reply I received recently from the Minister for Overseas Development suggested that some estimates are as low as between 300,000 and 400,000. No one knows the exact number, but it is certain that the elephant is under threat. At the present rate of slaughter, which is running at an estimated 80,000 to 100,000 a year, by the year 2000 the African elephant will be all but extinct.

The methods used by poachers to obtain ivory turns even the strongest stomach. They use machine guns, rockets, mortars and poison to kill the animals and then they use chainsaws to cut off their heads. Sometimes elephants are mortally wounded but not yet dead. When I was in Washington recently, the international organisation Monitor told me about an incident that took place 11 years ago which is typical of what happened in the past. Thousands of elephants died in just one area of Zaire in 1978 after being poisoned. The mass killing took place in a vast forest west of Kisengani, in north-east Zaire. While the death toll was staggering for the elephants, it was virtually complete for all other animals over hundreds of square miles. The mass poisoning occurred in April and May of 1978.

According to a source in Kisengani, corrupt Government officials diverted 20 metric tons of pesticide that was to have been used for spraying the coffee plantations in the province. The highly toxic poison was delivered to gangs of poachers who went into the thick forests where large numbers of elephants still roamed. The pesticide was poured into the waterholes in the marshy areas where the elephants come to drink. Within days thousands of elephants were poisoned. It took up to a week for them to die. The sickened beasts staggered through the forest in agony. The poachers eager to get the ivory first frequently hastened death by running up to the weakened elephants from the rear and disembowelling them with machetes.

Witnesses say that hundreds of tusks poured into the town of Ngazi, which is at the end of the road from Kisengani. Each week during the poisoning massacre this was happening. Many of the tusks were just eight inches long, indicating that baby elephants died in large numbers. Nobody knows how many elephants died in those two months because many, if not most, probably died deep in the forest and were never found. That still goes on, but there are fewer elephants to persecute in such a way.

There are corrupt Governments and officials in Africa who have made millions out of the illegal ivory trade. African wars are in part, still being financed by the trade in elephant ivory, rhinoceros horns and other endangered species. Terrorist organisations, such as UNITA in Angola and RENAMO in Mozambique, are openly slaughtering elephants and processing the ivory through South Africa, Swaziland and other African countries. Dr. Jonas Savimbi, the leader of UNITA presented to President P. W. Botha an exact replica of an AK47 assault rifle, intricately carved in ivory—how obscene, but how typical since so many elephants had been killed by UNITA terrorists using AK47 rifles.

I welcome the Government's announcement of their intention to go for a ban on new ivory, first at the EC Environment Ministers meeting on 8 June in Luxembourg, and in October at the meeting of the convention on international trade in endangered species CITES, the so-called regulatory body on trade in ivory. However, that may be too little too late.

The laxity in applying existing CITES regulations to new ivory makes such a ban, if we are able to achieve it, close to unenforceable. Even if we achieve an agreement at CITES in October, the ban will not come into force until mid-January 1990. Dealers will stockpile, and at the present rate of slaughter another 40,000 to 50,000 elephants will die and there will be an enormous upsurge in poaching. We need a ban on all ivory, and we need it now.

The Government are wonderfully placed to give a lead to the world because Britain is crucial to the ivory trade. First, we are a major staging post in world ivory trade, including that which is traded illegally. The Department of the Environment, in consultation with CITES, has given retrospective clearance to ivory arriving in this country without valid documentation. There are cargoes at Heathrow and Gatwick airports which I claim on good authority began as illegal ivory. I am not satisfied that the Minister is being given the best and most impartial advice by CITES or her own departmental officials. I shall return to that theme on another occasion.

The Minister says that her Department checks on all ivory, but much of the so-called legal ivory starts off as illegal ivory. It is laundered through corrupt African Governments and officials. The way in which statistics on ivory are kept in this country is wholly unsatisfactory. I have just received a reply from the Department of Trade and Industry. I asked how much raw ivory, by weight and value, had gone through this country since 1979. The DTI's answer was:

"In 1988, imports of raw ivory were recorded as 12·1 metric tonnes. Information prior to 1988 is not available."

However, when I asked the DTI what was happening in Hong Kong, it was able to give me a run of figures back to 1984. How come I can get figures about what goes on in Hong Kong, but not about the trade in ivory in this country? Something must be done about that.

The figures which have emerged from Hong Kong show that Hong Kong has been importing raw ivory from a range of countries. I shall not give them all, but I notice that Somalia and the Ivory Coast are included. Yet in the reply to another question I also noticed that Somalia and the Ivory Coast appear among the 19 African countries where the EEC considers that the elephant population is incapable of sustaining commercial exploitation. How come? If we are told by the EEC that those countries do not have elephant populations sufficient to sustain trade in ivory, how come Hong Kong, for which we are responsible, is still accepting ivory into its shores?

The position of Hong Kong is absolutely crucial in all this because Hong Kong deals in more ivory than probably any other country, with perhaps between 50 and 75 per cent. of world trade. Indeed, 95 per cent. of the ivory entering Hong Kong is raw and comes from Japan, China, Taiwan and India among other places. If the ivory is carved, it goes to Japan, the United States of America and the EEC countries. Therefore, Hong Kong, with which we have close links, is very much at the centre. Belgian and French dealers are active in Hong Kong and a lot of ivory now comes from Francophone Africa, which is emerging as a major supplier. We in this country and therefore in this House have jurisdiction over Hong Kong until 1997. We must close down the ivory trade in Hong Kong.

One of the great obstacles that the Minister will face in attempting to secure an appendix I listing of the African elephant by CITES in October will be if any of the major trading countries enters a reservation. I want an assurance from the Minister that the United Kingdom will not on behalf of Hong Kong, enter a reservation. If we can get Hong Kong into line, we might just get the Japanese to follow suit. On this occasion, words fail me when I try to describe the Japanese role not only in the ivory trade but also in relation to whales. That country is venal. The British public should boycott Japanese goods until the Japanese stop decimating the world's animal resources in their typically wasteful and selfish manner.

I repeat my demands about the African elephants on behalf of all hon. Members and a growing tide of public opinion in this country and around the world. First, we should have a total and immediate ban on all trade in raw and worked ivory in the United Kingdom as a prelude to a worldwide ban. Secondly, there should be a similar and immediate ban in Hong Kong.

Thirdly, there must be an investigation into the money received by CITES from ivory dealers and an investigation into the activities of CITES and into the Minister's own Department, the Department of the Environment, in inviting retrospective clearance to cargoes of illegal ivory in the United Kingdom. If the international regulatory body CITES, is receiving money from ivory dealers, the impartiality and objectivity of that body must obviously be questioned. I want the Minister to look into that carefully.

Fourthly, we need a programme of assistance to those African countries such as Kenya, Tanzania, Zambia and Mozambique which are desperately trying, against overwhelming odds in certain cases because of the activities of poachers, to protect their remaining elephant herds.

Obviously it is not the Minister's responsibility. She is responsible for the Department of the Environment, but she can talk to her right hon. and hon. Friends in the Foreign Office, and especially in the Ministry of Overseas Development, to ensure that those countries that request our assistance are given it. They need helicopters and Land-Rovers. I do not see why they cannot have British troops if they so request them. I should be quite happy to see the Special Air Service become involved in tracking down poachers. That would be a useful line of activity for it to engage in. It would certainly gain the support of the Opposition.

We in this country have done too little for too long to protect African elephants, but we cannot do too much now if we are to save the elephants from extinction. I do not normally make claims such as this because Members of Parliament who say, "I speak on behalf of the people of this country" are usually pompous fools, but on this occasion I cannot have that accusation levelled against me because the people of this country would welcome a dramatic political initiative from Her Majesty's Government. Opposition Members would certainly welcome it, and I am sure that Conservative Members would do so, too. The African elephant desperately needs it. It would be a crime against the world if the African elephant was slaughtered out of existence. I urge the Minister and the Government to act now.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I am sorry that I missed part of the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks). As usual, he was a little ahead of me. I want to endorse and fully support everything that he has said. It is awful that we, as a wealthy country in the west, along with others, have for too long allowed the importation of ivory when we know full well that it has come from smugglers and the illegal killing of elephants. The importation of ivory through Hong Kong is also a serious problem.

I hope that when the Minister replies she will be very robust in defence of the world's wildlife and will give us a commitment that the Government will do all that they can —including providing the money, and the resources, which were mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West, to those countries which are striving to uphold the elephant population and to preserve that wildlife. I hope that the Minister will show the people in this country that there is something quite awful about the fact that, despite the alleged progress in the world. every day a species dies out—every day a plant species is eradicated for ever. Yet we call a growth in civilisation the promotion of higher living standards. We need to understand that we cannot continue destroying one species after another at the present rate and expect to carry on living ourselves.

I believe that the understanding that my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West and others have shown for the African elephant is an example of the growing understanding that we must work with the world's natural systems and ecosystems rather than destroying and working against them, as the evil poachers and illegal dealers in the ivory trade are doing. What my hon. Friend has said has the overwhelming support of the people of this country and, indeed, of people from all over the world. For many the plight of the African elephant has become a symbol of the plight of the world's wildlife in the same way as the panda was the symbol of the World Wildlife Fund when it was established 30 years ago.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Virginia Bottomley): Frankly, we are all agreed that the plight of the African elephant is extremely serious and that it is a creature that we all hold most dear. I was trying to identify what it is about the elephant that is so loveable, so endearing and makes us all respond so warmly and strongly to the present situation. I was reading the other day that it is

"their grandeur, their gentleness, their intelligence, even their humour."

It was said that there is a strange affinity between the life cycle of the elephant

"their family affection and loyalties, their mutual aid, even the respect they show to their dead closely resemble the better aspects of human behaviour."

It appears to lack the more unacceptable aspects of human behaviour, but shares-many of the more acceptable ones.

I especially endorse the remarks about the Worldwide Fund for Nature. It is a privilege to have the headquarters of that organisation in my constituency. I have worked closely with it on a number of subjects. I especially pay tribute to its work in protecting the African elephant. It has worked over the years with the European Community and, indeed, in partnership with the Overseas Development Administration, on a number of practical subjects, which, as the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) rightly said, is part of the secret of protecting the species. I want especially to pay tribute to David Shepherd, the wildlife artist and author, who has worked on behalf of the African elephant. He has specialist knowledge and he has made an evocative and powerful case on its behalf.

In recent weeks and months the hon. Member for Newham, North-West has raised a number of topics on which I hope I have been able to offer some encouragement and assistance on behalf of the Government. There is no doubt that in the area of animal welfare and the protection of wildlife the hon. Gentleman has a long-standing reputation of identifying areas that need particular attention.

We are all united in our concern about the plight of the African elephant. We are fully committed to the protection of all endangered species and have demonstrated that commitment through our active participation in the implementation of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora—CITES.

We were one of the original signatories to the convention in 1973. It entered into force in July 1975 and since that time the United Kingdom has played its part in strengthening CITES controls, bringing more species under its protection and encouraging other countries to accede to it.

For example, at the 6th conference of the parties to CITES in 1987, the United Kingdom was successful in securing the conference's agreement to the inclusion, under CITES, of 20 species of bustards, nine species of butterfly, and the medicinal leech. I am pleased to say that another species of butterfly was transferred from appendix II to appendix I. Over 400 species of flora and fauna are listed in appendix I alone, including the Indian elephant, several species of dolphin, the rhinoceros, the alligator, and orchid.

We have fulfilled our role by attendance at the biennial conference of the parties, the meetings of the standing committee and the important African elephant working group, which was set up to consider ways in which to improve the protection of this species. The next meeting of the group will take place in Botswana in July.

Within the European Community we attend the regular EC CITES committee meetings, and we played a key part in initiating a review of the implementation of the EC regulations, which apply CITES throughout the Community. In the light of that review, the regulations will be revised to clarify and tighten existing controls.

We work in close co-operation, of course, with our scientific advisers, the Nature Conservancy Council and the royal botanic gardens at Kew. Both organisations have justly deserved reputations in the conservation world, and we frequently call on their expertise. We have regular meetings with them, usually prior to EC meetings. Our scientific advisers attend the EC CITES scientific working group, which advises the EC CITES committee on the scientific aspects of its work.

The Government have become increasingly concerned about the reported decline in the number of African elephants, and it is important to view it within the working of CITES. As the hon. Gentleman said, figures are notoriously difficult to rely on, but it seems that there are fewer than 700,000 African elephants remaining, and many estimates are between 300,000 and 400,000. We have been actively involved in promoting the survival of the African elephant, through strengthening controls on imports and exports of ivory and through aid to those African producer countries seeking to protect their elephant populations. The African elephant has been listed on appendix II of the convention since 1977. Under the terms of the convention, trade in ivory may take place only if certain strict criteria are met.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mrs. Bottomley: I will not give way. I have little time left. The hon. Gentleman has already spoken, and I should like to deal properly with the subject.

In 1985, CITES parties recognised the increasing threat to the African elephant, and the United Kingdom was instrumental in introducing stricter controls on trade in ivory. They included the quota system and the establishment of the Ivory Trade Monitoring Unit, which is based in Lausanne at the CITES secretariat and to which the United Kingdom annually contributes £5,000. Under the system, most producer countries set quotas agreed by CITES for the export of raw ivory. The ivory is appropriately marked, and exports beyond the quota or of unmarked raw ivory have to be checked with the secretariat in Lausanne to ensure that the export is within the agreed quota and that the documentation is in order.

We in Europe, however, considered that that was not enough. The EC CITES regulations set a higher standard of protection than that of the convention for many species, including the African elephant. For example, the convention requires import permits only in the case of appendix I species; under the EC regulations, import documents are required for all species covered by the CITES appendices. The EC regulations also prohibit several commercial activities, such as sale, in respect of the most endangered species. For the African elephant and certain other species, import permits may be issued only when the import will not have a harmful effect on the conservation of the species or on the population of the species in the country of origin.

In May 1988, the Community agreed to ban the commercial import of ivory from 18 African countries, and it has recently increased it to 19. We have also supported an additional tightening of controls with the Community.

Despite those extra controls, we are conscious of concern about their effectiveness. We are, for example, aware of concern—also expressed by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West—about the control of the ivory trade in Hong Kong. In most matters the Hong Kong Government exercise a high degree of autonomy. That includes trade in endangered species, and they apply CITES controls through their own specific legislation. In view of the transfer of sovereignty in 1997, we are understandably keen to encourage this autonomy. We have been in touch with the Hong Kong authorities about the Government's decision to support a ban on trade in new ivory and the reasons for it. The Hong Kong Government have informed us that they are considering their own position on the issue.

Hong Kong has strictly adhered to all of the conservation and enforcement measures called for by CITES and recently has strengthened its controls on the import of worked ivory. The only ivory which may legally be imported into Hong Kong at present is that which comes from a CITES-approved source and is subject to the issue of a licence.

Mr. Tony Banks: If it is a matter of entering a reservation to CITES at the meeting in October, can Hong Kong enter a reservation on its own or are we the signatories on behalf of Hong Kong to CITES? Therefore, should any such reservation be entered through us?

Mrs. Bottomley: I understand that we are the parties to CITES. We have had discussions with Hong Kong and I can tell the hon. Gentleman of many of the steps taken by the Government to tighten their control over the ivory trade. I understand that in Hong Kong all applications are handled with extreme care to ensure that only legal ivory is exported or imported. On arrival, shipments are physically checked by staff of the Agriculture and Fisheries

Department to ensure that they are accompanied by the necessary CITES documents. The ivory itself is inspected to ensure that it matches with the numbers, weight and markings. In any case of doubt, the consignment is detained pending investigation or clarification with the CITES secretariat.

We have also made representations to the Government of the United Arab Emirates, to encourage them to tighten controls on the ivory trade which passes through their country.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West has criticised the licensing system in the United Kingdom, particularly in respect of two recent cases concerning ivory. It is not possible to go into the full detail of the cases because such matters are dealt with confidentially, but I assure the House that we strictly implement all CITES controls and those of EC regulation 3626/82. We do not allow the import or export of raw ivory which has not first been approved by the CITES secretariat. The Department of the Environment, acting as the managing authority under CITES, takes these obligations extremely seriously and exercises them rigorously. It applies great care to each case.

When the consignment to which the hon. Gentleman referred arrived in this country, we were concerned because the documentation and the markings on the tusks did not accord with the requirement of the ivory trade control unit. We consulted the unit which in turn consulted the management authority of Zaire. We were advised that the ivory was legal and we were given revised tusk numbers. An official of the Zairean embassy re-marked the tusks, observed, I hasten to add, by representatives of the Customs and Excise and of the Department of the Environment. The official working on behalf of the Department of the Environment behaved with absolute propriety and with great care throughout the proceedings.

Mr. Tony Banks: What about the Zairean Government?

Mrs. Bottomley: If the hon. Gentleman wishes to comment about the behaviour of any other parties to this matter, it is for him to make representations to them.

The Department of the Environment is thoroughly committed to the workings of the arrangements and to the preservation of wild life in general.

The hon. Gentleman stated that the secretariat receives funding from ivory traders. That is in line with the wishes of the conference of the parties. At the sixth conference a resolution was passed urging trader groups, among others, to contribute to the secretariat.

The legitimate traders have been as keen as we are to see the illegal trade stamped out. They have made a valuable contribution to the secretariat's work. Through those contributions, the secretariat has been able to function more effectively. We have no evidence of corruption. Indeed, I am sure that the international community as a whole would join our rebuttal of any suggestion of corruption within the secretariat. It performs a difficult and arduous task and it relies a great deal on the professional dedication of its staff.

The secretariat has already done much to assist the plight of endangered species and without it their plight would be much worse than it is today. I can assure the hon. Member for Newham, North-West that we will be urging the European Community to take action together to ban the import of raw ivory prior to the decisions of the CITES meeting. Furthermore, when we go to CITES, we will make representations to the effect that, rather than wait the normal 90 days for the resolution to take effect, we should act immediately to preserve and protect the African elephant.

I hope that the hon. Member for Newham, North-West will be encouraged in the belief that the Government, through their commitment to help the African elephant, are prepared with our partners to take all further steps that are necessary to ensure that this noblest of animals continues to play a part in our world heritage for future generations.

Rate Support Grant (Basildon)

2 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): There is nothing quite so stimulating as addressing a full House. Obviously this is such an occasion this afternoon. I am proud to represent Basildon, which I believe is the finest town in the country. I am proud of our many achievements, but I am certainly not proud about what I have next to tell the House—indeed, I am absolutely disgusted about it. Socialist-controlled Basildon district council has just imposed on its ratepayers the largest rate increase in the country of 57·2 per cent. People are rightly outraged about that and those who have been party to such irresponsibility should be thoroughly ashamed of themselves.

I want to take this opportunity to put the record straight about who is to blame for this absolutely shocking state of affairs, as many lies have been spread throughout the constituency on this subject. The rate increase has nothing to do with the provision of essential services; it has much more to do with the enhancement of leisure facilities. Socialists under their different labels are entirely to blame for the massive rate increase through their irresponsible fiscal mismanagement which I will describe.

Constituents have asked me why Basildon's rates were not capped this year. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister, when she replies, will confirm that, through creative accountancy and by drawing upon its reserves, the council failed to meet the Department's criteria.

In previous years Basildon's rates were capped. There was obvious disappointment that they were not included in the capping procedure this year. I made my maiden speech on the Rates Bill and I expressed my wish then that the present system of rates should be replaced by the community charge. I am delighted that the present unfair rates system will be replaced by the community charge next year. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will make it clear that, where taxpayers' money is spent, the local council should be called to account for its fiscal management.

At the moment, all sorts of leaflets and news items are being spread locally conveying to ratepayers what the level of community charge will be. Somehow the myth is being spread that the level of community charge is entirely the Government's responsibility,. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take the opportunity today to put that right.

I also believe that no one in future should be able to pass the buck and blame others for the level of community charge. I strongly believe that the community charge is good news for Basildon. It is certainly good news for the country at large. It will spread the burden of the cost of local services much more widely. Only a minority of people bear the cost of those services at the moment.

During the last year, Basildon council has been described as a hung council. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) has some experience of that. Throughout the past year the casting vote has been held by the chairman of the council, but in reality what happened has been farcical. A Liberal councillor suddenly announced that in future he would sit as an independent. In practice, this so-called independent councillor voted with the Labour members of the district council on every conceivable occasion. The Labour district council did not have the guts to take responsibility for its actions, so—surprise, surprise—after the local elections in May this so-called independent announced that he was going to join the Labour party. However, I have just been advised that not all the Labour councillors are aware of the fact that he has been allowed to join the Labour party. The suggestion, therefore, must be: watch this space.

The council's behaviour has been quite extraordinary. Despite all that has happened, at its first meeting the council went on a massive spending spree. I voted to increase members' allowances, something which the Conservative group on the council has long opposed. The meeting was not held in the council chamber, which was available. Instead, it was held in the Olivier room of the new Towngate theatre, thus involving even more expense.

There is no doubt in my mind that the cost of building and maintaining the new Towngate theatre is a significant reason for Basildon district council having imposed the largest rates increase in the country—57·2 per cent. The old Towngate theatre was razed to the ground. In its place we have the most expensive municipal theatre in the country. It cost £8·5 million. Of course, we did not have the money to build the theatre. As we could not afford to build it, the money had to be borrowed. A private company has been set up to manage the theatre. Its board consists of councillors and other interested parties.

The stark reality of the enterprise is that even if every seat were occupied on every day of the year, we would still lose money. As that reality dawns on our community, many questions are rightly being asked. Who is responsible for having embarked on such a financially stupid scheme in the first place? Who was responsible for designing the theatre? Who approved the final plans? Who gave the advice which, presumably, councillors saw fit to take at the inception of the scheme? Who has been responsible for managing the theatre's affairs from the day that it opened? The Towngate theatre has so far received about £1·5 million in support for the current year, £900,000 of which relates to repayment of the debt charge.

The Labour group did not incorporate a council chamber in the new town hall. It believes that a council chamber is dead space for most of the time, so in future full council meetings are to be held in the theatre's Mirren studio. I believe that all hon. Members will be shocked to hear that in future council meetings in Basildon will be held in the theatre. I believe that that is a gross insult to the democratic process which we all support, and that Basildon will become a municipal laughing stock.

Local people will never forget the brutal way in which the old Towngate theatre was razed to the ground. It was part of the Basildon culture. The local community was attached to the old building. I do not think that the staff's feelings were considered. Many local residents find it patronising and insulting that it is suggested that, with the advent of the new theatre, culture and sophistication have been brought to Basildon. We find that deeply offensive. I can think of nothing that is less in keeping with this new development than the awful banner which has been displayed across the £8·5 million building and the dirty old caravan which looks as though it has been abandoned outside the main entrance.

All manner of questions should be asked. Those who have been responsible for what has happened should be brought to account. Nobody should be allowed to walk away from the issue until a full, proper and independent inquiry has been held. I am advised that the losses on revenue last year were £650,000 and that a debt payment of £1,147,000 had to be serviced, courtesy of the burdened ratepayers of Basildon.

I am not attacking the concept of a theatre in Basildon. We have always enjoyed very successful theatre. I applaud the arts and enjoy the entertainment that is provided by local groups, but as a Basildon ratepayer I am outraged by what I believe has happened regarding the financial viability of the new Towngate theatre, bearing in mind the huge rate increase that we have suffered.

It is now rightly being asked what proper services the Labour party will sacrifice to satisfy its ego and to continue its support of the theatre. My hon. Friend the Minister, who has responsibility for new towns, has had to grapple with several difficult issues involving Basildon during the past year. Perhaps the most appalling example of Socialist hypocrisy are the lies that have been spread, and which have frightened new town commission tenants about the security of their tenure. The lies are endless, but despite repeated assurances to the contrary from my hon. Friend the Minister, the elderly, who are among the most vulnerable in our community, have been frightened, and local Socialists have continued to stick to the line that new town commission tenants will lose their security of tenure.

The episode is all the more disgraceful when one considers that the Labour party was offered new town commission properties when there was a Labour Government. Unlike the council in Harlow, it refused. I believe that, as a result of that decision, Basildon has lost a considerable amount of income which we could have used to great effect.

In spite of the local financial crisis, the Socialist council intended to spend £35,000 of ratepayers' money on a so-called tenants' ballot. It has just had the nerve to send out, at the expense of ratepayers, letters congratulating tenants on something that the Labour party was responsible for starting. The letters were sent out in envelopes depicting a champagne bottle. That is a disgrace and the people responsible for the outrage should be called to account.

The so-called tenants action group is described as non-political but local people know that the organisers are Labour party activists. I am advised that in the recent local elections the disgraceful Militant organisation was active in some parts of the constituency. I thought that Militant was proscribed by the Labour party. How is it that a candidate is allowed to stand under the Labour party banner when we know that he is supported by Militant? The tenants action group leaflet was distributed locally by the Labour party and at the bottom the leaflet says that it has been donated at the expense of Morning Star publications.

The role of local government officers has also been questioned by some people. Local government officers have always enjoyed a proud history of political neutrality and I have always thought that they approached their duties in a thoroughly responsible and professional manner. Therefore, we have a fine tradition that should be encouraged and which, we hope, will flourish. However, the relationship between local government officers and elected representatives should be clear. It is for the latter to tell the former what to do, obviously after taking advice. It should not be the other way round. Elected representatives should be seen to run things and officers should never be put in a compromising position by making political statements that cannot be backed up through the ballot box.

The Socialist authority, in its never-ending desire to spend money, continues to interfere in areas for which it has no statutory responsibility. It has recently set up a Health Service monitoring and liaison panel, an anti-poll tax committee and a transport committee, and it has now had the cheek to set up a committee to monitor the activities of the Commission for the New Towns.

We know that all those committees are a cloak behind which to knock the Government. That is what it is all about and it is all at the expense of Basildon's hard-pressed ratepayers. The style of Socialists in Basildon has always been to take the credit for things for which they have no responsibility and to avoid criticism for those things for which they should rightly be taken to task. That is highlighted by the fact that they have no concept of what voluntary work is all about. They simply sit there handing out money regardless, and they believe that people should be paid for everything they do.

Council proceedings have become so farcical that, to avoid political change, area management such as has been suffered in Walsall and Tower Hamlets has now been adopted at a huge cost to Basildon's ratepayers. Control of spending has been given to area management committees which Socialists hope will remain in the control of Socialist activists.

Basildon's direct labour organisation has just lost £634,000. I know that the Department of the Environment is looking at what action to take over that financial failure. Grandiose schemes, which did not materialise, were heralded by the council.

I hope that a sensible conclusion is reached about the completion of the roofing of our town centre. It is essential that both sides hold constructive talks and that commitments given to established traders are honoured.

We are currently celebrating 40 glorious years since the birth of Basildon as a new town. It is a wonderful place in which to live because of the strength of the local community. I certainly do not wish it to be broken by the financial mismanagement that we are suffering at the hands of the Socialists.

2.20 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Virginia Bottomley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on securing this Adjournment debate to highlight the recent high rate increase in Basildon and the predicament in which the community finds itself. It is fortunate to have as its Member of Parliament such a champion of its interests.

I congratulate and strongly support my hon. Friend on his persistent efforts over the past few years to bring to light the irresponsible and extravagant expenditure of Basildon district council, which until last year was Labour-controlled but only recently has become hung—an apt description of the difficulties in which it finds itself, which it is foisting on local residents. Efficient management, good common sense and more accountability are needed on Basildon district council.

My hon. Friend told us that Basildon increased its local rate by over 57 per cent. for 1989-90 to finance a huge increase in spending of 87 per cent. My hon. Friend mentioned its spending on leisure activities. It seems to me that its leisure activity is spending other people's money. That increase is the largest rate increase of any shire district and well above the average increase of 12 per cent. for shire districts. The local rate for Basildon—78·1 p—is the third highest in England. Only Harlow and Wear Valley, which are Labour-controlled districts, have higher rates. In contrast, hon. Members will be interested, but scarcely surprised, to learn that the average increases in local rates between 1988-89 and 1989-90 is almost 14 per cent. among Labour shire authorities compared with only 9 per cent. among Conservative authorities.

Those figures highlight the extreme profligacy of Basildon district council with its ratepayers' money. To understand how the huge rate increase occurred, I shall give the House the basic facts behind it and show that it has nothing to do with the Government but was the result of decisions taken by the council purely and simply to make ratepayers pay for its numerous and extravagant schemes.

Basildon district council has a long history of excessive spending. Throughout the 1980s, total expenditure was well above the amounts assessed for grant-related expenditure. Average spending over GRE since 1983-84 has been a staggering 80 per cent., and in two of the past three years expenditure has been over double the assessed GRE level. That is clearly excessive by any standards and is a heavy burden for the ratepayers of Basildon to carry.

The district's needs are assessed in the same way as those of every other shire district. The assessment measures what an authority needs to spend to provide a standard level of service at a common rate poundage, taking account of the characteristics of the area. It is an objective method based on indicators of need. Of course, there can be, and often are, argument and discussion about precise detail. Hon. Members will be aware that officials are reviewing, with the associations, the methodology for a set of simplified needs assessments to be used under the new revenue support grant system.

Basildon's excessive spending led the Secretary of State to rate-cap it each year between 1985-86 and 1988-89. By 1988-89 we had reined rates back to a level below that in 1985-86. But in 1989-90 it was not possible for us under the Rates Act 1984 to cap Basildon. I understand the frustration of many local residents. Section 2(2)(a) of the Rates Act exempts an authority from designation for rate limitation in any financial year if its total budgeted expenditure for that financial year does not exceed a threshold which is statutorily updated each year. This is because authorities with low expenditure in absolute terms have only a relatively small impact on the level of rates which ratepayers actually pay. The Rate Limitation (Designation of Authorities) (Exemption) Order 1988 set the threshold for designation in 1988-89 for capping in 1989-90 at £13·1 million. Basildon's budgeted total expenditure figure of £13 million is just below the threshold for capping.

Although Basildon will receive no block grant in 1989-90 because of its excessive expenditure relative to GRE levels, I should point out that the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement would have allowed Basildon to reduce its local rate by 3 per cent. without the use of balances, had it held its spending roughly constant in real terms. However, even a decrease of 3 per cent. would still have left Basildon ratepayers facing one of the highest rate poundages, but it would have been a welcome step in the right direction. Clearly, there was no need for such a substantial rate rise.

I greatly regret the misinformation and scaremongering on the community charge. Labour local authorities that are spending highly know only too well that the writing is on the wall. With the introduction of the community charge, the community will be well and truly in charge. High-spending, profligate authorities will be exposed for what they are to the local charge payers. The system will be fairer. It will restore local accountability and local residents will know what they should do in the local elections.

I am sure that my hon. Friend hopes that the residents of Basildon will take the good advice of the citizens of the county of Essex and ensure that they elect Conservative representatives, who will conduct themselves efficiently and effectively, have a responsible attitude towards local charge payers' money and provide the best value for money together with high-quality services. We have estimated that, had the community charge been in operation in 1988-89, the charge in Basildon would have been about £267, £65 more than the community charge for spending at need. I stress that those figures are merely illustrative. The level of community charge depends upon the spending policies of the local authorities. Basildon's charge payers will be free to vote for the policies that they want and the party that puts them forward.

My hon. Friend referred to the fact that the ratepayers are now paying the price for excessive capital commitments during the 1980s, using deferred purchase arrangements. We all know much about all those policies seeking to take the waiting out of wanting—live now, pay later. The chickens are coming home to roost.

In recent years, Basildon has entered into substantial deferred purchase arrangements for capital programmes, totalling at least £44 million. These include the Towngate theatre, referred to by my hon. Friend, the Basildon centre and the Markham Chase centre. I share his concern that even if every seat of the theatre were filled for every day of the year it would still make a loss, as he said earlier this week. The district auditor outlined the financial impact of these schemes on the ratepayers of Basildon in his report of July 1987. He estimated that the payments falling due in 1989-90 from deferred purchase schemes would be equivalent to adding 19p to the rate in 1989-90—a rate which I have already said was very high compared with other shire districts. We estimate that these payments could account for around two thirds of the recent rate increase in Basildon.

Basildon district council has obviously entered into huge financial commitment and, now that the payments have to be made, the reality of the arrangements is hitting home. The Government have given public warnings many times about the inevitable financial consequences of authorities buying today and paying tomorrow. We have made it clear that local authorities must provide for the debts that they have chosen to incur.

In 1987 Parliament passed legislation designed to remove the advantage within the capital control arrangements for local authorities to enter into deferred purchase agreements. It seems unlikely that authorities would now imprudently use such arrangements. Under the new capital finance arrangements for local authorities which we propose to bring into force from 1 April 1990 deferred purchase arrangements will be treated as a credit arrangement similar to borrowing.

I thank my hon. Friend for the opportunity to comment on the situation in Basildon. I note that the slogan on the headed notepaper used by the council is, "Caring and winning through". I hope that the Council will take it to heart and provide the ratepayers and future community chargepayers with more responsible financial management. I have no doubt that the new community charge system will bring about greater accountability——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment lapsed, without Question put.

SOUND BROADCASTING

Ordered,

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 129 (Select Committee on Sound Broadcasting), the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House shall have power to give directions and perform other duties in accordance with the provisions of the Resolution of the House of 26th July 1977, in relation to sound broadcasting, and to make recommendations thereon to the House.—[Mr. Chapman.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 7th June, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary King relating to Northern Ireland may be proceeded with, though opposed, for one and a half hours after the first of them has been entered upon; and if proceedings thereon have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall, at the expiration of that period, put any Questions necessary to dispose of them.—[Mr. Chapman.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS (SERVICES)

Ordered,

That Standing Order No. 125 (Select Committee on House of Commons (Services)) be amended, in line 10, by inserting after the word 'House', the words 'to adjourn from place to place'; in line 22, by inserting after the word 'House' the words 'to adjourn from place to place, subject to the approval of the committee'; in line 41, by inserting after the word 'Offices' the word 'and'; and in line 44, by leaving out from the word 'it' to the end of line 45.—[Mr. Chapman.]

Flight Path Patterns (RAF Upper Heyford)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Chapman.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): I last raised this issue in the House on 30 November 1988, as reported at columns 849-56 of Hansard. As the time for the debate is limited, I shall not repeat the full background to the anxieties that caused me to seek a further debate on this important issue. As I wish to raise a considerable number of issues and some of them are complex, I shall understand if my hon. Friend the Minister is unable to respond to them in full today and chooses to write to me. I hope that he will reflect on what I have to say and will not shut the door on my suggestions but will give them some consideration and time.

The House will recall that there was a change of flight path at RAF Upper Heyford resulting in a substantial increase in aircraft noise suffered by local people. The chief environmental health officer of Cherwell district council reported the matter last October, stating:

"The nature and magnitude of the noise really has to be experienced for its effects upon people trying to lead a normal life to be truly appreciated . . . As a direct result of the changed aircraft departure routes on 1 June 1988 the rural communities . . . have suffered severe adverse effects by the introduction of aircraft noise levels far in excess of those which previously prevailed. The changed flight paths have not reduced the high noise levels already experienced by other villages . . . but has in some cases increased the level being experienced . . . Cherwell District Council . . . some years ago advised that new building should not be permitted in areas subject to noise levels in excess of 75 dBA . . . and this view has been upheld by Inspectors at Planning Inquiries. It is therefore obvious that noise in excess of that level should not be brought to existing settlements."

As a consequence of the change in flight paths, substantial increases in noise were brought to existing settlements and that led to the debate last November. During that debate my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health, then the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, undertook that there would be a full study of the costs and implications of realigning the runway. That study was completed earlier this year and my hon. Friend the Minister told a meeting of representatives of local communities that the cost of realigning the runway would be at least £300 million. That meant that it would be impossible. Undoubtedly that was a deeply disappointing result for the many people who had hoped that it might be possible to find a technical solution to enable noise levels to return to something similar to what they were prior to 1 June last year.

Following my hon. Friend's announcement, there are a number of continuing worries. First, there is still concern at the original decision to change the flight paths. There is a suspicion that the change was carried out not for reasons of safety but for convenience, or in anticipation of new planes, further planes or new weapons systems being introduced at Upper Heyford. Part of that suspicion arises because of conflicting accounts about who requested the change in flight paths.

In a letter to me last July, my hon. Friend the present Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health said:

[Mr. Tony Baldry]

"F111s . . . no longer have enough extra thrust to perform manoeuvres with acceptable reserves for safety sufficient to meet the stringent safety margins required by the United States air force."

Yet, last October, Colonel Nameth of the United States Air Force department in Washington wrote to a local resident saying

"the Ministry of Defence proposed a change in the take off pattern" and that

"the Ministry of Defence has recently adjusted the flight paths for RAF Upper Heyford."

Clearly, the Government's prime responsibility towards the communities around the base must be to ensure that flying activities are carried out as safely as possible. If the old flight paths have become unsafe, clearly the United States Air Force and the Ministry of Defence were under a duty of care not to allow planes to continue to fly on them.

Given that a sizeable number of local people remain unconvinced about the merits of the original decision, I hope that some effort will be made in the near future by the Royal Air Force commander at Upper Heyford, Squadron Leader Rice, and by the United States Air Force commander, Colonel Downer, to provide an opportunity for briefing local people about why the changes were made. Perhaps they could give local people a chance to meet and question some of the pilots involved. It must be in the best interests of both the United States Air Force and the Ministry of Defence for local people to be confident that the original changes in flight paths were taken with their best interests at heart and for no other reason.

There is also concern to ensure that planes adhere to the correct existing flight paths and that, within the present parameters, everything possible is done to reduce noise disturbance. I had a constructive and positive meeting with Colonel Downer and Squadron Leader Rice last week. I am grateful to both of them for their positive approach to these difficulties. I was glad to hear that they have set up a noise abatement group of senior officers at the base to give consideration to any ideas which might reduce noise levels. That demonstrates that people working at the base are conscious of the increasing impact that their activities have on local communities and are starting to think about noise and how it might be reduced.

I was also glad to hear that the amount of afternoon and early evening flying is to be substantially reduced. One of the most irksome matters for local people has been the considerable amount of later afternoon and early evening flying around the base, particularly in the summer months when planes return from missions and carry out practice circuits and bumps around the base. I was told that those activities have now been scrubbed, and when planes return to the base they will simply land.

There has also been concern about whether the planes adhere sufficiently strictly to the present designated flight patterns west of the base. I have been told that, whenever flying activity takes place there, a pilot will be sent to Steeple Aston to stand on the designated flight path between Steeple and Middle Aston to monitor the planes flying overhead.

It is also proposed to erect a large white banner on the correct flight path between Steeple and Middle Aston to act as a further visual aid to pilots. While to the outsider that may seem somewhat quaint, any measure which can help to reduce the noise impact on people living nearby is obviously to be welcomed and is worth trying.

It will be in everyone's interest if Squadron Leader Rice can have regular meetings with representatives of local communities to take forward any sensible suggestions to help ameliorate noise levels and also, if possible, to establish much quicker and more effective lines of communication and information to local vilages about what is happening, about to happen and has happened, at the base.

The recent F111 incidents were an example of when, for most people, the only immediate information available was received in dribs and drabs on the radio and in the press. By definition, much of it was hearsay and second hand and led to speculation and rumour.

It must be possible to establish an effective network to disseminate information regularly and, when necessary, speedily through local communities from the base. I am sure that local people would willingly co-operate with such a move if it meant that they could be given more speedily the information that they as local people need about these matters.

I hope that progress with Squadron Leader Rice and Colonel Downer has been positive, but there are one or two areas in which progress has not been as positive. The first relates to compensation for Ardley. Ardley is a comparatively small village to the east of the base and has been perhaps one of the worst affected villages. It has a sizeable number of houses within the 83 dbn contour. The Ministry of Defence has offered to purchase those houses at market values. I understand that once purchased they will be relet to American service personnel.

Many people in Ardley feel that it is unfair and unjust that, whereas a house on one side of the road may fall within the 83 dbn contour and thus be available for purchase, a house which is literally on the other side of the side of the road and which happens to be outside the 83 dbn contour, but by definition must be within a very high noise contour, is not eligible for purchase. It would be fairer and more just if every householder in the immediate parish of Ardley could have the opportunity of his or her property being sold to the Ministry of Defence at market value because otherwise my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will encounter some hard cases and people who feel, rightly, that they have not been treated fairly or justly.

The people of Ardley have not brought this upon themselves. The village has existed for a long time. The noise levels are not of the people's making, but inevitably if, as I suspect will happen, a sizeable number of people sell their houses because of the intolerable noise levels, the nature and character of the village will change considerably. The village shop, garage and church are all within the 83 dbn contour. It will be much more sensible if all home owners in the village were given the opportunity of selling their property. It could then be rightly and fairly said that anyone who purchased that property thereafter and moved to the village did so with full knowledge and understanding of the nuisance involved.

My hon. Friend will doubtless say that that would create a precedent. In effect, the decision by the Ministry of Defence to offer compensation along the lines that are similar to those in the Land Compensation Act 1973 is itself a precedent in many ways. If the Ministry of Defence feels unable to offer to purchase the homes itself, I understand that the United States Air Force is short of accommodation. The housing estate that it has been using in Bicester is shortly no longer to be available to it. I hope that my hon. Friend will consider having discussions with the United States Air Force to see whether it would be prepared to purchase those houses from its budget.

Many people whose homes fall within the 83 dbn contour have lived in Ardley for many years and have children attending the local schools. They are finding the present noise levels intolerable and wish to move, but they regard the period of one year in which they have to make the decision to move as a tight time frame. I hope that my hon. Friend will consider extending that period. Indeed, there are precedents for that, such as what happened in Yeovilton. Such an extension would ensure that people did not feel that their only option was to be rushed out of their homes.

Everyone in Ardley has been put in an intolerable position. It is difficult for those of us not in that position to conceive of it. People in Ardley, both individually and as a community are having to contend with a whole host of difficulties about their future. I hope that my hon. Friend will give consideration—I am sure that he will—to whether the Ministry of Defence could extend the compensation provisions so that everyone in Ardley could be included.

There is then the question of compensation for what in the law of nuisance is described as the loss of quiet enjoyment of one's property. For those who live, for example, in rented accommodation—council tenants and others—the compensation arrangements recently announced by my hon. Friend will be of no real benefit. I should have thought that it would be sensible for those living within the 75 plus dbn contour to be offered a straightforward one-off lump sum payment as compensation for what, in effect, is the loss of the quiet enjoyment of their properties. In due time, of course, if those houses are sold or people move, the people coming new into the area will know the position, but the people who are living there at present have no means of knowing that what had hitherto been tolerable levels of noise would become intolerable. In those circumstances, it would be considered much more fair and just if those people were to receive a single lump sum compensation payment for what has materially and seriously affected the quality of life that they are able to enjoy.

There are continuing concerns about Dr. Radcliffe's school, which is a Church of England school at Steeple Aston. It has a roll of approximately 150 pupils aged 5 to 11 years. It is now almost immediately under the new flight path to the west. My hon. Friend has visited the school and knows its exact location.

I have seen a letter of 24 May, written by Mr. Topps of the Ministry of Defence Land Agents to Mrs. Simmons, who is chairman of the school's governors. I am sure that my hon. Friend has seen that letter, so, as time is short, I do not intend to go through it in great detail. I do not believe that Mr. Topps's letter is a fair summary of the history of the matter. When it became apparent that the noise levels over Steeple Aston were becoming intolerable, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) fairly came to Steeple Aston. He visited Dr. Radcliffe's school and sought Treasury permission to offer payment for that school to have proper noise insulation. That, obviously, was a sensible and straightforward approach to the matter, and the approach that anyone would have hoped would be taken. The school governors and the parents understood that, and supported the fact that there should be a full technical survey to see whether it would be possible to insulate the school.

In due course that survey was completed and there was a meeting at Dr. Radcliffe's school, which a large number of people attended, because there was much interest in the school. As it is a Church of England school, there were representatives from the diocesan education authority. there were also representatives from Oxfordshire county council, as the local education authority, the trustees of the Dr. Radcliffe trust, governors and others who were concerned, including representatives of the Ministry of Defence and the PSA and the technical advisers who had carried out the technical survey.

It was only at that time that the local education authority and others had the opportunity to consider the implications of the technical survey. I am bound to say that the general consensus was that the proposals were costly and that there was no guarantee that such expense, once incurred, would materially improve the school's environment. What is more, it became apparent in the intervening period that both teachers and parents had become increasingly apprehensive about the number of planes that were flying immediately above the school, and, therefore, that was another factor that had to be taken into consideration.

Following that meeting, the school governors unanimously resolved that, rather than spending large sums of public money on seeking an expensive system of noise insulation, which would probably not solve the problem, they would much prefer that the school be moved. That approach is now supported by Oxfordshire county council as the local education authority. From Mr. Topps's letter, I understand that the Ministry is not prepared to support such an approach.

I hope that my hon. Friend will reflect upon the matter. By definition, any change to the school will need the endorsement of the local education authority and, doubtless, of the Department of Education and Science. I hope also that my hon. Friend will consider the Dr. Radcliffe school and the other issues, and ensure that his officials consult officials in the Department of Education and Science on the best way forward. I understand my hon. Friend's concern that the technical survey has already incurred a sum of money, but there will be greater concern if thousands of pounds are spent on insulating the school only for a modest improvement. Parents and staff would still be worried about children being taught in that environment.

To a greater or lesser degree, everyone in north Oxfordshire supports the fundamental principle that my hon. Friend and I support, that the first duty of the realm is the defence of the realm. Over the years, there has been full appreciation of the contribution that RAF Upper Heyford has played and continues to play in the nation's defence. As I have made clear on previous occasions, that public good must be balanced against the numerous collective private interests of the thousands of people who live around the base. One of the Government's functions is to seek to reconcile the public good and private interests as best as possible.

The change in the flight path has led to a substantial increase in aircraft noise. What was once tolerable has now become intolerable for many people. There is said to be no relief from the noise. Frustration has increased because of recent incidents. For instance, on 9 May, shortly after take-off, an F111 developed engine problems and jettisoned fuel, which then ignited, causing the plane to have the appearance of a fireball when it landed. On 19 May, part of a wing flap fell off an F111 during a flight close to Banbury.

Such frustrations and concerns are causing increasingly large numbers of people in north Oxfordshire to question the reason for having a major military airfield in one of the fastest growing areas in the United Kingdom. Over the past year, local people have been patient. I trust that my hon. Friend will today be able to meet some of their specific and immediate concerns, and ensure that everyone considers that he is being treated fairly and justly and that every step is being taken to ensure that they can lead their lives with as little inconvenience from the base as is humanly possible in the circumstances.

I appreciate that I have taken more time than is customary in an Adjournment debate, and I apologise for that. I am sure that my hon. Friend will recognise that several matters of concern should have been outlined. In many instances, I have been able to outline them only briefly and in headline form. If my hon. Friend feels that I have not accorded him sufficient time to respond fully to my constituents' concerns, I hope that he will take time to reflect and to write to me in due course or that we will have further meetings. I thank my hon. Friend and his officials for their courtesy in recent weeks and months. My hon. Friend found this problem on his desk when he moved to his present position. I hope that he will continue to make efforts to find solutions to these difficult problems.

2.53 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Michael Neubert): My hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) is to be congratulated on again raising this issue on the Adjournment. I know that many people in his constituency are concerned about the problem of military aircraft noise at RAF Upper Heyford. I hope this debate will give me the opportunity to clarify some of the issues involved and answer some of the points raised by my hon. Friend, who made his case with characteristic clarity and who continues his staunch defence of his constituents' interests.

I do not intend to go over the history of this issue in detail, not least because my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman), did so in debate on 30 November and because I am left with only seven minutes for my response today and time will undoubtedly run out on me. However, as the principal events have been brought into question, I believe that it would be useful if I were to set out those events that led up to the change in take-off patterns and those which have taken place since.

Early last year the Ministry of Defence received a submission from the headquarters of the United States Third Air Force at RAF Mildenhall on behalf of RAF Upper Heyford. This submission set out the reasons why they, as operators of the F111, believed that the take-off patterns then being used by aircraft of the 20th tactical fighter wing based at RAF Upper Heyford no longer met the necessarily high safety standards of the United States Air Force, and why they therefore believed their use should be discontinued. I will come onto the reasons for this in more detail later in my speech. The submission requested the approval of the Ministry of Defence to this proposal. After very careful consideration in the Ministry of Defence, including advice from Royal Air Force experts and further consultation with the United States Air Force, my predecessor gave his approval to the proposed changes —to be made with effect from 1 June 1988.

The new take-off path to the west was subsequently modified in mid August to relieve some of the impact on Steeple Aston. However, local people, particularly in Steeple and Middle Aston and Ardley, still felt the noise levels to which they were being subjected were too high. Their campaign therefore continued and my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury suggested during the debate on 30 November that the Ministry examine the possibility of realigning the runway at RAF Upper Heyford to determine whether this offered a solution to the problem. In responding to that debate, my predecessor agreed to undertake a full study of the costs and implications of such a project and to examine whether there were any other technical means by which the situation might be improved.

A thorough and careful study was carried out by my officials with the help of the Property Services Agency and the United States Air Force. The conclusion it reached was that, although it might be technically feasible to realign the runway at RAF Upper Heyford, it was not in fact practical because it would redistribute the noise to other villages, have significant operational penalties for the 20th tactical fighter wing and involve enormous costs—a minimum of £150 million for the project itself, plus other costs of a similar order to base the aircraft elsewhere during the work. The study was not able to identify any other technical means by which a solution to the problem might be found.

As my hon. Friend has said, I visited RAF Upper Heyford on 19 April, when he was present, to announce the results of the study. I made it clear at that meeting that we and our American colleagues very much regret the noise and disturbance to which the residents of the local community around the base are subject. I can assure the House that the decision to introduce new departure routes at the base was made only after very careful consideration of the position and with the interests of safety in mind. However, there appears to be some confusion still about the reason for the change and it might be helpful if I explain the background.

The old take-off routes required the aircraft to make a sharp banked turn to the right immediately after take-off, followed by one to the left. Sharply banking an aircraft requires the pilot to produce enough lift by pulling back on the stick both to overcome gravity and make the turn. Producing more lift also increases the drag on the aircraft so the pilot normally adds power to maintain air speed. However, immediately after lift off, the pilot has already applied maximum power, so his only remaining alternative is to sacrifice climb performance. This S-bend manoeuvre therefore reduced the safety margin of the take-off, because it meant that if the pilot did encounter a problem on take-off he was climbing less steeply and therefore the time available to cope with any emergency was reduced. While this reduction in the take-off pattern was small when the old take-off procedure was first introduced, subsequent changes led to a further deterioration in the safety margins of this manoeuvre to a point where they became unacceptable.

Changing operational requirements had led to an increase in the weight of the F111 aircraft based at RAF Upper Heyford so that, for example, an aircraft on a typical operational sortie is about 6 per cent. heavier now than it would have been 10 years ago. This is partly due to a change to safer, though heavier, fuel and partly due to changing operational requirements which have increased the payload that the aircraft is required to carry. Because some of this weight increase is due to the carriage of additional external stores there has also been an associated increase in the drag factor. It was those factors which led to the reduction in safety margins to the point where the only prudent course was for the United States Air Force to request a reversion to a conventional straight out pattern and for the Ministry of Defence to agree to that request. The straight out pattern, as modified last August, restores the safety margins for the foreseeable future. I should perhaps stress, in view of some suggestions which have been made, that the decision was taken purely in the light of current circumstances with the sole aim of maintaining the safety of flying operations from the base.

That brings me to the second issue that I hope to clarify and that concerns the future of the base. There has been a great deal of speculation in the press in recent weeks about what may or may not happen at the base in the future, but the truth is quite straightforward. We are currently considering with our NATO partners what adjustments need to be made to our forces in Europe in the wake of the intermediate nuclear forces—INF—treaty. However, no decisions have yet been taken and the Government have not agreed to any changes to the role or aircraft of the 20th tactical fighter wing at RAF Upper Heyford; nor have we agreed to any expansion or additions to the facilities there to support new or additional aircraft. Any works under way at the base relate to the aircraft currently stationed there——

The motion having been made at half-past Two o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MADAM DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order, till Tuesday 6 June, pursuant to the Resolution of the House of 22 May.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he plans to take to ensure that special needs provision is protected within the framework of local financial management of schools.

Mr. Butcher: Circular 7/88 on local management of schools makes clear that LEAs will be expected to reflect in their LMS formulae the incidence of pupils with special educational needs in their schools. This will include both non-statemented pupils with learning difficulties and statemented pupils where provision for the latter is delegated to schools. It will be open to LEAs to propose to except from delegation provision for statemented pupils where they judge this to be the best way of ensuring that resources are targeted on the needs of the individual pupils concerned. Authorities may also choose to continue to manage centrally the range of advisory and support services associated with special needs provision.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he plans to do to ensure that resources are allocated within local financial management of schools to pupils with special educational needs but without statements of special educational needs.

Mr. Butcher: Paragraph 115 of circular 7/88 on local management of schools makes clear that LEAs will be expected to reflect in their LMS formulae the incidence of pupils with special educational needs in their schools. This will include non-statemented pupils with learning difficulties. Where the numbers of such pupils vary between schools it will be open to LEAs to include a specific factor in their formulae designed to target resources according to the additional need to spend of certain schools.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that the provisions made in section 19 of the Education Reform Act concerning the power of headteachers to temporarily exclude pupils with special needs from the national curriculum or to request that statements be made on such pupils is not misused.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has issued for comment by 31 May draft regulations to be made under section 19 of the Education Reform Act governing temporary exceptions from the national curriculum for individual pupils. These include the following proposals for safeguards against misuse.

A head teacher must give a special direction before lifting or modifying any national curriculum requirements in respect of an individual pupil for the purpose of assessment or reassessment for special educational needs. The special direction must include the headteacher's reasons for judging that the pupil has or probably has special educational needs requiring the making or amendment of a statement. Copies must be sent to parents, the school governing body and the LEA. Parents will have the right of appeal to the governing body, which may overturn the headteacher's decision. There will be strict time limits on the duration of directions and the scope for renewals.

A copy of the draft regulations has been placed in the Library.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to allocate additional resources for the training of teachers and others in the implementation of the national curriculum in respect of children with special educational needs.

Mr. Butcher: Additional support for training teachers to implement the national curriculum is available through the LEA training grants scheme; £47·5 million is available for this purpose in the current financial year. It is for local education authorities to decide how much to spend, within this total, on training in respect of children with special educational needs.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria were used in the selection of the membership of the NCC task group on special educational needs.

Mr. Butcher: It is for the National Curriculum Council, and not for my right hon. Friend to determine the selection of members of task groups.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when he plans to publish the revision of circular 1/83; and whether he can indicate the results of the consultation process in respect of the draft revision;

(2) whether he plans to give advice to local education authorities on the proper conduct of appeals in the light of the contents of the National Deaf Children's Society report entitled "A Mockery of Needs";

(3) whether, in the light of the contents of the National Deaf Children's Society report entitled "A Mockery of Needs" he will take further steps to ensure that parents of children with special educational needs receive accurate up-to-date information and adequate support at diagnosis following the provisions made in section 10 of the Education Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Health, the Welsh Office and this Department have received a substantial number of responses to the draft circular to replace circular 1/83. They have indicated a general welcome to the provision of new guidance to local education authorities, health authorities and social services departments on the procedures to be followed in the implementation of various provisions in the Education Act 1981. They have made a number of detailed observations which are now being considered by the Departments. The contents of the National Deaf Children's Society's report will also be taken into consideration. We hope to issue the new circular within the next few months. Guidance on the conduct of local appeals is included in the code of practice on appeals prepared by the local authority associations and the Council on Tribunals.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 against the special educational provision set out in the statement of special educational needs he has received since 1983 in respect of (a) all children with statements of special educational need and (b) deaf children with statements of special educational needs; and how many of these appeals have gone in the parents' favour.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received 150 appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 since 1983. It is not possible to identify from the Department's records how many of those appeals were in respect of deaf children. My right hon. Friend has amended the statement of special educational needs in 34 of those appeals. Decisions have yet to be taken on 25 appeals.

Schools Examination and Assessment Council

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure representation from special education sectors on the Schools Examination and Assessment Council.

Mr. Butcher: Last year Professor Peter Mittler, director of the centre for educational guidance and special needs at the university of Manchester, accepted my right hon. Friend's invitation to become a member of the Schools Examination and Assessment Council.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates of his Department in total, in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the precise form requested is not available without incurring disproportionate cost. The Department has, however, paid the Property Services Agency for accommodation and services under the property repayment system since 1 April 1984. Under these arrangements, annual charges for accommodation, including those incurred by non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department and Her Majesty's inspectorate, have been as follows:

1 Financial year	2 Area sq ft	3 Opportunity cost-rent	4 Contribution in lieu of rates	5 Club subscription for minor works and maintenance	6 Administration charges on 5	7 Total annual costs

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department, like most other Government Departments, operates cash-based systems which enable Parliament to be satisfied that amounts of cash voted to be spent on certain activities have been so spent. There has, therefore, been no overall need, apart from those limited areas where repayment to transactions are conducted, to maintain comprehensive up-to-date valuations of plant and equipment, the purchase cost of which is tightly controlled through the cash accounting system and plant and equipment asset replacement charges are often not entered in the accounts.

Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the research commissioned by his Department into the relationship between cancer and radiation in the last 30 years.

Mr. Jackson: Since 1976 the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through my Department, has supported a total of 191 projects relevant to the relationship between cancer and radiation—both in its own establishments and through its grant schemes. I am arranging for a list of these research projects to be sent to the right hon. Member and for a copy to be placed in the Library.

I regret that it is not possible to provide details of research conducted prior to 1976.

Vice-Chancellors and Principals

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average salary paid to all those vice-chancellors or principals at United Kingdom universities, for whom data are collected, in 1989 and each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: The Department does not collect information on the salaries of vice-chancellors or principals.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to allow city technology colleges to introduce selection based on attainable levels at the age of 11 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Pupils admitted to city technology colleges represent a wide range of abilities and will have demonstrated their aptitude to benefit from the particular type of education to be offered. In time, national assessments at age 11 will provide evidence of the distribution of attainment on entry to CTCs.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the study being carried out by the Institute of Psychiatry into benzodiazepines will be completed; and whether it will be published.

Mr. Jackson: The Institute of Psychiatry is currently carrying out several studies related to benzodiazepines. It is anticipated that they will be completed by September 1989. The researchers would be expected, as is the usual practice, to disseminate their findings through appropriate professional journals.

Teachers (Incentive Allowances)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford of 8 May, Official Report, columns 298-99, if information from the 1988 secondary staffing survey can be used to test the accuracy of his Department's expectations in relation to the automatic award of incentive allowances in October 1987 for that sector, without reference to the DTR data mentioned in his reply; if he will publish a table showing comparative figures for entitlement to such allowances (a) derived from the results of the 1988 secondary staffing survey and (b) his Department's plans; if he will, by other means, estimate the number of each rate of incentive allowance awarded automatically in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Data from the 1988 secondary school staffing survey can in due course be compared with the assumptions in circular 8/87 about the number of teachers in secondary schools who would receive an incentive allowance automatically in October 1987. Such data are not yet available and, for a number of reasons, will not provide a precise measure of the accuracy of the assumptions in the circular. Information from the 1987 database of teacher records will enable more reliable comparisons to be made, and will shortly become available. There are no other practical means of estimating the number of allowances awarded automatically in that year.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford of 8 May, Official Report, columns 298-99, if information from the 1987 primary staffing survey will be used to test the accuracy of his Department's expectations in relation to the automatic award of incentive allowances in October 1987 for that sector, without reference to the DTR data mentioned in his reply; if he will publish a table showing comparative figures for entitlement to such allowances (a) derived from the results of the 1987 primary staffing survey and (b) his Department's plans; if he will, by other means, estimate the number of each rate of incentive allowance awarded automatically in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not plan to compare the assumptions in circular 8/87 about the number of teachers in primary schools receiving an incentive allowance automatically in October 1987 with data from the 1987 primary school staffing survey. Information from the 1987 database of teacher records will enable more reliable comparisons to be made, and will shortly become available. There are no other practical means of estimating the number of allowances awarded automatically in that year.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford of 8 May, Official Report, column 299, what is the estimated planned cost of incentive allowances in financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 on a similar basis to that reply, distinguishing the amount and proportion in each year attributable to the automatic award of allowances in October 1987.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows:

Estimated cost[1] of incentive allowances in ordinary schools

	1987-88[2]	1988-89	1989-90
Total cost (£ million)	113	319	366
Costs attributable to the automatic award of incentive allowances in October 1987 (£ million)	106 (94 per cent.)	[3]236 (74 per cent.)	[3]250 (68 per cent.)

[1] Costs are cash values for financial years and include employers' on-costs.
[2] 1 October 1987 to 31 March 1988.
[3] These figures assume that all the teachers who received an incentive allowance automatically in 1987 continued to teach in ordinary schools and to be paid the same allowance. They are therefore overstated because in practice a significant number would have been promoted or ceased to work in such schools.

University Students

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many full-time students there were in (a) British and (b) Scottish universities for each year since 1973;

(2) how many full-time women university students there were in (a) British and (b) Scottish universities for each year since 1973.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time university students of (a) Asian, (b) African and (c) other ethnic minority origins there were in (i) British and (ii) Scottish universities for each year since 1973, excluding foreign students.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not at present collected centrally. It will be collected for students starting undergraduate courses in 1990.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time students from social groups IIIM, IV and V there were in the British universities for each year since 1973; and how many of them registered in courses of Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: The number of home university students accepted through the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA), and who were from social groups III M, IV and V since 1977 in the United Kingdom are shown in the following table. Comparable figures for Scottish universities are not readily available. Nor are figures for earlier years.

School Watch Video

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of the poster advertising the school watch video sent to every chair of every school governing body.

Mr. Butcher: The cost of printing and distributing copies of the poster to all chairs of school governing bodies was £4,883, borne equally by the Department and Municipal Mutual Insurance Ltd., which jointly sponsored the project.

THE ARTS

Arts Festival

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many additional annual arts festivals have been established since 1979.

Mr. Luce: The publication "Arts Festival in Great Britain" estimates that in 1989 there will be more than 600 festivals taking place in Great Britain which have a professional performing element. Information on the number of arts festivals that were held in 1979 is not available.

Touring Fund

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom touring fund.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council's Great Britain touring fund was established in 1987-88 with £1·5 million from the extra £5 million that I made available to the Council for Incentive Funding and Touring. In its first year, the fund enabled more than 60 extra weeks of touring across all art forms. Figures are not yet available for 1988-89, but they are expected to show a further increase.

Library Services

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the effects of the proposal to charge for obtaining and notifying the availability or non-availability of an item reserved on those living in rural areas, ethnic minorities, and those whose library service is limited or poorly provided for in circumstances beyond their control.

Mr. Luce: I have considered carefully the comments made by respondents to the library Green Paper. I have also taken account of library authorities' current charging policies on reservation fees. I intend that authorities should continue to have discretion to decide whom to charge, and whom to exempt or offer concessionary rates of charging, subject only to a maximum limitation. I will in due course consult on what that limitation should be.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what evidence is available on (a) the time and quality of personal assistance to users given by libraries and library staff, (b) the number of requests for assistance that cannot be met within half an hour and (c) the effect of the likelihood of charging to particular classes of use or user.

Mr. Luce: I intend to consult local authority associations, and other bodies as I consider appropriate, about these and other issues before introducing any regulations.

TRANSPORT

Radioactive Material (Transport)

56. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he is planning to introduce to regulate the transport of radioactive material.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport of radioactive material is carried out in accordance with national and international regulations which are under continuous review. The United Kingdom takes a leading part in the review process which is administered by the International Atomic Energy Agency, of which the United Kingdom is a member state.

The list of the current regulations in force for the transport of radioactive material is as follows:

REGULATIONS FOR THE TRANSPORT OF RADIOACTIVE MATERIALS

International recommended regulations

International Atomic Energy Agency's safety series No. 6
Regulations for the safe transport of radioactive materials 1973 edition (as amended)
As above but 1985 edition
International Atomic Energy Agency's safety series No. 80

Motorway Repairs

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to undertake a review of departmental procedures relating to motorway repairs, in respect of (a) evaluating the costs of delays to road users, and (b) the potential for keeping at least two motorway lanes open during repairs;

(2) what studies he has undertaken of the costs to road users of long delays caused by motorway repairs; and what action he has taken and plans to take, following such studies;

(3) if he will make it his policy always to keep open at least two motorway lanes during motorway repairs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is continually looking at ways of improving its procedures, including the programming and timing of roadworks, traffic management at roadworks and the time taken to execute works. A number of improvements have been introduced in recent years, such as better layouts for contraflow systems, mobile lane closures and lane rental contracts.

The costs of traffic delays expected at major roadworks are assessed using the Department's computer model QUADRO (queuing and delays at roadworks). Bonus payments to contractors for early completion of lane rental contracts, or charges to contractors for late completion, are based on QUADRO assessments. Since lane rental contracts were introduced in 1984 we estimate that they have saved about 2,000 days of delay worth £35 million to road users.

Current developments include improvements to QUADRO, a new computerised system for the co-ordination and scheduling of roadworks, and traffic management experiments designed to increase lane capacity through roadworks.

Our policy is not to reduce three-lane carriageways to one lane except where this is unavoidable, and then normally only in off-peak periods, often at night.

Deaf Drivers

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to resist European Commission proposals which would bar deaf people from driving minibuses and light goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no justification on road safety grounds for tougher controls on the drivers of minibuses and light goods vehicles. We are pressing the European Commission at every level to avoid placing unnecessary restrictions on them. We can see no justification for preventing deaf people from driving such vehicles.

We want to maintain and enhance mobility for special needs groups and common interest groups. We do not want unnecessary additional driving and medical tests. We aim to protect our present arrangements in the negotiations in the Council of Ministers. I am sending a copy of this question and answer to the new Commissioner for Transport.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department's current standard for motorways of dual-four lane width stipulates that they should be continuously lit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's current standard for motorways of dual-four lane width does not stipulate that they should be continuously lit. The provision of lighting on motorways has first to be justified by economic and environmental assessment. For new and improved motorways of more than dual-three lane width a special case can be made.

M25

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the noise bunds and barriers alongside the M25 are (a) earth bunds with planting and (b) walls or fences.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

	Miles
Noise bund	15·5
Noise barrier	13·5
Noise barrier on bund	3·0

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when, pursuant to his answer of 24 April, Official Report, column 447, he expects to be able to list the latest available traffic flows using the M25 entry and exit slip roads; and whether he will at the same time list in the Official Report the matching main carriageway flows in each direction between interchanges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These traffic flows will be made available when the report of the M25 review is published.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state, for the M25 traffic flows listed in the Official Report on 24 April, columns 445-46, the factors his Department uses for correcting for seasonal effects; from what source these are derived; and how these factors differ from those used for other trunk roads and motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The M25 traffic flows were adjusted for seasonal and other effects by scaling to automatic counts for the full year. Complete annual counts are not generally available for other roads. Annual average daily flows are usually estimated from 12-hour counts using a common set of adjustment factors for each road class. These factors are derived from analysis of regular monthly censuses at 170 core sites.

Manchester Airport (Rail Link)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the rail link to Manchester airport.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to receive an investment submission from British Rail shortly.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is commercially confidential.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The spending by the Department of Transport on television advertising in each of the last five years is as follows:

Financial year	Privatisation	Non-privatisation	Total
1984-85	Nil	1,552,810	1,552,810
1985-86	Nil	Nil	Nil
1986-87	2,731,544	Nil	2,731,544
1987-88	3,701,725	2,191,494	5,893,219
1988-89	Nil	1,725,128	1,725,128

Information on expenditure with individual television companies is commercially confidential.

Accident Black Spots

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will estimate the cost of accidents at accident black spots each year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the number of people (a) killed and (b) seriously injured at accident black spots each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available.

Definitions of casualty sites vary widely between local authorities. Many authorities bring new locations currently not considered as bad into their lists as higher priority sites are progressively treated. An attempt to compile a list would be misleading.

Accident investigation and prevention schemes remain one of the most cost-effective ways of reducing casualties. Existing advice to local authorities on AIP work is now being supplemented by new guidance being prepared jointly with the Institution of Highways and Transportation on an areawide safety engineering.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the average cost of small improvement schemes at accident black spots; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average cost of small improvement schemes at casualty sites is difficult to determine because local highway authority definitions vary. The best indication can be found in the Department's transport and road research laboratory report "Accident reduction and prevention programmes in Highway Authorities—1987".

From a sample of accident investigation and prevention schemes for which complete data were available, the authors found that the average cost per scheme is about £6,000 for non-trunk roads and £12,000 for trunk roads.

The distribution of scheme costs is wide and when all costed schemes are considered, almost 60 per cent. of urban and 75 per cent. of rural schemes cost less than £5,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Football Pool Betting Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Exchequer has raised from football pool betting duty in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lilley: Following is the information:

MIRAS

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to allow the interest on semi-commercial mortgages taken out on premises which contain a shop and living accommodation, to be set against income tax under the MIRAS system.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Student Grants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequ whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Taunton on 20 April, Official Report, columns 232-33, he has any plans to enable parents affected by the abolition of tax relief on increases in parental contributions for students to cancel existing covenants sothat the students' application for grants might be assessed in accordance with the new scale instituted after the 1988 Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have no such plans.

Earnings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to April 1989 the information on net earnings provided in his reply of 10 February 1987 to the then hon. Member for Fulham, Official Report, columns 177-78.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the levels of earnings at the top 5 per cent. point of the earnings distribution are not published. The information in the table is based on estimates of these levels derived from published figures in the relevant new earnings surveys. Results of the survey in April 1989 are not available yet so estimates for April 1988 are given in the table. Earnings levels are for men or women as appropriate paid at adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowances.

[1] Average earnings are those for full time males working a full week at adult rates in all occupations. They are £92·80 per week in 1978-79 and assumed to be £273·10 in 1989-90, an increase of 8¼ per cent. on average earnings in 1988-89 and an increase of 7½ per cent. on 1988-89 (the increases used by the Government Actuary in assessing the level of the National Insurance Fund as described in paragraph 3·02 of the Autumn Statement 1988).
[2] Income tax rates and allowances used for 1989-90 are those proposed in the 1989 Budget. The calculations also assume post-October NIC rates; before October people earning more than £115 per week will pay an additional £3·01 per week.

VAT (Charities)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what representations he has had from Oxfam concerning the effect of value added tax regulation changes on its fund-raising capability; and if he will state what steps he proposes to take which will help offset any losses which may reduce the capability of Oxfam, and other similar voluntary bodies, to undertake their work.

Mr. Lilley: I have received no representations from Oxfam about the new VAT exemption for charity fund-raising events which my right hon. Friend announced in his Budget speech on 14 March and which came into effect on 1 April. I have, however, received a number of representations from Oxfam supporters about the EC Commission's proposals for tax approximation by 1992, which would mean an end to the present VAT zero-rating for donated goods sold in charity shops. These proposals require the unanimous agreement of all member states and the Government will not accept proposals which remove our ability to retain zero rates.

Government Debt

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the 1988-89 budget surplus was used to pay off the national debt; what are the details of the debts paid off; how much is estimated to have gone into reinvestment, and what is the basis for that estimate; how much is estimated to have gone into consumer expenditure; and what is the basis for that estimate.

Mr. Lilley: The Budget surplus in 1988-89 was forecast in the Financial Statement and Budget Report to have reduced the outstanding stock of net public sector debt (a more meaningful measure in modern circumstances than the national debt, strictly defined) by some £14 billion from £171 billion at end March 1988 to £157 billion at end March 1989.

Outturn figures for net public sector debt outstanding at the end of 1988-89 will not be available until later in the year. However, details of net transactions in debt are available in the May Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin (table 7). This shows that the majority of the reduction in debt outstanding was in the form of a net repayment of British Government securities (gilts).

In 1988-89 the large PSDR meant that the Government made net purchases of gilts so as to ensure it had a broadly neutral impact on liquidity. It is unlikely that this policy will have had any significant effect on consumers' expenditure. Also, in these circumstances it is only possible for individuals to reinvest in gilts to the extent that they are purchased from existing holders. There is no information readily available on transactions of this sort.

Mortgages (Tax Relief)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the total cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1989-90, (b) the average value of relief per mortgagor, and (c) the numbers receiving mortgage relief broken down in the following income ranges: under £4,000, £4,000 to £5,000, £5,000 to £6,000, £6,000 to £7,000, £7,000 to £8,000, £8,000 to £9,000, £9,000 to £10,000, £10,000 to £12,000, £12,000 to £15,000, £15,000 to £20,000, £20,000 to £25,000, £25,000 to £30,000 and over £30,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 May 1989]: Latest estimates for 1989-90, based on the assumption that interest rates remain at current levels for the rest of 1989-90, are given in the table. These are based on projections to 1989-90 of information in the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and the 1986 family expenditure survey and are provisional. The estimates include mortgages formerly under the option mortgage scheme which are now subsumed within MIRAS.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the value of income tax personal allowances has increased in real terms since 1979; and how this amount has been distributed to each band of income taxpayers, both in total and in amount per taxpayer.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 May 1989]: Since 1978-79, the basic income tax personal allowances have increased in real terms by over 25 per cent. If, for 1989-90, personal allowances were to be reduced to their indexed 1978-79 levels total income tax liability would be increased by some £4·4 billion, distributed as follows:

Income range £ per annum	Single Person Total £ million	Single Person Average per taxpayer[1] £ per annum	Married one-earner couple Total £ million	Married one-earner couple Average per taxpayer[1] £ per annum	Married two-earner couple Total £ million	Married two-earner couple Average per taxpayer[1] £ per annum

[2] Less than £5 million.

Taxation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update, to take account of the 1989 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his reply of 21 October 1986 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) Official Report, columns 807-8.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 May 1989]: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 4 April 1989 at column 8.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reductions in income tax liabilities, 1989-90 income levels, of the proposed 1989-90 allowances, thresholds and rates in relation to the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1989-90 showing (a) the number of tax units, (b) the total amount of reduction and (c) the average reduction per tax unit in each of the following income ranges: under £5,000, £5,000 to £10,000, £10,000 to £15,000, £15,000 to £20,000, £20,000 to £30,000, £30,000 to £50,000 and over £50,000.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the tax threshold, (b) tax free income and (c) break-even points at current prices, at 1949-50 prices and constant prices, as a percentage of average manual earnings for a single person, married man without children, married man with two children and married man with four children in 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 May 1989]: The information is in the table.

Income tax thresholds, tax free income and break-even points

Tax year	Threshold at current prices £	Threshold at 1949-50 prices £	Threshold as percentage of average manual earnings[1] per cent.	Tax free income[2] at current prices £	Tax free income at 1949-50 prices £	Tax free income as percentage of average manual earnings[1] per cent. [1] Average manual earnings are for full-time males aged over 21 working a full week.
[2] Tax-free income is defined as the tax threshold plus child benefit.
[3] Break-even point is the level of income at which income tax liability is equal to the money received through child benefit. It therefore gives the level of income above which the family pays more income tax than it obtains in benefits for children. Break-even points are not appropriate for families without children.
[4] On the basis of the 1989 Budget proposals. Estimates of thresholds and break-even points as a percentage of earnings are provisional.
[5] Both children aged under 11.
[6] Two children aged under 11, one aged between 11 and 15 and one aged 16 or over.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reductions in income tax liabilities, at 1989-90 income levels, of the proposed 1989-90 allowances, thresholds and rates in relation to the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1989-90 showing (a) the number of tax units, (b) the total amount of reduction and (c) the average reduction per tax unit for the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. of taxpayers and the bottom 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent., 20 per cent. and 50 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 May 1989]: The information is given in the table. I regret that estimates for the bottom 1 per cent. and the bottom 5 per cent. of taxpayers are not available. Child tax allowances, which were being phased out in 1978-79 have been excluded from the comparison. The estimates are based on the projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

[2] Married couples count as one unit.
[3] Average reductions are calculated by reference to the estimated number of tax units who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime, this number is some 1,200,000 greater than the numbers paying tax in 1989-90, some 900,000 in this income range below £5,000 and 300,000 in the range £8,000-£10,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General how much has been paid each year at current prices in the county of South Yorkshire during the last 10 years, from the legal aid fund; how many Queen's counsel, junior counsel and solicitors have received such payments in each year; and if he will show in his answer what percentage this is of the national expenditure in such payments.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available in the form requested. Regional data are available only by circuit or Crown court (in the case of criminal legal aid in the higher courts) and by legal aid area (in the case of all other forms of legal aid).

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Attorney-General if he plans to prosecute Mr. Paul Foot and Mr. Colin Wallace for offences under the Official Secrets Act in relation to the publication of the book "Who Framed Colin Wallace?"; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Consideration is being given to the contents of the book.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the South African Government urging the ending of the state of emergency.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made many representations calling on the South African Government to lift the state of emergency. Similar representations have been made jointly with our European partners, most recently on 20 April this year.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the immediate and unconditional release of all detainees and the lifting of the restrictions imposed on recently released detainees in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made frequent representations to the South African Government, urging that all those detained without trial should be charged or released unconditionally.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tropical Forests

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to veto EEC schemes which would aid the destruction of the tropical forests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We oppose schemes in developing countries where environmental concerns are likely to be dealt with inadequately or which have unacceptable environmental costs; however, we do not have a veto on Community aid projects as they are decided by qualified majority. We favour the use of aid available under the Community's programmes for measures to promote the sustainable management of tropical forests.

Rain Forest Conservation

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list those projects for which development aid has been provided to assist in rain forest conservation by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the amount of development aid provided by Her Majesty's Government to assist in rain forest conservation in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the amount of development aid per project, the nature of the project, and to whom aid has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to assist in rain forest conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Details of the Overseas Development Administration's activities to protect rain forests are given in a supplement to the December 1988 issue of "British Overseas Development", copies of which are in the Library.

Identifiable expenditure on bilateral aid for all types of forestry for the calendar years 1983 to 1988 was:

	Expenditure by		£ thousands
	Overseas Development Administration	Commonwealth Development Corporation	Total
1983	2,103	2,502	4,605
1984	4,360	1,968	6,328
1985	5,825	1,217	7,042
1986	7,329	7,973	15,302
1987	6,449	3,490	9,939
1988	(not yet available)	3,391

Expenditure on training and some other technical co-operation in the forestry sector could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when assessments are made of the effects of providing aid for rain forest conservation programmes; what is the latest assessment; what consideration is being given to increasing the funding of such projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration's projects in the forestry sector are closely monitored by our project managers and specialist advisers. We have made no general evaluation of the impact of our rain forest conservation activities but we are nonetheless very much aware of the local and global importance of rain forests. As part of our forestry initiative we have identified more than 20 countries where there are good prospects for new British aid-funded activities to promote all types of forestry. We are increasing our funding for forestry research and are encouraging British charities to put forward more forestry projects for joint funding.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what cost benefit analysis has been undertaken of the most effective methods of assisting rain forest conservation by Her Majesty's Government; what conclusions were drawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration has not undertaken any general cost benefit analysis of methods of assisting rain forest conservation. We discuss with individual Governments their countries' needs and Britain's ability to help. Potential projects are subject to economic, social and environmental appraisal.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on comparative rain forest depletion in (a) Brazil and (b) other parts of the world.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest internationally comparable figures relate to 1976-80. Deforestation rates for tropical moist forest by region and worldwide were:

Tropical closed moist forest

	Area lost (millions of hectares/year)	Percentage of total area
Africa	1·20	0·59
Asia Pacific	1·61	0·61
Latin America	3·30	0·54
Worldwide	6·11	0·57

Brazil's deforestation rate for all closed forest and open woodland was 2·32 million hectares or 0·5 per cent. per year. The Brazilian rate has increased during the 1980s but I am not aware of any agreed figures relating to rain forest alone.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates, of his Department in total, in each standard both in total per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Forth: Information in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. However, the Department has paid the PSA for accommodation and services under the property repayment system (PRS) since 1 April 1984. Under these arrangements, annual charges for the accommodation occupied have been as follows:

(1) Financial year	(2) Area sq ft (million)	(3) "Opportunity cost" rent £ million	(4) Contribution in lieu of rates £ million	(5) Club subscription for minor works and maintenance £ million	(6) Administration charge in respect of (5) £ million	(7) Total £ million

1988-89	4·4	35·1	17·8	8·0	1·9	62·8

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Forth: The Department follows standard civil service accountancy practices which enable Parliament to be satisfied that amounts of cash voted to be spent on certain activities have been so spent. Where assets such as plant and equipment are used in connection with fee-earning services, their written down value is recorded annually in memorandum trading accounts. Proposed expenditure on replacements is reflected in the annual estimates submitted to Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

British Intelligence (History)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 11 April, Official Report, column 442, what forms of publication of Sir Michael Howard's volume on the history of British intelligence are being considered.

The Prime Minister: Publication will be in the series of official histories of British intelligence in the second world war, of which volumes I to III have already been published.

President Ortega

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations took place with the United States Government prior to her recent meeting with President Ortega of Nicaragua.

The Prime Minister: We have regular consultations with the United States Administration on a wide range of topics, including central America.

Nicaragua and Nigeria

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if, during her recent meetings with (a) the President of Nicaragua and (b) the President of Nigeria, she raised the need to reduce the size of their respective armed forces;

(2) if she discussed human rights in their respective countries with (a) the president of Nicaragua and (b) the president of Nigeria during their visits last week;

(3) if she discussed democracy in their respective countries with (a) the president of Nicaragua and (b) the president of Nigeria during their visits last week.

The Prime Minister: President Ortega of Nicaragua was in the United Kingdom during a European tour to seek support for his actions following the commitments he made in the Esquipulas II and subsequent agreements in the central American peace process. The subjects of democracy, the rights of the opposition and the need to reduce the size of the armed forces were in consequence discussed extensively during my meeting with him.

President Babangida of Nigeria is in the United Kingdom on a state visit. My meeting with him focused on United Kingdom-Nigerian relations, economic matters and regional issues. In addition, I discussed with him the transition process towards civilian rule now under way in Nigeria.

Mr. Bernard Ingham

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report all the posts which come within the authority of Mr. Bernard Ingham as head of the Government information service.

The Prime Minister: The Head of the Government Information Service is responsible for the information officer management unit, comprising eight staff headed at grade 5. His wider duties in relation to the staff of the Government information service were set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 7 March at column 483.

Overseas Aid (Malaysia)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what was the content of the exchanges that took place between the British and Malaysian Governments over a new overseas aid package, preceeding the signing of the memorandum of understanding on arms sales in September 1988.

The Prime Minister: There are continuous exchanges between the British and Malaysian Governments on aid, including offers of support for projects under the aid and trade provision. The Malaysian Government are well aware from these exchanges that we continue to be willing to support eligible projects from this source.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will place in the Library the memorandum of understanding and letters between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Malaysia relating to an overseas aid package discussed in the autumn of 1988;

(2) what principles guided her discussions with the Malaysian Government prior to signing an agreement on an overseas aid package.

The Prime Minister: There is no memorandum of understanding between the British and Malaysian Governments on aid; offers of support are made for specific projects on a case-by-case basis.

Malaysian State Airline

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister on what basis she intervened to secure the Malaysian state airline, MAS, additional landing rights in Britain earlier in the current year.

The Prime Minister: The recent air services negotiations with the Malaysian Government were conducted by officials of the Department of Transport under the authority of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what were the compensation terms offered to British Airways for its agreement to increased landing rights for the Malaysian state airline, MAS.

The Prime Minister: As is normal in air services negotiations, the agreement with Malaysia was based on a broadly balanced package of opportunities for the airlines of both countries. British Airways has the opportunity to operate additional services between the United Kingdom and Malaysia and to work together with MAS to develop traffic on the route.

Arms Deal (Malaysia)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what risk has been created for the British Exchequer by the underwriting of the Malaysian arms deal by Government agencies; and if she will list the risk underwritten by each and every agency.

The Prime Minister: To the extent that ECGD becomes involved in supporting arms sales to Malaysia it will do so on the basis of its normal approach to the risks involved and its financial objective of operating its credit insurance schemes at no net cost to public funds. No other Government agencies will be involved in underwriting risks in connection with this business.

Tornado Aircraft (Malaysia)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister (1) over what period of time the payment for the Tornado aircraft, supplied to the Malaysian Government, is to be spread as specified in the memorandum of understanding signed in September 1988;

(2) why Tornado aircraft were sold to the Royal Malaysian air force at a unit cost of almost £40 million; and what is the unit price for the same aircraft purchased by the RAF;

(3) what knowledge she has of commissions paid in connection with the sale of Tornado aircraft to the Malaysian Government to (a) Prime Minister Maliativ Mohammed's Umno Barv party, (b) the Sultan of Johore, (c) the Sultan of Pahang and (d) to the ruler of Negri Sembilan.

The Prime Minister: Contracts have not yet been signed for the sale of Tornados to the Royal Malaysian Air Force. Such contracts would in any event be subject to commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Charles Powell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will now transfer Mr. Charles Powell from her office.

The Prime Minister: No.

SCOTLAND

Health and Social Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1979 the total health and personal social services (a) current expenditure (gross) and (b) capital expenditure (net); and if he will give those totals adjusted by the HCHS pay and price deflator.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information in the format requested is not fully available. As I have already indicated to the hon. Member in my letter of 30 March 1988, there is no index which relates to the movement of pay and prices within the Health Service in Scotland. The Department of Health maintains indices for pay and price movements in England but the composition of expenditure on hospital and community health services in Scotland —particularly the proportions accounted for by the various categories of staff costs—differs from that in England.

Details of expenditure broken down into current (gross) and capital (net), are given in the following tables.

Total expenditure on health and personal social services in Scotland

BMA (Negotiations)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who from his Department attended the negotiations between the Secretary of State for Health and the British Medical Association, the outcome of which was announced on 5 May.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Appropriate officials.

Health Care (Rural Areas)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his current plans to safeguard the provision of health care in rural areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposals in the Scottish new contract, published on 12 April (copies of which are available in the Library) were devised to take account of the special circumstances of Scottish doctors, and in particular those who practise in the less-populated areas. These proposals, which are reflected in the agreement announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 5 May, have been accepted by the profession's negotiators. This will ensure that patients in rural areas not only continue to receive the present high standards of health care, but will also be able to take advantage of the additional services which their GPs are encouraged to provide under the new arrangements.

GPs (List Sizes)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average general practitioner's list size that he is aiming to create if the proposals for Health Service reforms are implemented.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's proposals for Health Service reforms are not intended to create a national average list size for general medical practitioners in Scotland.

NHS Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce in Scotland pilot schemes to test the proposed Health Service reforms before full implementation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall be looking for progress on implementing some aspects of the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm 555), notably medical audit, to be made as quickly as possible. On other aspects, for example, self-governing hospitals and GP practice budgets, the pace will be influenced by the voluntary nature of the processes.

Asbestos Burning (Edinburgh)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to monitor the effects on patients and staff at Liberton and Southfield hospitals as a result of the burning of asbestos at the protein fractionation centre in south Edinburgh.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no evidence that the incineration of filters containing asbestos emitted harmful asbestos fibres. The protein fractionation centre, in conjunction with the Health and Safety Executive, is carefully examing the incineration procedure which was used until February. When the results of this examination are complete, it will be possible to assess whether there is a requirement to monitor the health of patients and staff at the local hospitals.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much material containing asbestos was burnt at Edinburgh's protein fractionation centre from 1979; and what steps were taken to evaluate the risk involved prior to the decision to incinerate materials.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The filters incinerated between 1979 and February 1989 (when incineration ceased) weighed about 15,500 kg and contained about 5,000 kg of asbestos. The protein fractionation centre has used asbestos filters in the manufacturing process for blood products since 1975. Used filters may contain potentially-harmful viral material and it is essential that the method of disposal effectively eliminates any hazards. In 1975, high temperature incineration in a multi-stage incinerator was adopted as the safest method of disposal of these and other biologically contaminated materials. This decision was taken in the wake of the serious hepatitis outbreak in Edinburgh (1969-71) and the recommendations of the subsequent Rosenheim report (1972) and was also supported by the local authority department of environmental health. In 1978 the World Health Organisation (WHO) promulgated the requirement that biological waste of this type must be incinerated or autoclaved.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he has any plans to review relevant landlord and tenant legislation in Scotland in the light of the proposals of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for changes in the control of public houses by the brewing industry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: While the Landlord and Tenant Acts of 1927 and 1954 do not extend to Scotland, I am considering the implications for Scotland of the relevant proposals in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer (Cm 651) in consultation with my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mathematics (Northern College)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions were given to the research team at Northern college dealing with the assessment of advancement programme on second round mathematics as to whether it could discuss with anyone the design and conduct of the 1988 research.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The contract with the Northern college is covered by the standard conditions governing the award of grants for projects in the assessment of achievement programme. The design and conduct of the 1988 assessment of achievement programme mathematics project was discussed with the project's steering committee and with the assessment of achievement programme central support unit at the Scottish Council for Research in Education. The research team described their work at the annual conference of the Scottish Educational Research Association in 1988.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether pupils in grant-aided schools were (a) tested in 1983 and (b) included by Northern college in the assessment of achievement programme 1988 sample survey of second round mathematics;

(2) what discussions took place involving the steering group responsible for the research programme covered by the Northern college on changes in performance at P4 and P7 between 1983 and 1988 before the interim report was requested.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which I gave on Friday 12 May 1989.

Parent Teacher Council

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for health and education met with the Scottish Parent Teacher Council in November 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I addressed the annual conference of the Scottish Parent Teacher Council on 5 November 1988.

Work-related Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount of money spent on work-related Government training schemes in each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The information which is available is given in the following table:

The figures given in the table are all provisional and rounded to the nearest £0·1 million. Expenditure was not disaggregated to a Scottish level until 1984-85.

Advertising

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which advertising agency has been chosen to deal with the Scottish Office advertising campaign.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 7 March 1989, at column 483.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the sum to be spent on Scottish Office advertising in the coming year 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 15 March 1989, at column 226.

Smoking (Children)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the proportion of children in Scotland who smoke; and what information he has on comparable figures for other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1986 the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys carried out, on behalf of the Health Departments, a third national survey of smoking among secondary school children (the 11-15 age group). Twelve per cent. of sampled pupils in Scotland said that they smoked regularly (at least one a week) and 5 per cent. occasionally (less than one a week). The equivalent figures for England and Wales were 10 per cent. and 5 per cent.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives are being taken in Scotland to discourage young people from smoking following the Prime Minister's announcement on 25 January of a £2 million per year campaign to reduce the number of children who smoke over the next four years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The announcement of 25 January referred to a five-year teenage anti-smoking campaign for England and Wales funded by the Department of Health and Health Education Authority. In Scotland the Scottish health education group will spend some £280,000 on anti-smoking material and campaigns during the current financial year. The Scottish Committee for Action on Smoking and Health will receive grant-in-aid of £40,000 in 1989-90. Both organisations undertake anti-smoking initiatives directed at the young.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who is responsible for the collection of information about (a) lead, (b) nitrates, and (c) other toxic chemicals in drinking water is Scotland; and what are the penalties for not properly discharging such responsibilities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the quality of public drinking water and related matters lies with the water authorities, the regional and islands councils. The district and islands councils carry out this function in relation to private water supplies. EC directive 80/778/EEC, the drinking water directive, requires regular monitoring of the quality of water intended for human consumption including the presence of lead, nitrates and other toxic substances. There are no specific penalties for failure to discharge these responsibilities.

The Water Bill now before Parliament provides for regulations to be made which will define the duties of the water authorities, including monitoring and recording the quality of drinking water and making the information publicly available. Regulations are now being prepared for consultation.

NHS Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the status of the Government's detailed proposals for changes to the general practitioners' terms of service and remunerations system in Scotland, in light of the agreement between the Secretary of State for Health and the British Medical Association announced on 5 May.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The agreement announced on 5 May was the outcome of negotiations to which my right hon. and learned Friend was party. I have welcomed it as dealing with all the major outstanding issues on the basis of the proposals I made to Scottish doctors on 12 April.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the decision announced on 5 May by the Secretary of State for Health that rural practices would be taken out of negotiations with the British Medical Association and referred to the central advisory committee on rural practice payments supersedes the announcements on rural practices contained in the new contract document published by his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The central advisory committee's remit does not extend to Scotland. The Scottish rural practices fund committee has kept the equivalent Scottish scheme under regular review and that will continue to be the case. The new contract issued by the Scottish Home and Health Department makes it clear that the Government consider that payments from the fund are well targeted to meet the needs of rural doctors in Scotland.

Road Improvements

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many road improvements have been carried out in Scotland between May 1979 to April 1989; where these projects were undertaken; what was the source of the funding; how many new products are planned at present; and what is the total value of each project completed, in progress and planned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 May 1989]: Information on trunk road schemes costing over £1 million is given in the following tables. Costs have not been provided for planned starts on an individual basis as these will vary depending on a scheme's actual year of start and other factors, but the total value of planned starts is estimated to be around £1,200 million. In addition to the schemes listed, a substantial number of schemes costing less than £1 million have been completed (to the value of approximately £70 million), are in progress or planned. On a small proportion of these a private sector contribution was made or is a possibility. It would require disproportionate effort to list all minor schemes completed since May 1979, in progress and planned.

In the same period some £1,097 million has been spent on new construction and improvement, including structural maintenance, of local roads (this total includes a provisional figure for 1987-88 and an estimate for 1988-89). Information on specific local schemes is not held centrally. Provision for the current and two following years is planned to be about £140 million in each year.

WALES

Companies (Jobs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions since June 1987 he has intervened when companies operating in Wales have been bought up by companies from outside Wales, leading to a transfer of jobs away from Wales; and under which powers he acted in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department is consulted by the Office of Fair Trading about merger cases that are being considered under the provisions of the 1973 Fair Trading Act and which involve companies that have an interest in Wales. Since June 1987 substantive representations have been made in relation to six cases so far as is known none resulted in a move of jobs from Wales.

NHS Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1979 the numbers of staff expressed as a whole-time equivalent and as actual full-time and part-time members in the categories (a) ancillary, (b) administration and clerical, (c) nurses and midwives and (d) professional and technical.

Mr. Grist: The requested information, which relates to 30 September each year, is given in the tables:

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number of acute beds available and (b) the number of non-acute beds available in each district health authority and SHA; and if he will give the national total for each year.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the table:

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the total health and personal social services (a) current expenditure (gross) and (b) capital expenditure (net); and if he will give those totals adjusted by the HCHS pay and price deflator.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is as follows:

Total Health and Personal Social Services

£ million

	Current expenditure (gross)	Capital expenditure (net)
1978-79	460·1	27·4
1979-80	544·3	29·9
1980-81	692·8	37·5
1981-82	779·2	45·8
1982-83	856·5	50·5
1983-84	913·3	54·2
1984-85	979·9	58·5
1985-86	1,047·6	59·5
1986-87	1,124·6	66·7
1987-88	1,252·7	69·8
1988-89	1,403·3	64·8

Separate pay and price factors are not maintained for Wales. The hospital and community health services pay and price deflator, maintained for England by the Department of Health, is an index of inflationary pressures on current expenditure in the hospital and community health services alone. It would be inappropriate therefore to apply this index to total health and personal social services expenditure.

Standard Business Rate

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the level of the standard business rate which will come into force in Wales in April 1990.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such estimate. It will not be possible to make an estimate until I have the results of the revaluation of non-domestic property.

European Tourist Year

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Wales tourist board will have a direct involvement in developing the European Tourism Year 1990.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Yes. The Wales tourist board is represented on both the United Kingdom steering committee and the United Kingdom national examining committee.

Work-related Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total amount of money spent on work-related Government training schemes in each of the years 1983 to 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following figures represent expenditure by the Manpower Services and the Training Commission on work-related Government training programmes in Wales in the relevant financial years. Records are kept on the basis of the standard financial year for accounting for Government expenditure. This year runs from 1 April to 31 March.

1983-84	44·2
1984-85	58·1
1985-86	55·8
1986-87	71·5
1987-88	79·6

Health Expenditure

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of expenditure in real terms in (a) Wales and (b) Gwent regional health authority annually since 1979 indicating what proportion of that expenditure relates to (i) wage inflation, (ii) debt charges, and (iii) committed capital expenditure.

Mr. Grist: It is assumed the hon. Gentleman wishes to compare expenditure in real terms by Gwent district health authority with that by all health authorities in Wales since 1979-80. The information is given in the table.

1987-88	109,122	6,910	742,014	60,570

Note: All figures are expressed at 1987-88 outturn prices. 1987-88 is the latest year for which information is available.
Source: Health Authorities Annual Accounts.

Health authorities' accounts do not disaggregate outturn expenditure on salaries and wages between sums attributable to pay inflation and sums attributable to changes in the numbers and mix of staffing. Health authorities do not raise finance from private sources and are therefore not subject to debt charges.

Hospital Wards

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital wards are not in use in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport due to staff shortages.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Medical Staff

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses were employed in (i) Newport (ii) Gwent and (iii) Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Grist: The available information is given in the table. Information on medical and dental staff is not centrally available below district health authority level. Nursing and midwifery staff figures are not available below district health authority level prior to 1980.

[2] No adjustment has been made for the change in working hours (from 40 to 37½ hours per week) during 1980.

[3] Based on NHS pay records for staff paid at the Royal Gwent, St. Woolos and Allt-yr-yn hospitals and at community pay units in Newport. It is not possible to adjust for staff paid at one unit working partly at another.

[4] Learners are excluded because they are mostly paid (ie recorded) at one central point and it is hence not possible to break doen their numbers by hospital.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest available figures for waiting lists in (a) Gwent and (b) Newport for (i) trauma, (ii) orthopaedic, (iii) general surgery and (iv) eye, ear and throat operations also in comparison with the other counties in Wales and in comparison with 1979.

Mr. Grist: Available information on in-patient and day case waiting lists is given in the table:

[3] Excludes figures for the University hospital of Wales.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he is proposing to reduce the hospital waiting lists in Gwent.

Mr. Grist: In order to assist Gwent health authority in reducing hospital waiting times in its district the Welsh Office has offered £220,000 to the authority for the continuation of the initiative in orthopaedics during the current financial year. In addition, Welsh Office officials will be meeting representatives of health authorities, including Gwent, to discuss the establishment of treatment centres as envisaged in the Welsh chapter of the White Paper "Working For Patients".

Hospitals (Gwent)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to allocate more funds to hospitals in Gwent.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend announced in January allocations for the current financial year. The authority's initial revenue cash allocation for 1989-90 is £127·4 million, an increase of 5·8 per cent. over last year; in addition the authority is expected to achieve cost improvements and generate additional income equivalent to a further 1·3 per cent. of its recurrent revenue allocation. The authority's capital allocation is £7·3 million, an increase of nearly 43 per cent. over 1988-89.

Community Charge (Injunction)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department's publications of the High Court decision to grant a temporary injunction to Greenwich borough council in respect of a Department of Environment leaflet on the poll tax; and whether he will make it his policy to delay the publication or distribution of any Welsh Office document on the poll tax pending a full hearing of the case.

Mr. Grist: The decision by the High Court relates solely to the leaflet produced by the Department of the Environemnt entitled "The Community Charge (the so-called Poll Tax) How It Will Work For You".

The bilingual leaflet "Your Guide to the Community Charge", which is being distributed in Wales, is separate and different. I have no plans to halt its distribution.

Overseas Residents

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been obtained from overseas residents in total, and in each of the health authorities, since the inception of the charging scheme.

Mr. Grist: The income received from overseas visitors by district health authorities in Wales since the inception of the charging scheme on 1 October 1982 has been as follows:

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Advertising air time purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years is commercially confidential.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Authorities (Fords)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the responsibility of water authorities or other bodies for the maintenance of fords.

Mr. Howard: Water authorities have no responsibility for the maintenance of fords. Where a ford has been dedicated as a highway maintainable at public expense, responsibility for its maintenance rests with the highway authority.

Advertising

Mr Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company.

Mr. Ridley: My Department advertised on commercial television as follows:
—in September 1984 at a total cost of £516,000 (including production charges)
—in April 1989 at a total cost of £1 million (including production charges)

No television advertising appeared between 1985 and 1988. The sums paid to individual stations is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ridley: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave earlier today because the sums paid to individual stations is a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Water Privatisation

Mr Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will pay the water bill incurred by the fire brigade putting out (a) domestic and (b) industrial fires once the water authorities are privatised.

Mr. Howard: Clause 79 of the Water Bill will prohibit water undertakers from charging for water taken from a public hydrant or from private premises for fire fighting purposes.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates, of his Department in total in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Ridley: Information in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. However, central DOE has paid the PSA for accommodation and services under the property repayment system (PRS) since 1 April 1984. Under these arrangements, annual charges for the accommodation occupied have been as follows:

Figures in brackets are costs per square foot

Year	Rent and rates		Total cost
	£ million	£	£ million	£
1984-85	22·9	(9·8)	26·7	(11·4)
1985-86	22·5	(10·1)	26·7	(12·0)
1986-87	18·2	(8·4)	22·5	(10·4)
1987-88	19·3	(8·7)	23·9	(10·7)
1988-89	19·7	(8·8)	25·7	(11·6)

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The Department of the Environment operates a cash-based system which enables Parliament to be satisfied that the amounts of cash voted to be spent on activities have been so spent. There has, therefore, been no overall need to maintain comprehensive up to date valuations of plant and equipment, the purchase cost of which is tightly controlled through the cash accounting system.

Rights of Way

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had to make a legal definition of the entire rights of way network legally defined by the year 2000.

Mr. Virginia Bottomley: A number of representations have been received supporting the Countryside Commission's objective that the rights of way network should be legally defined, properly maintained and well publicised by the end of the century.

Council Housing (Rents)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what effect ring fencing of the housing revenue account will have on the ability of councils (a) to set rents in their areas and (b) to control future rent rises; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he proposes to reduce housing subsidy to an authority which does not increase rents in line with Government policy; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he expects local authorities in deficit on the housing revenue account to increase rents twice in the year of account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In the new regime, my right hon. Friend will set an annual guideline rent increase for each local authority. Housing revenue account subsidy will be paid on the assumption, among other things, that the authority increases rent in accordance with the guideline. Subsidy for the year will not be reduced if the authority raises rents by a different amount. Local authorities will be free to set their own rents so long as they do not budget to make a deficit on their housing revenue account for any year. If, despite this, it appears during the year that a deficit is likely to arise on the account, the authority will be required to take all such steps as are reasonably practicable to avoid that outcome. In such a case it will be for the authority to decide whether a rent increase is necessary.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has for the expenditure by his Department on the further consultation period for the proposed HAT in Sunderland, from the publication of the consultant's report to the ballot of tenants.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has appointed a consortium led by Peat Marwick McLintock to discuss with local people the proposal for a trust in Sunderland. The cost of the contract will remain commercially confidential until it has been completed. No estimates have yet been made of the costs of a ballot which would be arranged by the Electoral Reform Society.

Assisted Private Purchase Schemes

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to grant the London borough of Croydon's application to administer an assisted private purchase scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The Department wrote to approve one scheme on 8 May, and will shortly be writing about two more.

Community Charge

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Ministers have delivered the leaflet "The Community Charge: The So-Called Poll Tax: How It Will Work For You" to private homes; and in what places.

Mr. Gummer: Two Ministers delivered the leaflet to homes. I delivered it in Westminster and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) in Kirkstall, Leeds.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the leaflets on the community charge/poll tax delivered on the morning of Wednesday 10 May to homes in Fife terrace, London N1, by the Post Office were delivered on the instructions of his Department.

Mr. John Gummer: The Post Office was contracted by the Central Office of Information, on the instructions of the Department of the Environment, to deliver a copy of the leaflet to every household in England. However, at approximately 6.30 pm on Tuesday 9 May the Post Office was instructed to discontinue delivery.

Water Pollution

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the effects on pollution levels of the granting to water authorities of lower discharge consents under the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: On 7 December I announced a capital programme costing around £1 billion to bring substandard sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents by March 1992. In line with established practice, water authorities may apply for time-limited discharge consents for these works to regularise current performance while improvements take place. The remedial programme is expected to lead to significant improvements in river quality and consent conditions no less stringent than those that currently apply will be reintroduced once improvements are completed.

In the interim, and as an additional environmental safeguard, the time-limited consents will incorporate new upper-tier conditions defining absolute maximum limits for specified pollutants.

The Water Bill will strengthen the framework for water pollution control. It will be for the new National Rivers Authority (NRA) to determine discharge consents and, in doing so, it will have a duty to achieve the statutory quality objectives to be set for all rivers.

Shopping Developments (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environent when he intends to announce his decision about planning applications for out-of-town shopping developments in Greater Manchester; and to which organisation and individuals this information has already been given by Ministers.

Mr. Chope: The decisions on these applications will be announced as soon as possible. A number of organisations and individuals, particularly applicants and their agents, have inquired about the expected decision date, but no details of inquirers have been recorded.

Lawyers

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many lawyers are retained by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The Department currently has 44 lawyers in post, including three part-timers.

Property Valuation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department or its agencies last carried out a valuation of its property assets; what the total property portfolio is worth in each standard region; and what charges for asset replacement are made.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 May 1989]: The PSA is responsible for the management of the civil estate vested in me and it is currently undertaking a valuation of the estate which will include an asset valuation.

This major exercise, which is being carried out by independent valuers, will not be completed until the end of the year.

Neither the depreciation of assets, nor the cost of replacing assets, are directly provided for in the existing annual vote structure.

Anti-competitive Practices

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 660, to the hon. Member for Copeland, he will list for each authority the nature of the complaints of alleged anti-competitive practices and the individual or organisation responsible for making the complaint.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 May 1989]: No. I do not propose to give such information about individual authorities while allegations are being investigated. Nor do I consider it relevant or necessary to name those making complaints. I do, however, intend to inform the House when I have used my powers of sanction under paragraph I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Dredged Aggregates

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the principal areas of dredging for aggregates.

Mr. Major: I have been asked to reply. The principal areas licensed by the Crown Estate Office for the purpose of dredging aggregates are as follows:

The Bristol Channel
Off Great Yarmouth
The mouth of the Humber
The mouth of the Thames
Around the Isle of Wight.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Short Brothers

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to improve (a) the security fence and (b) general security at the missile production facility belonging to Short's in Belfast.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 2 May 1989]: Since the theft in October last year from a Short's factory, there has been a review of security arrangements at all Short's establishments. A number of additional security measures, both physical and procedural, either have already been, or are being, implemented following that review. Security arrangements at all establishments belonging to Short's are the primary responsibility of the company, though my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State maintains, given his overall responsibility for security in Northern Ireland, a close interest in such matters.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to be in a position to announce the new owner of Short Brothers plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 11 May 1989]: I have now received detailed proposals from Fokker/GEC and Bombardier. The two proposals are different in nature but both offer considerable opportunities for Short's. It will take some time to evaluate them fully, but I am conscious of the need to end any uncertainty about the future of the company as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Energy Action

64. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the number of trainees undertaking community energy action work in draught-proofing and loft insulation to equal the number so engaged under the community programme in 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: No direct comparison can be made between the number of trainees in a particular occupational area under employment training and the number of participants that were engaged in such work under the community programme. The number of trainees in draughtproofing and loft insulation is determined by the demand for training in these and related occupational skills.

High Moor Pit (Inquiry)

65. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his response to the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into the fall of roof which occurred at High Moor pit on 13 January.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend welcomes the comprehensive report by British Coal and its recommendations, which were agreed by all sides of industry, the trade unions and by the Health and Safety Executive's mines and quarries inspectorate. I also understand that the recommendations are in the process of being implemented.

Industrial Democracy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, prior to the operation of the European single market, Her Majesty's Government will ensure that closer co-operation through industrial democracy exists between the organised work force and management in British industry.

Mr. Cope: The Government will continue to encourage voluntary systems for the involvement of all employees in the work of their companies.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the ethnic background data for YTS trainees as at (a) March and (b) October 1988 and (c) March 1989, separately, for each youth training scheme operating in each of the Training Agency areas of Greater London.

Mr. Cope: The information requested has been sent to the hon. Member and a copy placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the ethnic data for YTS trainees as at March and October 1988 and March 1989, separately for each YTS, both local and large company unit, operating in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire.

Mr. Cope: The information requested has been sent to the hon. Member and a copy placed in the Library.

Industrial Earnings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of industrial workers in the north-west earn less than average industrial earnings.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information, for April 1988, relates to full-time manual employees in the north-west, on adult rates of pay. The estimated percentage is about 58 per cent., broadly similar to the figure for Great Britain as a whole.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company;

(2) how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Cope: Information on TV expenditure in the form requested is not held by my Department; nor is it available centrally through the Central Office of Information and can be supplied only at a disproportionate cost. It is also commercially confidential.

Low Pay

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the removal of wages council legal protection for young people has had on low pay.

Mr. Nicholls: The removal of wages council minima has enabled employers to offer, and young people to accept, jobs at rates which would previously have been unlawful, and there is evidence that this has resulted in increased job opportunities for those under 21. It is not possible to measure the effect of this greater flexibility on pay levels, but there has been no general reduction in the earnings of young people in wages council trades. These have continued to increase in real terms.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people who receive a reduced unemployment benefit after finishing the enterprise allowance scheme drop their claims on its reference to a tribunal; and what proportion of those who do appear win their cases.

Mr. Lee: From October 1987 reduced rate unemployment benefit was abolished. Claimants whose unemployment benefit is disallowed by the adjudicating authorities following a period on the enterprise allowance scheme are not separately identified from other claimants whose benefit is disallowed. It is not possible, therefore, to provide the information requested.

European Tourism Year

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who are the representatives of the United Kingdom on the steering committee of the European Tourism Year 1990.

Mr. Lee: Each member state is entitled to two representatives on the steering committee. The United Kingdom representatives are Mr. Michael Medlicott, chief executive of the British Tourist Authority and Mrs. Julie Thakker, an official in the tourism branch of my Department.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current estimates of employees in employment at September 1987, December 1987, September 1988 and December 1988 by the following industry grouping (a) agriculture, forestry, fishing, (b) energy and water, (c) manufacturing, (d) construction, and (e) services by standard Great Britain region including Greater London; and in the same region how many employees in employment were women working part time.

Mr. Lee: The information appears in table 1.5 of the May 1989 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many restart interviews were conducted between December 1988 and March 1989 inclusive for each employment service region.

Mr. Lee: The number of restart interviews conducted in each employment service region between December 1988 and March 1989 is shown in the table:

Region	Number of interviews
Northern Region	55,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	76,000
East Midlands and Eastern	64,000
London and South East	169,000
South West	37,000
Wales	47,000
West Midlands	95,000
North West	118,000
Scotland	108,000
Great Britain	769,000

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, if a restart counseller refers a claimant to an adjudication officer because of what the claimant has written in their RR6 or said during the interview, the counsellor has to tell the claimant; whether the claimant can ask to see what the restart counsellor has said in the RR3; and whether the claimant is entitled to a copy of the RR3 to help them understand their position and, if necessary, correct any false information contained therein.

Mr. Lee: Restart counsellors do not refer claimants direct to the adjudication authorities. If a doubt arises about a claimant's availability for work the case is passed to the benefit office for referral to the adjudication officer if that is appropriate. Counsellors are instructed to tell claimants about the action that has been taken. Claimants can ask to see what is written on form RR3 and can be given a copy on request.

Work Trials

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether those long-term unemployed claimants who participate in work trials on employers' premises under the pilot job interview guarantee scheme will be designated on the same ways as ET and YTS trainees for the purposes of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975; and what rights they will have if they are discriminated against by an employer or they experience an accident at work.

Mr. Lee: Employers providing work trials will be required by contract with my Department to treat participants in the same way as their employees for the purpose of health and safety. It is also our intention that participants will be entitled to receive payments under the analogous industrial injuries scheme.

In providing the trial period, employers will be required by contract to ensure that no discrimination takes place which is rendered unlawful by either the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 or the Race Relations Act 1976.

The procedure covering ET and YTS trainees, to which the hon. Member refers, is not applicable to work trial participants.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether those long-term unemployed claimants who participate in work trials on employers' premises under the pilot job interview guarantee scheme will be able to receive the same discretionary increases to their income without it being deducted from their benefit, as do those claimants who participate in employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Participants in work trials will be reimbursed by the Department of Employment for travel and midday meal expenses incurred in undertaking the trial, up to maximum limits. These payments will not affect their benefit, although any other payments made in respect of the work trial could do so.

British Aerospace (Bracknell)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many jobs will be lost in Bracknell as a result of the closure of the British Aerospace site, and as to the percentage of the economically active population of Bracknell this represents.

Mr. Lee: I have seen press reports that about 2,000 jobs will be lost at the Bracknell site as a result of this closure. There is no up-to-date estimate of the economically active population of Bracknell.

Picketing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the law on picketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment", published on 20 March, states that the Government propose no change to the law on picketing.

Social Fund

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many projects in Scotland were either wholly or partly funded by the European Community social fund since 1979; what was the nature of these projects; and what was the total value of the grants.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 May 1989]: Information on which category or recommendation for projects funded in Scotland under the European social fund (ESF) is readily available only for the period since 1987. The information is as follows:

	Full priority	Part priority
1987	173	59
1989	182	119

All applications to the European social fund are for projects of vocational training or job creation measures. Data on the regional allocation of ESF have been collected only since 1985. The total value of grants to Scotland, excluding central Government schemes, for the period 1985-1988 is as follows:

1986	14,072,865
1987	16,774,846
1988	18,886,175

The amount allocated in 1989 has yet to be confirmed by the European Commission.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Pacific, African and south American rain forest holocaust is taken account of in the Community forestry programme.

Mr. Ryder: One of the main aims of the proposed forestry action programme is to reduce the Community's dependence on timber imports, thus making some contribution to the range of measures that will be needed to protect the tropical rain forests.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on which sources he relies for evidence on the absence of a link between the north American drought and the longer-term effects of botanical holocaust in the rain forests in central and south America.

Mr. Ryder: In conversation with scientists, I have gained the impression that there is no proof of a link between the north American drought this year and removal of the rain forests in central and south America. I cannot disprove the hypothesis of a link but nor am I aware that supporters of the hypothesis can prove that there is such a link.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates, of his Department in total, in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. However, the accommodation charge (which includes an opportunity cost rent, contribution in lieu of rates, plus an element to cover maintenance and minor works) paid to PSA in respect of properties on the civil estate occupied by my Department, and the area of occupation, in each of the past five financial years are as follows:

	Accommodation charge (£'000s)	Area of occupation ('000 square feet)
1984-85	31,036	8,308
1985-86	32,596	8,161
1986-87	30,128	7,764
1987-88	30,650	7,760
1988-89	31,664	6,509

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The purchasing system for plant and equipment operated by my Department is aimed at securing value for money and ensuring that the money is spent in accordance with Parliament's wishes. Periodic revaluations of plant and equipment are not required and do not feature in my Department's accounts. An estimate of replacement costs could be made only at disproportionate cost.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to introduce routine testing of the brains of all cows for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will consider banning the sale for human consumption of brains, thymus and spleen from all cull cows;

(2) what advice he has been given concerning health hazards arising from meat products from bovine spongifrom encephalopathy infected cattle being sold for human consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 27 February at columns 89-91.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what level in his Department's regional structure the number of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy is identified at monitored markets and slaughter houses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Cases are identified at divisional level.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cull cattle were slaughtered in the United Kingdom in 1988; and of those how many were slaughtered at EEC export approved slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We estimate that in 1988 of 670,000 cows and adult bulls were slaughtered in the United Kingdom. 470,000 of them at EC-approved abbatoirs.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist for the veterinary inspection ante-mortem of animals at (a) EEC export approved slaughterhouses and (b) non EEC export approved slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 April 1989, which appeared in column 695 of Hansard dated 14 April 1989.

Fish Landings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of fish landed and sold at Lowestoft, Hull, Grimsby, Peterhead and Aberdeen in the last three months for which figures are available has come from Icelandic-registered boats; and what has been the average daily price of plaice in these ports over this time.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The percentage of all fish landed at Hull and Grimsby which was landed by Icelandic-registered fishing vessels, based on provisional landing statistics, was as follows:

	February	March	April
Hull	30	64	39
Grimsby	21	49	26

There were no recorded landings by Icelandic-registered fishing vessels at Aberdeen, Peterhead or Lowestoft during this period.

The average daily price of plaice in £ per tonne, based on provisional landings statistics, was as follows:

	February	March	April
Hull	944	733	1,134
Grimsby	790	822	636
Lowestoft	837	864	864
Aberdeen	1,210	842	704
Peterhead	844	615	521

Icelandic Fish

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next Council of Ministers meetings the matter of Icelandic fish sold below market price in European ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We monitor offer prices of third country fish imported into the United Kingdom against the relevant Community reference prices. I can assure my hon. Friend that where we find low-priced imports justifying action within the terms of the Community's fish marketing regime, I shall raise the matter swiftly with the Commission and if necessary with my fellow Fisheries Ministers in the Community.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the import of Icelandic fish into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the future of North sea ports which handle Icelandic fish currently and after 1992.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Protocol 6 of the general trade agreement between the European Community and Iceland provides for certain fish products access to the Community at preferential rates of duty, subject in the case of frozen fish fillets to observance by Iceland of the Community's reference price. Further, the Community's reference price system provides for the Commission to take action to prevent disruption of the Community market if significant quantities of third country imports enter the Community below the appropriate reference price on three consecutive days.

The Icelandic fish trade into North sea ports is long established. I have no knowledge that this will change either before or after 1992.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet with his counterpart in Iceland to discuss the sale of Icelandic fish in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans for a meeting.

ADAS

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is proposing to take following the Bailey review of Agricultural Development Advisory Service laboratories in England and Wales.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 March 1989 at column 515.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the financial basis for his decision to reduce the number of Agricultural Development Advisory Service laboratories;

(2) which Agricultural Development Advisory Service laboratories and experimental farms in England and Wales he proposes to close in the current year and in each of the next three years.

Mr. Ryder: I cannot add anything to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 March 1989 at column 515.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the impact of cuts in agricultural research and development in the work of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service farms at Trawsgoed and Pwllpeirian.

Mr. Ryder: In answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 March 1989 at column 515 my right hon. Friend the Minister indicated that decisions on the future of ADAS research and development facilities depend on the industry's decisions on the work it is prepared to fund.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the regional analytical chemistry laboratories at Trawsgoed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 21 March 1989 at column 515 that the analytical chemistry laboratory at Trawsgoed would be closed in 1990-91 and that the Welsh Office is considering the possibility of alternative uses of the facility.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the employment consequences of closing the laboratories at Trawsgoed.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 11 May 1989 at columns 482-83.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the revenue targets set for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales for the last two years and the extent to which those targets have been met.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 9 May 1989 at column 372.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research projects currently undertaken at Pwllpeirian experimental farm.

Mr. Ryder: Work on the following five projects is currently being undertaken at Pwllpeirian experimental husbandry farm as a contribution to a national programme of research and development:

Reproduction and rearing of beef cattle
Reproduction, rearing and the nutrition of the ewe and suckling lamb.
Sheep genetics.
Grass and forage conservation.
Grass and legumes on hills and uplands.

Beef Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the total imports by volume and by country of beef and beef products into the United Kingdom during 1988 from (a) other EEC countries and (b) non-EEC countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The tables give details of United Kingdom imports during 1988 of fresh, chilled and frozen beef and veal, fresh, chilled and frozen beef offals and processed beef products in tonnes by exporting country as requested; the source is Eurostat.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work he is doing to establish the efficacy of food irradiation in dealing with salmonella and listeria contamination in children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The efficacy of food irradiation in severely reducing the numbers of pathogenic micro-organisms such as salmonella and listeria in poultrymeat has been well established in past years through numerous studies. There is no need for my Department to be involved in further work on this subject.

Dioxins

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has received from the New Zealand Government on their inquiry into dioxins and food packaging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have seen the announcement by the New Zealand Government stating that the levels of dioxin found in samples of cartoned milk there are not considered a risk for milk drinkers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now in a position to publish his report on the investigations into dioxins and food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The results of the work on dioxins in food carried out at my Ministry's food science laboratory will be made available shortly.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has had with the manufacturers of paper milk cartons on the subject of dioxins in milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: None. My officials are in close contact with manufacturers on this issue and they are being kept in touch with developments.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the advisory committee on pesticides has completed its review of danminozide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 3 May at column 124.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts of pesticides used each year since 1959.

Mr. Ryder: My Department has conducted sample surveys since 1965 on the use of pesticides for agricultural and horticultural crop protection. Similar arrangements have applied in Scotland since 1975. These published surveys have considered only a few crops each year, so a complete annual picture is not available. However, overviews have also been published from time to time and the following are the calculated annual averages for the periods in question. The quantities given are the amounts of active ingredients in the substance applied.

Estimates of annual use of pesticides for crop protection in agriculture and horticulture

(Tonnes of active ingredients)

England and Wales	1971-74	1975-79	1980-83
Insecticides	1,847	1,607	1,393
Fungicides	2,400	2,336	4,341
Herbicides	15,250	19,925	26,360
Others	2,565	1,629	3,439

Scotland		1975-79	1980-85
Insecticides	—	152	97
Fungicides	—	303	473
Herbicides	—	4,415	4,852
Others	—	21	72

For 1965-70 there are no overall data available. The cycle of surveys after 1983 (1985 for Scotland) is not yet complete.

Fertilisers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of fertilisers used each year since 1959.

Mr. Ryder: It is not possible to provide such information as the term "fertiliser" covers a wide range of substances, while fertilisers are available in many different forms and in different concentrations and have many uses not restricted to agriculture.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising which does not breach commercial confidentiality for each of the past five years;

(2) how much advertising air time his Ministry purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Nothing has been spent by my Department on commercial television advertisement in the last five years.

DEFENCE

Services (Age Entry Limit)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if consideration has been given to raising the upper age entry limit for the armed services as a measure to deal with the falling numbers of school leavers in the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Royal Navy is considering raising the upper age limit for officer entry but has no plans to change the age limit for Royal Navy ratings (currently 33) or Royal Marines other ranks (28).

The Army also keeps it upper age limits under review and has made adjustments upwards recently for some officer entrants. There is provision to accept officers with special skills (for example, doctors and dentists) on qualifications and experience with formal age limit and for other ranks to join up to age 33.

The current upper age limit for entry into the Royal Air Force is 39, except for some branches and trades where the physical demands of the work necessitate a lower age limit, for example the general duties (air) branch and the physical training instructor trade. There are no plans to change this, though there is provision to vary these limits in exceptional circumstances.

Greenham Common

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been arrested under the RAF Greenham common byelaws since 23 February; and how many have been charged with offences under those byelaws since that date.

Mr. Neubert: Between 23 February and 10 May 34 individuals were arrested and reported with a view to prosecution by summons. The numbers of arrests involved has totalled 331.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year since 1983 and for current year to date, the number of flights that have been authorised to fly over the Yorkshire mainland at a height less than that set out in joint service publication 318 and the United Kingdom military low-flying handbook, as provided in section 51(b) of the Air Force Act 1955; what were the comparable national figures for those years; what air forces were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions were imposed on military low flying in the Lockerbie area in the period following the Pan Am crash on 21 December 1988; what was the radius of the restricted area; and on what date the restrictions were lifted.

Mr. Neubert: In the wake of the Lockerbie crash the Ministry of Defence took a number of steps in order to ensure that the citizens of Lockerbie and its environs were not disturbed by the activities of military aircraft carrying out routine training, including low flying, during follow-up work to the Pan Am crash. The position is being kept under careful and sensitive review in the light of circumstances in the area but it is not our practice to release detailed information on flying restrictions in individual areas.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing (a) the total number of movements by low-flying military aircraft over southern Scotland in 1988, (b) the number of complaints about low-flying received from southern Scotland in 1988, (c) the number of complaints about low-flying received from the Borders area in 1988 and (d) the proportion of low-flying activity over the United Kingdom which took place over southern Scotland in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to undertake measurements of the noise generated by military aircraft flying at 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Neubert: Apart from measurements during the course of noise surveys in the immediate vicinity of various military airfields, there are at present no such plans.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) over what proportion of low flying area 13, military jet aircraft are permitted to fly at less than 250 ft minimum separation distance;

(2) over what proportion of low flying area 13, Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft are permitted to fly at 85 ft minimum separation distance.

Mr. Neubert: Flying below 250 ft minimum separation distance (msd) is only permitted in that part of low flying area 13 which is included within the Borders tactical training area and only when operational low-flying training is taking place. As with all operational low-flying training the lowest minimum separation distance permitted is 100 ft.

721 Signals Unit, RAF

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the functions of Number 721 signals unit, Royal Air Force.

Mr. Neubert: Number 721 signals unit controls the electronic warfare training range located at RAF Spadeadam, Cumbria, which provides a realistic electronic warfare training environment for the training of RAF and other NATO aircrew.

Military Aircraft (Supersonic Flight)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom where supersonic flight by military aircraft is permitted over land, giving the minimum permitted altitude for such flights in each case.

Mr. Neubert: Military aircraft are not permitted to exercise at supersonic speed over land in the United Kingdom.

Noise Levels

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the definitions of the noise level measurement systems (a) LA, (b) LOASP, (c) LPN, (d) LTPN, (e) LEPN, and (f) LAX; and which of these systems of measurement was used in (i) the figures provided in his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 22 March, Official Report, columns 617-18 and (ii) the figure of 125 dB (A) used in his Department's policy on noise compensation arrangements.

Mr. Neubert: The systems listed are defined as follows:

(a) LA—maximum 'A' weighted sound pressure level;
(b) LOASP—overall 'A' weighted sound pressure level;
(c) LPN—perceived noise level;
(d) LTPN—Tone-corrected perceived noise level;
(e) LEPN—effective perceived noise level;
(f) LAX—single event sound exposure level;

The 'LA' system of measurement was used in the figures provided in the reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 22 March, Official Report, columns 617-18 and in the figure of 125 dB(A) used in the Ministry of Defence noise compensation policy.

RAF Jaguar (Incident)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and circumstances of the accident to an RAF Jaguar near St. Abbs on 13 April.

Mr. Neubert: During a routine training exercise on 13 April, a Royal Air Force Jaguar GR1A aircraft stationed at RAF Coltishall crashed into Lumsdaine cliff near St. Abb's head, killing the pilot. A board of inquiry has been established to investigate the cause of the accident, with a view to preventing a recurrence. A summary of its findings will be published in the usual way and a copy will be sent to the hon. Member, as I undertook when I wrote to him on 13 April.

Iraqi Pilots

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Iraqi pilots have been trained by the Royal Air Force over each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: This information is confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Iraq.

Nuclear Tests (Compensation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost so far to his Department of contesting the claims for compensation of the nuclear test injuries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information is not readily obtainable and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the research commissioned by his Department into the relationship between cancer and radiation in the last 30 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department keeps under review studies that might be appropriate to workers involved with radiation undertaken by the various organisations specialising in cancer research and epidemiology. It has also commissioned studies in four areas, which are:

1. Mortality and Cancer Incidence in United Kingdom Participants in the United Kingdom Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon Tests and Experimental Programmes. (NRPB—R214 dated January 1988).
2. MRC study of Mortality of AWE workers.
3. The current MRC study of Occupational Health in the Royal Naval Submarine Service.
4. Part sponsorship of a new epidemiological analysis covering the combined nuclear industries.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of multiple myeloma amongst the people on the ship HMS Scarborough, which was present at the nuclear tests, were found by the National Radiological Protection Board in its study of the mortality of nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: HMS Scarborough was a meteorological data gathering ship and was on station in August and September 1958 to the north of Christmas Island at distances never less than 38km from the points of detonation.

At no time was she, members of her crew or others on board her exposed to ionising radiation from the bursts, or from fall out, nor did she sail in waters contaminated with fall out at any levels above the normal background of the South Pacific area.

The NRPB identified one case of multiple myeloma amongst those serving on HMS Scarborough during this period.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has refused to disclose any documents requested by the lawyers of the nuclear test veteran, Mr. Pearce, and other veterans seeking compensation.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has not to date refused to disclose any documents requested by the lawyers of the nuclear test veterans seeking compensation. In the case of Mr. Pearce, however, his lawyers have been advised that there might be documents which, for security reasons, cannot be released, although every effort will be made to release relevant parts of those documents.

Nuclear Tests (Compensation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department provided information about radioactive levels at the British atomic test in 1950, to the Australian Supreme Court which awarded £300,000 compensation to an Australian present at the atomic tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: Copies of United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and Ministry of Defence reports which had previously been made freely available to Her Majesty's Government of the Commonwealth of Australia on many past occasions, were available to the Supreme Court of New South Wales which dealt with the civil claim in question.

Some United Kingdom citizens, including one who is currently a senior Ministry of Defence officer, who had been present in the tests in 1953 and 1956, gave evidence before the court on a personal basis, on factual matters on which they had a direct personal knowledge. This included information on the radioactive levels at Emu field in the evidence given by the current Ministry of Defence officer.

Nigeria (Arms Sales)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of arms sales to Nigeria for each of the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to give details about arms sales to particular countries.

Submariners

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Ministry has sought or has been sent any evidence indicating that the health of sailors in nuclear submarines is significantly different from that of sailors in non-nuclear submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. There is no evidence to suggest any difference in the health of sailors in nuclear submarines compared with those in non-nuclear submarines.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information has been given to submarine sailors regarding the objectives of the study of their health and the findings so far; and if he is proposing to make available to sailors all the information obtained by the study.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No advance information to sailors about the Medical Research Council study, was either given or considered necessary. The study was commissioned by the MOD purely as a scientific study to examine all the possible medical effects of the machine-manufactured submarine environment, and was not specifically aimed at any particular aspect. The study is still in progress and it is too early to comment on any possible findings. On completion of the study report, non-classified information will be available in medical libraries.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information regarding their health has been provided to individual sailors for them to discuss with their general practitioners.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: While individual sailors are in the service, advice from the Medical Officer/General Practitioner is always available. When they leave the service, there is a standard procedure for the release of copies of the medical documents to the nominated civilian GP for the puposes of treatment. The radiation dose records of those serving submariners designated as radiation workers can be released to the individuals on request, and are forwarded as a matter of course when they leave the service, in accordance with the "Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985".

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the study of the health of submariner sailors began; when it is expected to end; what interim reports have there been; and what are the objectives of the study.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The study into mortality and morbidity amongst submariners began in 1987, and will be completed in 1990. No interim reports have been issued because the first year was taken up with identifying the survey population. We are now looking at the service health records of those who have retired from the Royal Navy. The Institute of Naval Medicine is monitoring the progress of the study, but the design and conduct of the study remain independent, and in the hands of the Medical Research Council. The purpose of the study is to seek further confirmation, by an independent body, that service in submarines is not detrimental to the health of naval personnel. The study was not initiated in response to any perceived or anticipated medical problem.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the design of the study of the health of submarine sailors is such that it would show whether or not the health of sailors in nuclear submarines is significantly different from that of sailors in non-nuclear submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aim of the study, which will include personnel from both types of submarine, is to study the effect on people of working for long periods in an artificially-controlled environment. Comparison will be made with other sailors and other similar age groups in the civilian population.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much advertising air time his Ministry purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: Information on television advertisements in the form requested is commercially confidential.

Ship-Town Links

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what links each of the following Royal Navy ships have with towns or cities in the United Kingdom; what is the nature of each ship to town link; and what are the annual costs involved to the Royal Navy of such links: (i) HMS Resolution, (ii) HMS Repulse, (iii) HMS Renown, (iv) HMS Revenge, (v) HMS Invincible, (vi) HMS Illustrous, (vii) HMS Ark Royal, (viii) HMS Birmingham, (ix) HMS Newcastle, (x) HMS Glasgow, (xi) HMS Cardiff, (xii) HMS Exeter, (xiii) HMS Southampton, (xiv) HMS Nottingham, (xv) HMS Liverpool, (xvi) HMS Manchester, (xvii) HMS Gloucester, (xviii) HMS Edinburgh, (xix) HMS York, (xx) HMS Broadsword, (xxi) HMS Battleaxe, (xxii) HMS Brilliant, (xxiii) HMS Brazen, (xxiv) HMS Boxer, (xxv) HMS Beaver, (xxvi) HMS Brave, (xxvii) HMS London, (xxviii) HMS Coventry, and (xxix) HMS Sheffield.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ship to town/city links are as follows:

	Town/City
HMS Resolution	Burton-on-Trent
HMS Repulse	Rotherham
HMS Invincible	City of Durham
HMS Illustrious	The Cinque Ports
HMS Ark Royal	Leeds
HMS Birmingham	Birmingham
HMS Newcastle	Newcastle
HMS Glasgow	Glasgow
HMS Cardiff	Cardiff
HMS Exeter	Exeter
HMS Southampton	Southampton
HMS Nottingham	Nottingham
HMS Liverpool	Liverpool
HMS Manchester	Manchester
HMS Gloucester	Gloucester
HMS Edinburgh	Edinburgh
HMS York	York
HMS Broadsword	Chester
HMS Battleaxe	Newport, Gwent
HMS Brilliant	Tunbridge Wells
HMS Brazen	County Durham
HMS Boxer	Trafford, Manchester
HMS Beaver	Bolton
HMS Brave	Waveney District Council
HMS London	City of London
HMS Coventry	Coventry
HMS Sheffield	Sheffield

HMS Renown and HMS Revenge are not currently affiliated to a town or city.

Much of the activity associated with these affiliations is concerned with charitable work. Each ship is connected with at least one local charity and makes considerable contributions to it by means of voluntary fund-raising activities contained within its already busy programme. Many of the ships have been granted honorary freedom of their affiliated towns and their companies are honorary freemen. These affiliations are greatly valued by both sides.

The precise cost to the Royal Navy of these affiliations is not recorded separately from that of other activities and would involve disproportionate effort to calculate. The costs are, however, likely to be small, consisting largely of the cost of public transport to visit towns and cities not accessible by sea approximately once every two years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people in receipt of invalidity pension who have an income from an occupational pension scheme.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that in 1986, the latest period for which information is available, about 300,000 invalidity pensioners also had some income from an occupational pension.

Family Credit

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the introduction of family credit has affected the incomes of those families at the bottom end of the income scale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Family credit is a much more generous benefit than family income supplement which it replaced. For example, a family with three children aged nine, 11 and 13, claiming since 10 April, would normally be entitled to family credit of £66·70 a week if their net income was below the threshold of £54·80; about £42 a week if their net income was £90; about £24 a week if their net income was £115; and about £7 a week if their net income was £140. Family credit is now in payment to over ¼ million working families at an average award of over £25 a week. We are currently carrying out a major campaign to increase awareness of this very worthwhile benefit.

Terminally Ill People (Allowances)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to announce a decision about the recommendation of the social security advisory committee on the allowances paid to the terminally ill.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies to the hon. Members for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) and for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 6 March at columns 585-86.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on television advertisements in the form requested is commercially confidential.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his future plans for the method of payment of benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The main focus of the Department's efforts to improve service to the public in the area of paying benefits is currently through the massive extension of computers to local offices. The Department is also striving to encourage people to have their benefits paid direct to bank accounts. This is cheaper, more convenient for many, and reduces the risk of fraud. We have no intention to adopt any method of payment which requires the use of plastic cards but we will continue to examine whether such methods offer further advantages.

Sick Pay

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress on the revision of the employers' guide to statutory sick pay and associated forms.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A new package of leaflets about statutory sick pay was issued to all employers in February 1989 for use from April 1989. This included "A Quick Guide to SSP" and a revised "Employers Manual". New statutory sick pay forms were introduced from the same date.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates of his Department in total, in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1 April 1984 the Department has paid most of its property costs to the Property Services Agency of the Department of the Environment. This payment, known as the accommodation charge, consists of rent, rates, retained maintenance and administration. The rent figures quoted include opportunity cost rents determined by the Property Services Agency. The Department has direct responsibility for certain minor works, maintenance, and internal redecoration. Expenditure for these items has been included in the total accommodation costs figure shown in the table.

Up to March 1988 expenditure for new construction and other major capital works was the responsibility of the Property Services Agency. From April 1988 responsibility has been divided between the Department and the Property Services Agency but expenditure figures for 1988-89 are not yet available. These costs are therefore not included in the table. Information prior to 1 April 1984 is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Rent	77,772	4·45	68,624	4·06	63,193	3·87	62,596	3·91	60,624	3·79
Rates	40,589	2·32	35,852	2·12	32,662	2·00	32,693	2·04	33,912	2·12
Total Accommodation costs	170,118	9·73	140,583	8·31	123,323	7·56	121,386	7·58	120,850	7·55

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the rules of Government accounting the Department operates cash-based systems which enable Parliament to be satisfied that amounts of cash voted to be spent on certain activities have been so spent. There has therefore been no need to maintain comprehensive up-to-date valuations of plant and equipment, the purchase cost of which is tightly controlled through the cash accounting system and plant and equipment asset charges are not entered in the accounts.

Benefits (Assessments)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit cases, over the past five years, have required further review, due to errors in the initial assessment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently employed by his Department for the purposes of assessing benefit claims; and if he will express this as a percentage of the total employed by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not hold information in the precise form requested. A wide variety of benefit claims are assessed in the Department's local offices, our central offices at Newcastle and Blackpool and the transitional payment unit in Glasgow. On 1 May 1989, 71,454 staff (90 per cent. of the total departmental staff) were employed in these offices. As well as dealing with benefit claims these staff also handle general inquiries and other aspects of departmental business.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many nuclear test veterans or their widows have received payments because of suffering or death from (a) leukaemia and (b) multiple myeloma; how many have applied and been rejected; and what are the criteria for acceptance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: One war disablement pension and six war widow's pensions have been awarded because service men who took part in nuclear tests contracted or died of leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic leukaemia) or multiple myeloma. The criteria for the award of a pension are that the service man contracted, or died of, either of these two conditions and was present at a nuclear test and therefore no claims which satisfy these criteria are rejected.

Housing Benefits

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to transfer the cost of housing benefits for council house tenants to local authority housing revenue accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government's proposals in the Local Government and Housing Bill for a new financial regime for local authority housing in England and Wales provide for a new housing revenue account subsidy to replace a number of existing central Government subsidies, including rent rebate subsidy. Where the subsidy assessment shows that an authority would, in other respects, be capable of making a surplus on the account, this surplus would be offset against the housing revenue account subsidy. With this exception, rent rebate expenditure would continue to be funded by the Exchequer. Subject to parliamentary approval of the Bill, the new arrangements would take effect from 1 April 1990.

Elderly People

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount of supplementary benefit/income support payments for residential care for elderly people, nationally and for each social security region, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the estimated expenditure nationally on payments of supplementary benefit/income support to elderly people in private and voluntary residential care homes. I regret that information on a regional basis is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Before December 1985 data were not collected in the form requested.

Source: December 1985, May 1986, May 1987 and May 1988 Quarterly Statistical Inquiries.

Note: The amounts for 1985-87 relate to supplementary pensions, and the one for 1988 to payments of income support to people aged 60 or more.

Appeals Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish a table showing the number of appeals heard by social security appeal tribunals and the number decided in the claimant's favour, the number decided in favour of the adjudication officer and the number adjourned in each quarter of 1988, broken down by subject of appeal.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest national administrative statistics available on social security appeal tribunals relate to appeals heard in the third quarter of 1988. Information is provided in the tables for the quarters ending March, June and September 1988.

Pensioners' Income

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the income of pensioners with no other source of income than state benefits and excluding housing benefit payments as a proportion of the average earnings of all male workers in each year since 1974.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested cannot be produced on a consistent basis for each year since 1974. The table shows the requested information on a consistent basis for the available years.

Pensioners' Average Gross Income Less Housing Benefit as a Percentage of Average Male Earnings

	Percentage
1984	25
1986	24

Note:
1. Pensioners are defined as tax units with no private income.
2. Prior to 1983 Housing Benefit was contained within Supplementary Benefit.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, further to his reply on 4 May, Official Report, column 220, he will categorise the reasons for the remaining social fund loan refusals and community care grant refusals for the year 11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest provisional estimates of all reasons for refusal for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 March are set out as follows:

Reasons for refusal of Social Fund loans and grants 1988-89

	Loans		Grants
	Number of times reason given	As a percentage of all refusals	Number of times reason given	As a percentage of all refusals

Note: Percentages add to more than 100 because an individual application may be refused for more than one reason.

Benefit Claims (Women)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of and how many (a) supplementary benefit in 1987-88 and (b) income support in 1988-89 claims from couples were made by women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However, the most recent information available indicates that, in May 1987, of all supplementary benefit claimants with partners, 18,994* or 1·8 per cent. were women. We estimate that, of all income support claimants with partners in May 1988, about 25,000 or 3 per cent. were women.

*Source: May 1987 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Benefits (Young People)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the changes in social security provision since May 1979 which have affected the entitlement of (a) 16 to 17-year-olds, (b) 18 to 20-year-olds and (c) 21 to 25-year-olds to supplementary benefit or any other benefit or which have affected the entitlement to any benefit of their parents.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Child Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of doubling the value of child benefit; and what would be the cost if the benefit at this new level were made part of taxable income and the saving on other social security payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Precise costs and savings would depend on the assumptions made for the calculation of social security benefits other than child benefit. In broad terms, the orders of magnitude might be as follows:

	£ billion
Child Benefit Cost	4·5
Saving in income related benefits and child dependency increases	1·1
Increase in income tax revenue	1·9
Net Cost	[1]1·6

[1]The figures do not sum due to rounding.

Household Income

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, 20 February, Official Report, column 481, what is the net income after the Budget proposals have come into effect (i) after housing costs of a married man with children aged 13 and 16 years earning (a) £104 and (b) £105 per week, (ii) of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years paying average rent and rates as used in the tax benefit model tables earning (a) £65 per week and (b) £80 per week, (iii) after benefits of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £60 per week gross and (b) £140 per week gross, (iv) under current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years with gross earnings of (a) £65 per week and (b) £105 per week and (v) under the current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £80 per week and (b) £90 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 24 April 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

	Gross earnings £	£
Net income after housing costs[1] assessed on 1989-90 benefits national insurance contributions (post October) and tax rates and thresholds
(i) married man with children 13 and 16 years
(a)	104	113·01
(b)	105	113·21
(ii) married man with children aged 3, 8 and 11
(a)	65	114·51
(b)	80	115·12

	Gross earnings £	£
Total net income[2] assessed on 1989-90 benefits national insurance contributions (post October) and tax rates and thresholds
(iii) married man with children aged 4 and 6
(a)	60	127·03
(b)	140	135·99
Total net income[2] assessed on 1989-90 benefits national insurance contributions 1988-89 tax rates and thresholds
(iv) married man with children aged 3, 8 and 11
(a)	65	144·99
(b)	105	148·54
(v) married man with children aged 4 and 6
(a)	80	127·77
(b)	90	128·08

Note: The assumptions used are those in the 1988 tax benefit models which have been adjusted in line with prices to reflect the position in 1989.

[1] "Net income after housing costs" is calculated by adding together the various elements in a family's weekly income (earnings, social security benefits and housing benefit) and deducting certain outgoings (income tax, national insurance contributions and rent and rates'.

[2] "Total net income" is calculated by adding to take home pay (gross earnings minus tax and national insurance) social security benefits and housing benefit.

Community Charge

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, in respect of the community charge, how many decision notices (NHB2(CC)) have been sent to district councils by the local offices of the Department of Social Security in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for the number of decision notices issued are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

General Practitioners (Limited Practice Allowance)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he sought or has available as to the effects, particularly in areas of rapid population growth, of his proposals to discontinue the limited practice allowance for general practitioners; and what savings he expects from implementation of such a policy.

Mr. Mellor: Our new contract proposal for raising the qualifying threshold for basic practice allowance from a minimum of 100 to 400 patients has now been agreed with the general medical services committee's negotiators. The proposal will strengthen general practitioners' commitment to the provision of general medical services, and provide an incentive to general practitioners to build up their lists. For general practitioners providing essential services who are unable to attract at least 400 patients the present inducement allowance arrangements will apply. In areas of development, where, for example, a new housing estate is being built, a general practitioner may be able to claim an initial practice allowance which will provide sufficient remuneration until he or she has built up his or her list.

Because fees and allowances are set to deliver to the profession as a whole the level of remuneration recommended by the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration, no savings to the Government arise from this proposal.

National Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1979 the total health and personal social services (a) current expenditure (gross) and (b) capital expenditure (net); and if he will give those totals adjusted by the HCHS pay and price deflator.

Mr. Mellor: The table sets out gross current and net capital expenditure on health and personal social services in cash terms for the period from 1978-79 to 1988-89. The HCHS pay and price deflator is an index of inflationary pressures on current expenditure in the hospital and community health services alone. It would be inappropriate therefore to apply the index to total health and personal social services expenditure.

Total health and personal social services expenditure

	(i) Gross current £ million cash	(ii) Net capital £ million cash
1978-79	7,423	412
1979-80	8,885	465
1980-81	11,439	626
1981-82	12,747	744
1982-83	13,950	763
1983-84	14,863	805
1984-85	15,884	871
1985-86	16,770	921
1986-87	18,123	943
1987-88	20,053	922
[1]1988-89	22,296	974

IVF Treatment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that the treatment for in vitro fertilisation in the South West regional health authority area is available free of charge for patients living in north Devon as it is for patients living in Bristol.

Mr. Freeman: Decisions about the priority and resources to be given to infertility services as a whole, and the place of in vitro fertilisation (IVF) programmes within them, are matters for district health authorities. They are in the best position to make such decisions in the light of local needs and circumstances.

An IVF service with provision for free treatment has recently been introduced in north Devon, as a joint scheme between the health authority and the voluntary sector.

Head Lice

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has received about the incidence of head lice infestation among primary school children; and what advice his Department is offering to local education authorities.

Mr. Freeman: Information about the incidence of head lice infestation is not available in the precise form requested. However, we do have the following details:

Health surveillance by nurses: maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools
Number of infestations[1]

	1987-88 England
Number of pupils examined (thousands)	4,546·3
Number of pupils found to be infested (thousands)	91·4
Infested pupils as a percentage of the maintained school population	1·27

[1] Infestations include head lice, vermin, scabies, ringworm, impetigo and verrucae.

Responsibility for the control of head lice infection among pupils lies with individual health authorities through the school health services. It is for them to determine the policy for dealing with this problem in the light of local circumstances. Many have stopped routine head inspections and are now adopting more positive practices through health education programmes and advice to parents and children on head lice infestation and how to deal with the problem.

Pain

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has as to what proportion of pain sufferers recorded as suffering from pain of over three months duration are over the age of 60 years; and what provision is being made for them;

(2) what provision is being made under the National Health Service to help pain sufferers;

(3) what information he has as to how many patients at any given time are recorded as suffering from pain lasting for three or more months which is unrelieved or only marginally alleviated by treatment.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. Relief of pain is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctors responsible for the care of the patient. Some health authorities do provide pain clinics. This is a matter for local decision in the light of the health authority's assessment of local needs and priorities.

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates, of his Department in total, in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Freeman: Property costs for premises occupied by the Department are incurred by the Property Services Agency.

For the NHS, expenditure in England on rent and contributions in lieu of rates is as follows:

	Rents £ 000 (cash)	Contributions in lieu of rates £ 000 (cash)
1983-84	20,752	127,190
1984-85	21,951	136,952
1985-86	21,375	148,833
1986-87	22,365	168,055
1987-88	24,697	169,965

These figures, which cannot be related to the floor areas, are taken from the annual accounts submitted to the Department. They include expenditure recorded by regional and district health authorities, the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and sums within the administration expenses of family practitioner committees. The costs of certain other special health authorities and bodies comprising the NHS, and payments made to medical practitioners and others contracted to provide family practitioner services, are excluded. Figures are not available for the replacement of assets.

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health, like most other Government Departments, operates cash-based systems which enable Parliament to be satisfied that amounts of cash voted to be spent on certain activities have been so spent. There has therefore been no overall need, apart from those limited areas where repayment transactions are conducted, to maintain comprehensive up-to-date valuations of plant and equipment, the purchase cost of which is tightly controlled through the cash accounting system and plant and equipment asset replacement charges are often not entered in the accounts.

For the NHS a valuation of all assets owned by the NHS, including plant and equipment, will be unertaken later this year as part of the preparation for the proposed introduction of a capital charging system.

Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cancers are recognised as being attributable wholly or partly to radiation; and if he will list them;

(2) what methods are used to identify whether or not a cancer can be caused or aggravated by radiation.

Mr. Freeman: I am advised that most of the information available on the risk of cancer from exposure to radiation has been drawn from epidemiological studies. Groups such as the survivors from Hiroshima and Nagasaki have been shown to have an increased risk of developing some forms of cancer some years after being exposed to large doses of radiation. Corroborative evidence has been drawn from studies of other groups such as those given radiation therapy for a variety of diseases, and from animal studies. This information is contained in the recent report from the United Nations scientific commission on the effects of atomic radiation (UNSCEAR) (Official Records: forty-third session—supplement No. 45 (A/43/45) a copy of which I will place in the Library shortly. At present, there are no chemical, biological or physiological methods which can determine whether a given cancer is primarily caused by radiation, by another factor, or by a combination of factors.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what collaboration there has been with experts in other countries regarding the identification of cancers caused or aggravated by radiation; and if he will detail the consultation there has been with United States experts.

Mr. Freeman: Advice to the Government on the effects of radiation is provided by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB). The board's advice on the effects of exposure to radiation on the incidence of cancer is based on a review of all the information available from national and international sources. Some of these sources include the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP), the United Nations scientific commission on the effects of atomic radiation (UNSCEAR), and the United States' commission on the biological effects of ionising radiation (BEIR).

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research commissioned into the relationship between cancer and radiation in the last 30 years.

Mr. Freeman: The following list shows the current research directly funded by the Department.

(a) Analysis of cancer incidence in young people in small areas.
(b) Incidence of Leukaemia in west Berkshire.
(c) Geographical studies of Childhood Cancer incidence.
(d) Investigation of the effect of Radon in houses.
(e) Microscopy studies of persorption of radionuclides through the wall of the gut.
(f) Study of the amount of radioactivity which passes into foetal tissue via the placenta.
(g) Investigation of the radiosensitivity of bone marrow stem cells.

A full list of such research over the last 30 years is not readily available. However, the right hon. Member may wish to consult the handbooks of research and development published annually. Copies are available in the Library.

For information on research undertaken for the Department by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, I refer the right hon. Member to the authority's radiation protection research annual report 1988 (AERE R 13204), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospital Costs

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average occupancy and cost per bed-night for teaching hospitals, district general hospitals and community hospitals in (a) England, (b) the South West regional health authority and (c) Cornwall district health authority area.

Mr. Freeman: For information on average occupancy and costs by types of hospital in England and in the south western region I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1986-87)—copies of which are held in the Library. The publication also includes tables providing some information about teaching hospitals and for information specific to hospitals within the area of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of that authority.

We intend to publish information on the financial year 1987-88 in the summer.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals which have applied to him expressing an interest in becoming self-governing trusts.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply of 8 May to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) at column 321.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to organise a ballot of the residents of Bassetlaw to decide whether they are in favour of the Bassetlaw hospital, Worksop, being run as a self-governing trust.

Mr. Mellor: No, but if an application for self-governing status is made, I will look to Trent regional health authority to seek the views of all those with an interest, including local residents.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposed hospital trusts will be allowed to retain the proceeds from any asset sales.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, since the assets will be vested in the trusts. The Secretary of State will have a reserve power to prevent the sale of an asset if, in his opinion, the disposal would be against the public interest.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations have taken place between the Walsall health authority and his Department concerning hospitals in the Walsall area opting out of the existing National Health Service management structure.

Mr. Mellor: None, but if a formal application is made for hospitals in Walsall to become self-governing I will look to West Midlands RHA to seek the views of all interested parties.

Dentists

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conditions are recognised as occupational diseases in dentists working within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: There is no list of conditions which are recognised as occupational diseases in dentists working within the National Health Service.

To qualify under the NHS compensation and injury benefit schemes a dentist must show that any condition suffered by him was contracted in the course of his NHS employment and must be attributable to that employment. Each case is considered on its merits.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if under notice FPN 472 general practitioners will be held responsible, in post-treatment disputes with the dental reference service, for any acts or omissions of a dentist working within the hospital or community services if such treatment was provided as part of a course of other treatment for which a practitioner has had to sign a certificate of dental fitness.

Mr. Freeman: The obligations on a dentist providing general dental services to make a patient dentally fit are set out in full in schedule 1 of the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Regulations 1973. The guidance given in FPN 472 does not alter these obligations.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, under the arrangements for the funding and payment for dentures and bridges provided through hospital and community dental services under notice FPN 472, who will be responsible for the collection of patient charges and collection of bad debts.

Mr. Freeman: The continuing health authority responsibility for collection of patient charges (and bad debts) for dentures and bridges provided through the hospital and community dental service was not affected by FPN 472. Circular HC(FP)(89)5/HN 89/8 issued in March 1989 did, however, provide revised guidance on the calculation of such charges.

Contraception

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the total current annual cost to the National Health Service of special payments made to general practitioners for contraceptive advice and prescription.

Mr. Mellor: The provisional 1988-89 cost, in England, of payments to general medical practitioners for contraceptive services is £32·4 million.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the total current annual cost to the National Health Service on contraceptive drugs and devices issued to patients.

Mr. Mellor: We cannot identify the cost of contraceptive drugs and devices issued at health authorities' family planning clinics or those provided by hospitals or by dispensing doctors.

The net ingredient cost of contraceptive drugs and appliances prescribed by GPs and dispensed by retail pharmacists and appliance contractors was estimated at £21 million in England in 1987, the latest full year for which figures are available. This figure is based on a sample of approximately one in 200 prescriptions.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement outlining the reasons for special payments to general practitioners for contraceptive advice and prescription;

(2) if he will make it his policy to cease to make special payments to general practitioners for contraceptive advice and prescription.

Mr. Mellor: Fees are paid to general practitioners who provide contraceptive services, in recognition of the time and effort of those doctors who choose to provide these services to patients. This is consistent with our policy that GPs' remuneration should be sensitive to the numbers of patients in their care and the range of services provided. The participation of GPs in the provision of contraceptive services gives patients a choice between practice-based services and health authority clinics. We have no plans to change the current arrangements.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has any plans to issue new guidance to general practitioners concerning the prescription of contraceptive drugs;

(2) what response his Department has made to the recent reports of increased levels of cancer in long-term users of contraceptive drugs.

Mr. Mellor: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) was provided with advance details of the recent study by Chilvers et al on oral contraceptive use and breast cancer risk in young women and was able to formulate and issue advice to doctors and pharmacists in its bulletin "Current Problems No. 26." A copy is in the Library. CSM advice was also sent to a range of other interested bodies including family planning organisations. In addition, officials of the Department have met representatives of pharmaceutical companies marketing oral contraceptives and have been in touch regarding this and other studies with their counterparts in the World Health Organisation and regulatory bodies in other countries. The CSM is continuing to monitor ongoing studies and cancer registration rates and will maintain close communication with all those involved. More generally the handbook of contraceptive practice issued by the Department to all general practitioners and family planning doctors includes advice on oral contraception. Work on a new edition by representatives of the Royal College of General Practitioners, Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and Standing Medical Advisory Committee is well in hand for distribution later this year.

Drug Safety

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the patient information leaflets proposed under EEC directives would include contra-indications, precautions and warnings for all medicines at present prescribed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: Present European Community (EC) law (article 6 of directive 75/319) with which United Kingdom regulations conform already requires contra-indications, warnings and precautions if a leaflet is supplied. The current proposed amendment would not affect that requirement. The change would be to make a leaflet mandatory unless the information was supplied on the label. Further developments may follow from the EC Commission study on patient information.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on promoting alternatives to benzodiazepine prescription; and what funds are available for this purpose.

Mr. Mellor: The Department is financing a conference on developing counselling in primary care. This was attended by over 150 general practitioners and counsellors and focused on the better identification of people needing counselling and the better organisation of services.

The Department is funding the National Association for Mental Health (MIND) to develop a directory of services for people with benzodiazepine-related problems. This will include a wide variety of agencies in both the statutory and non-statutory fields, offering alternative therapies including counselling, behavioural and psychological techniques, as well as self-help groups. In addition, central funding has been made available to provide a revised version of a leaflet for the public and professionals giving information on benzodiazepine use and alternative strategies to it.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients wait for (a) plastic surgery and (b) other surgical treatment for more than one year.

Mr. David Mellor: The information requested is published in the booklet "Hospital In-Patient Waiting Lists at 30 September 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is commercial in confidence.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 795-98, showing the total amount spent by his Department on research into the sexual abuse of children in each of the years since 1979, listing the name of each project, its cost and completion date.

Mr. Mellor: The information has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 9 March, Official Report, column 607, how many times the inter-departmental working group on child sexual abuse has met since 9 March; and what has been discussed.

Mr. Mellor: The group has not met since 9 March.

GPs (Trainees)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on the sums from the statement of fees and allowance or other votes which were budgeted and the sums which were paid to general practitioner trainees and general practitioner trainers in each of the past three years, indicating the respective numbers of trainers and trainees.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 May 1989]: Payments to trainers and trainees, are drawn from the voted provision for the general medical services and are not subject to separate budgets.

Expenditure in England on grants to trainers and the reimbursement of salary and other costs for trainees in the last three years for which full data are available was as follows:

	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 £ million	1987-88 £ million
Grants (trainers)	6·31	6·345	6·522
Other expenditure (trainees)	28·777	30·489	33·4555

The number of trainers and trainees in the same years (1 October) in England and Wales are as follows:—

	1985	1986	1987
GP trainers	2,704	2,769	2,792
GP trainees	1,924	1,814	1,876

Professional Misconduct

63. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of whether the provisions of statutory instrument 2255/88 paragraph 6.(i) concerning the reference to complaints alleging serious professional misconduct are being implemented by the administrative arrangements adopted by the General Medical Council.

Mr. Mellor: The General Medical Council is an independent statutory body whose constitution and functions are regulated by the Medical Act 1983. Rule 6.(i) of SI 2255/88 provides that where a complaint in writing or information in writing is received by the registrar of the council and it appears to him that a question arises whether conduct of a practitioner constitutes serious professional misconduct the registrar shall submit the matter to the president.

The administrative arrangements within the GMC are for the council to determine and the hon. Member should approach the registrar directly if he requires specific information.

Beef Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the arrangements currently in force for the public health examination of beef imports at the port of entry to the United Kingdom of products (a) from within the EEC and (b) from outside the EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply.

Port health authorities have responsibility for public health examinations of beef imports to ensure their compliance with the imported food regulations 1984.

All meat entering the United Kingdom must come from export-approved plants, other member states, or from plants in third countries which have been approved by the EC Commission. Consignments must be accompanied by a health certificate signed by a veterinarian authorised by the Government of the exporting country confirming that the strict hygiene standards of the appropriate EC directive have been fully satisfied.

Port health authorities inspect all consignments from third countries in accordance with Community provisions and make sample examination of those from other member states.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the property costs, including rent, asset replacement and rates of his Department in total, in each standard both in total and per square foot for each year since 1983.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information in the precise form requested is not available. Home Office properties are divided into three separate estates for property management purposes, each of which is treated differently: the property repayment services (PRS) estate, comprising properties for which the Property Services Agency is responsible; the prisons estate, which is directly managed by the prison department; and the non-PRS estate, comprising mainly the directorate of telecommunications and centrally provided police research and training establishments. Accommodation and property costs information available for each of the three estates since 1983 is as follows:

Departmental Plant and Equipment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the last revaluation of plant and equipment employed by his Department was carried out; and what plant and equipment asset replacement charges are incurred by his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the general Home Office practice to revalue its plant and equipment, or to calculate asset replacement charges, although a depreciation charge is calculated in certain parts of the Department where trading accounts are produced.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his response to Communn na Gaidhlig's report on Gaelic broadcasting, in particular, its call for a Gaelic broadcasting council;

(2) what conclusions he has reached on the report by Dr. Cento Veljanovski entitled "The Case for a Gaelic Broadcasting Service".

Mr. Renton: We are considering carefully all the representations made in response to the White Paper on broadcasting.

Bail

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostel places are available in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: There are 18 specialist bail hostels providing 243 places. In addition, there are 81 hostels providing 1,647 places either for persons subject to a probation order for bailees. Over the next two years, 440 bail hostel places will be created.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of all defendants who appeared before the courts in England and Wales in 1987 and 1988 were bailed (a) with and (b) without conditions;

(2) how many persons during 1987 and 1988 who were remanded into custody in England and Wales at a first hearing were subsequently bailed;

(3) how many persons who had been charged with a summary offence were remanded in custody in England and Wales during the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The available information, which may be incomplete, relates to those remanded on bail or in custody during magistrates courts hearings or at committal to the Crown court and is shown in tables 8.5 and 8.7 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987", respectively. Reliable information is not available centrally on whether conditions were attached to bail or on how many of those initially remanded in custody were subsequently bailed.

Remand

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of persons who were remanded in custody during 1987 and 1988 in gaol in England and Wales emanated from an ethnic minority; and what percentage was eventually acquitted, not proceeded against or given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information for 1988 is not a reliable guide because for a large proportion of the prisoners the outcome of court proceedings is not yet recorded.

The latest available information for 1987 is given in the table.

Persons received into prison service establishments in England and Wales as unsentenced prisoners, by outcome of court proceedings and ethnic origin 1987.

[2] Persons freed on rising are those who were sentenced to immediate custody of such a length, that it had already been served on remand.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary for State of the Home Department what percentage of males and females who were remanded in custody in England and Wales in 1987 and 1988 were eventually either acquitted, not proceeded against or given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available information for 1987 is given in the table. Information for 1988 is not a reliable guide because for a large proportion of the prisoners the outcome of court proceedings is not yet recorded.

[2] Persons freed on rising are those who were sentenced to immediate custody of such length that it had already been served on remand.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to remand prisoners' rights and privileges since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: From 1983 all unconvicted prisoners have been allowed to send two letters a week at public expense (previously they had to pay for them if they had private cash). In 1986 regional directors were given discretion to approve variations at particular establishments in arrangements for daily visits by relatives and friends, provided that an aggregate entitlement of at least one and half hours' visiting time per week was maintained for each unconvicted prisoner and that weekend visits were available at least fortnightly. In 1988 the unconvicted prisoners' privilege of having food and drink brought in by relatives or friends was withdrawn.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons committed suicide in gaol in England and Wales during a period of remand during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 27 in 1987 and 18 in 1988. In addition, the inquest on the apparent suicide of one remand prisoner in 1988 remains to be held.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons died in gaol in England and Wales during a period of remand during 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 33 in 1987 and 25 in 1988. In addition, in 1987 six and in 1988 seven remand prisoners died in outside hospitals to which they had been transferred because of serious illness.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many psychiatric reports were prepared on remand prisoners in England and Wales in 1988 or for the latest year in which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information relates only to reports made under sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983 recommending transfer to psychiatric or special hospitals, and does not distinguish between sentenced and unsentenced prisoners. In the year ending 31 March 1988, 206 such reports were prepared.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons deemed psychiatrically ill were remanded in custody in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information relates only to populations and not to numbers received. On 30

September 1988 a total of 158 unsentenced prisoners in England and Wales were considered by medical officers to meet the criteria for detention in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983. Of these, 150 were considered to be mentally ill, five were considered to be mentally impaired and three were considered to be suffering from psychopathic disorder, as defined in the Act.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were remanded in gaols in England and Wales for the latest year in which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1988, the provisional number of receptions into prison service establishments was 58,300 for untried prisoners and 17,300 for convicted unsentenced prisoners. These figures exclude those received into police cells and not subsequently received into a prison service establishment.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average time spent waiting for trial for male and female remand prisoners in gaols in England and Wales for 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(2) what was the average time spent waiting for trial for male and female remand prisoners in gaols in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information was published in table 2.1 of Prison Statistics England and Wales 1987 (Cm. 547), a copy of which is in the Library. Provisional data for 1988 indicate very little change for males but a further increase for females.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average remand population of gaols in England and Wales during 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On average there were 8,797 untried and 1,664 convicted and unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales in 1988. In addition 982, most of whom were untried, were held in police cells. Further information was published in tables 3 and 4 of "The Prison Population in 1988" (Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 12/89), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the remand population in gaols in England and Wales for the latest date available and for a similar date in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is given in the following table:

Remand population in custody in England and Wales on 31 March 1986 to 1989

	1986	1987	1988	1989
Prison service establishments:
Untried	8,115	8,770	8,387	8,939
Convicted unsentenced	1,339	1,611	1,602	1,760
Prison cells[1]	62	380	1,078	71
Total	9,516	10,761	11,067	10,770

[1] On 31 March 1986, 1987 and 1989 all those held in police cells are assumed to be remand prisoners; it is estimated that on 31 March 1988 a further 230 were held in police cells.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the remand population in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 23 January 1989 at column 393.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet completed his further consideration as to who will bear the cost of the West Midlands police inquiry into the Hillsborough disaster.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 12 May at column 569.

Prisoners

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors he takes into account when allocating a prisoner to a particular prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Allocation decisions are taken in the light of information relating to the nature of the prisoner's offence, sentence length, previous prison record if relevant, suitability for particular types of accommodation and regime, home area or that of likely visitors, educational and training needs or potential and any special needs which are identified. The aim is to make the best use of the prison accommodation available at the time while meeting the requirements of security and control and the needs of the individual prisoner.

Public Order (Football Grounds)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many males over the age of 65 years and females over the age of 60 years have been (a) arrested, (b) charged and (c) convicted of offences relating to public order at football grounds in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form requested is not available as the location of alleged offences is not recorded centrally. However, records available to me show no convictions for indictable public order offences in 1987 for males over 65 or females over 60. To provide such figures for earlier years would involve disproportionate costs. Information is not available centrally on the age of adult offenders convicted of summary public order offences. Nor is corresponding information available on those arrested or charged with public order offences.

Race Equality Programme (Brent)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when approval will be given to the payment of the section 11 grant for the funding of the Brent development programme for race equality.

Mr. John Patten: Following Sir David Lane's inquiry into Brent's development programme for racial equality, the Home Office wrote to the London borough of Brent on 26 May 1988 requiring a number of undertakings to be given before a decision on whether grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 could be reached. The local authority replied to that letter on 30 September 1988, indicating that the council required clarification of some of the undertakings. These were discussed at a meeting between Home Office officials and Brent officers on 30

November. As a result the director of education wrote to the Home Office on 9 January 1989 with the authority's first detailed response to the undertakings. On 6 April the Home Office wrote again seeking explanation of a number of points in that response. The authority's reply was received in the Home Office on 10 May. It is at present being considered and the authority will be informed when a decision has been reached.

Overseas Residents (Voting)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce proposals to alter the franchise qualifications for Britons resident abroad; and whether these changes will be introduced in time for those affected to register to vote in the next general election.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to his question of 2 February 1989 at column 383.

Political Asylum (Kurds)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kurds from Turkey have entered Britain in the past 14 days seeking political asylum or refugee status; what steps he is taking to deal with the cases; and if he intends to give financial or other help to the London borough of Hackney and other boroughs to provide temporary or permanent accommodation and maintenance.

Mr. Renton: We received 456 applications for asylum for Turkish nationals arriving at ports in the 14 days to 11 May. It is not yet clear how many of the applicants are Kurds. Arrangements are in hand for them to be interviewed individually so that the merits of their asylum claims can be assessed and decisions reached as soon as possible.

The Home Office has no plans to reimburse local authorities for provision that they have decided to incur.

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he treats as legitimate uses to which electronic surveillance devices may be put.

Mr. Hurd: The Younger report on privacy reported on the widely accepted view that there was a vast range of unobjectionable uses for technical surveillance devices. Examples include their use by shops and other enterprises in order to prevent crime.

Mr. A (Passport)

Mr Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Minister of State the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Stretford concerning M. A. Home Office reference A 429590; and if he will make a statement on the delay in replying and the delays in returning Mr. A's passport.

Mr. Renton: The delay in this case has been caused by the need to make a detailed investigation. I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly. The two passports in the case to which he has referred have been returned to the holder and his settled immigration status confirmed.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the conviction of Mr. Colin Wallace for manslaughter in the light of the evidence of a conspiracy to pervert the course of justice set out in the book entitled "Who Framed Colin Wallace" by Mr. Paul Foot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We will consider, in accordance with normal policy, whether Mr. Foot's book contains any evidence or other consideration of substance which might call into question the safety of Mr. Wallace's conviction and which has not been considered by the courts.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision exists for public access to the marked electoral registers used by presiding officers in parliamentary and local elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the appropriate elections rules, the marked copies of the registers used by presiding officers at a parliamentary or local government election are open to public inspection, on payment of a fee, after the close of the poll at such time and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, though not on the day of the poll itself. Also a candidate, his appointed election agent or polling agent may, within the polling station, mark on his own copy of the register the name of each elector who receives a ballot paper.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years;

(2) how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company.

Mr Hurd: Information on TV expenditure in the form requested is not held by my Department, and I understand that it is not available centrally through the Central Office of Information.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 9 March, Official Report, column 607, whether he has received Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary's report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend receives a report on the implementation of Home Office circular 52/1988 in each force area as part of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary's annual inspection report of the area.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will update his answer of 26 January, Official Report, columns 670-71, showing the total amount spent by his Department on research into the sexual abuse of children in each of the years since 1979, listing the name of each project, its cost and completion date.

Mr. John Patten: The only information additional to my answer of 26 January is that the research project on children as victims of crime will be completed in September 1989 at a total cost of £98,000 for which the sums of £7,265 and £50,743 were spent respectively in the financial years ending March 1988 and 1989. The research project to examine the effectiveness of live TV links for child witnesses began on 1 February 1989 and will be completed in January 1990 at a cost of £45,000.

Pet Animals (Protection)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to ban tail docking, ear cropping, debarking and declawing of dogs in accordance with article 8 of the European convention on the protection of pet animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The representations that we have received about article 10 of the European convention for the protection of pet animals have all been opposed to the ear cropping, devocalisation, declawing and defanging of dogs. The Government's decision about this and the tail docking of dogs will be announced when the current consultations have been completed.

London Transport (Violence)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by the Metropolitan police to arrest and prosecute the persons referred to in the House of Lords Hansard, 4 April, column 1003, who threatened violence against London Transport unless posters advertising holidays in northern Cyprus were withdrawn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Metropolitan police have not been asked to undertake any investigations into this matter. The policing of London Transport is a matter for the British Transport police, who are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the complement of medical officers at the Risley remand centre; what is the actual number of staff in post; and if he will give comparable figures for (a) five years ago and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Authorised strength	Staff in post
1 January 1979
One Senior Medical Officer	1
Four Medical Officers (full-time)	3
Two Medical Officers (part-time)	2
1 January 1984
One Senior Medical Officer	1
Three Medical Officers (full-time)	2
Two Medical Officers (part-time)	2
1 January 1989 (to date)
One Senior Medical Officer	1
Three Medical Officers (full-time)	2
Two Medical Officers (part-time)	2

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make further funds available for the prison department to train medical officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The funds available in the present financial year for in-service training of prison medical officers will enable the Department to maintain a programme broadly commensurate with that undertaken in 1988-89. Many of the training needs of this specialist group are best met by facilitating attendance at externally organised courses. The financial allocation to the director of prison medical services to meet the cost of course fees of health care staff, including medical officers, will allow for expansion of this important area of training. Governors, who are responsible for meeting some of the travel and subsistence costs of training for field staff, have been reminded that specialist training is a high priority.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the numbers of inmates in the Risley remand centre known to have received in-patient treatment for psychiatric illness (a) 10 years ago, (b) five years ago and (c) in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret such statistics are not routinely collated and are not available in respect of past years.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by prison and remand centre in England and Wales (a) the number of permanent nursing staff in post and (b) where these are below establishment post and by how many; what recruitment programmes are in progress or being planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available staffing information is given in the following table. A national campaign to recruit men and women with a nursing qualification to train as hospital officers is planned for the near future. Further campaigns will be mounted as necessary. Twenty-three nurses already so recruited are in training. In addition, 75 prison officers have been accepted for hospital officer training. Further volunteers will be sought as required. Locally targeted campaigns to recruit nurses for Holloway prison and Risley remand centre are being progressed separately.

Prisons and Remand Centres (Food Poisoning)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by prison and remand centre in England and Wales for the last 12 months, the number of occasions that food poisoning has been reported; what action was taken; when was the last occasion that they had been inspected by an outside health inspector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 May 1988 there have been four reported outbreaks of suspected food poisoning at prison service establishments. These were as follows:

	Date
HMP Cardiff	June 1988
HMP Lincoln	August 1988
HMYOI Hollesley Bay Colony	January 1989
HMP Ashwell	April 1989

The local authority environmental health officers (EHOs) attended each establishment to help in tracing the source of the outbreak and to suggest measures to prevent further spread of infection.

Informal visits to establishments by local authority EHOs are encouraged, but no central record of these visits is maintained. None of the four establishments had been visited by local authority EHOs prior to the reported outbreaks of food poisoning. Each establishment had, however, been visited by Home Office health and safety officers or officers from the Home Office supply and transport catering group. All officers carrying out these inspections are professionally qualified. Their visits took place on the following dates:

	Date
HMP Cardiff	March 1988
HMP Lincoln	July 1987
HMYOI Hollesley Bay Colony	December 1988
HMP Ashwell	November 1988

ENERGY

Insulation

7. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has completed his plans to revive the neighbourhood energy action programme for community insulation schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information is still being collected, but we believe that the special measures introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment are having a positive impact. We will continue to monitor the position closely.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the contribution to Britain's energy requirements resulting from draught proofing and loft insulation in each of the past 10 years; and what targets he has set for such work in each of the next five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The extent to which improved loft insulation and draught proofing lead to lower demand for energy depends upon a number of factors including the extent to which consumers opt at least in part for greater warmth rather than simply saving energy. An assessment of the sort requested is not available.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate numbers of operatives and trainees are available to undertake community energy action work in draughtproofing and loft insulation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, who has responsibility for employment training, announced on 10 February a special package of measures to help community insulation projects. Those measures now appear to be having a positive impact.

53. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's estimate of the energy savings that would accrue if all existing buildings were retro-fitted to bring them up to the standard of the proposed new building regulations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In theory bringing all existing domestic buildings up to the standards of thermal insulation set out in the proposed new building regulations would lead to a reduction in demand of approximately 9 million tonnes of oil equivalent. However, achievement of such standards would not be cost effective or possible in many cases, particularly with older buildings. Equivalent estimates for reductions in demand in respect of non-domestic buildings are not available.

44. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's estimate of the potential savings in energy demand, if all United Kingdom residential properties had 6 in of roof insulation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In theory the installation of 6 in of insulation in all domestic buildings with accessible lofts could lead to a potential annual saving of some 1·3 million tonnes of oil equivalent. However, as householders would be likely to take part of the potential saving in greater warmth the actual saving would be lower.

Grimethorpe Reactor

11. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce his decision on funding the next stage of research and development into the Grimethorpe pressurised fluidised-bed reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal is presently seeking further private sector support for this project. In the light of the outcome of this, the Government will make a final decision on funding.

Subsidence (Compensation)

18. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what resources he has agreed with the National Coal Board to allocate for compensation for subsidence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is a matter for British Coal to determine the allocation of resources within the external finance limit agreed with Government. At the end of 1987-88 the provision in its accounts for subsidence compensation stood at £260 million. In 1987-88 repair of and compensation for subsidence damage cost the corporation almost £50 million.

Hinkley C Inquiry

19. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive the report of the Hinkley C inquiry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The timing of his report is a matter for the inquiry inspector.

Nuclear Power

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the environmental benefits of nuclear power.

16. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has had in favour of expanding nuclear power on environmental grounds.

32. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has had from people opposed to expanding nuclear power on environmental grounds.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received a number of representations on all aspects of nuclear power.

50. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the percentage of electricity to be generated by nuclear power by 1995; and what is the current figure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The percentage of electricity generated by nuclear power in England and Wales in 1987-88 was 14·4 per cent. The percentage for 1995 will depend on a number of factors, including the load factor of individual nuclear power stations and operational decisions taken by the CEGB's successors.

Energy Use

21. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on trends in the ratio of energy usage to gross domestic product since 1973.

Mr. Parkinson: In terms of primary energy, in 1973 the United Kingdom consumed 1·36 tonnes of coal equivalent per £1,000 of GDP (at 1985 factor cost). In 1988 the ratio had fallen to 1 tonne of coal equivalent per £1,000 of GDP in the same price terms. This represents a reduction of 26·5 per cent. or 2 per cent. per annum.

Electricity Generation

22. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest estimate of the fuel cycle costs of (a) nuclear and (b) coal-fired electricity generation in the present financial year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board that, for 1987-88, their estimate of fuel cycle costs for nuclear generation was 1·77 p/Kwh and coal-fired generation 1·97 p/Kwh.

55. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what date Her Majesty's Government first made public that the cost of electricity from the Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear stations exceeded that of coal-fired generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This was first made public in the answer that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 15 December 1988 at column 680.

42. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he expects to bring forward to change the mix of fuels used in electricity generation (a) before that industry is sold, (b) while it is in the course of being sold and (c) after it has been sold.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Changes to the mix of fossil fuels used in electricity generation will remain a matter for the industry, as will the choice of non-fossil fuels used to meet the major part of the non-fossil fuel obligation provided for the Electricity Bill now before Parliament. I announced on 5 April the Government's intention that up to 600 MW of the non-fossil fuel obligation should be set aside specifically for renewables.

Energy Technology Support Unit

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the report of Dr. Barry Dale of the Energy Department's energy technology support unit.

Mr. Parkinson: I believe that the report to which the hon. Member is referring is a paper presented by Dr. Dale to an International Energy Agency experts seminar in Paris on 12 to14 April.

He concluded that it appeared to be technically feasible to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide by a significant amount but that this would not be an easy task and a combination of measures and technologies would be required.

Sizewell B Power Station

24. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost per megawatt saved of energy efficiency measures; and what is the cost per megawatt of the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The cost of saving a megawatt by investment in energy efficiency schemes varies widely. Investment in energy efficiency is not a direct substitute for investment in energy supply; improvements in energy efficiency may be taken by domestic consumers in increased levels of comfort. The CEGB have advised us that the expected cost in real terms of Sizewell B remains at the level shown in the 1986-87 accounts which is £1·45 million/megawatt.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

25. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce firm proposals for the neighbourhood energy action programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 10 February were designed to help overcome the difficulties which some community insulation projects faced in making the transition to employment training. We are now in the process of monitoring the impact of those measures on the project network.

Gas Supply

26. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Director General of Gas Supply; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I met the Director General of Gas Supply last month and we discussed a range of issues of mutual interest.

52. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Gas to discuss the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas supply.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Gas in November when a range of issues were discussed.

Global Warming

17. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will review his Department's spending on energy conservation in the light of the continuing fears of global warming.

Mr. Parkinson: The budget of the energy efficiency office, like all Government expenditure, is reviewed annually in the public expenditure survey.

27. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest estimate of potential for reducing carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2000, 2010 and 2020 in the energy sector.

48. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest estimate of the potential reduction in the output of greenhouse gases by the United Kingdom energy sector by the years 2000, 2010 and 2020.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Future emissions will depend on many factors, which are hard to predict, such as economic growth, developments in technology, investment patterns and consumer choice. A broad analysis by the energy technology support unit, presented at the Prime Minister's recent seminar on climate change, indicated both the possibilities and difficulties of reducing carbon dioxide emissions.

8. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department has made of the different contributions to reducing global warming of energy conservation and nuclear power.

Mr. Parkinson: I believe that both nuclear power and improved energy efficiency have an important role to play in reducing emissions of carbon dioxide. No single solution is sufficient.

Energy Efficiency

28. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he is taking, and what further measures he proposes, to reduce energy consumption and to promote energy efficiency.

30. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish proposals to encourage energy efficiency and conservation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The energy efficiency office will be targeting its activities on key areas of energy use and offering advice backed by technical support. In particular it will be emphasising the work of regional energy efficiency officers at the local level. The EEO will also be offering a new best practice programme which will give industrial and commercial consumers authoritative and independent advice on how efficiently they use energy and how they can improve to match the best in their sector. In addition the Secretary of State for Energy is leading a campaign to increase the efficiency of energy use in the public sector.

In the domestic sector the Government continue to help pensioners and low-income households through the community insulation programme and the homes insulation scheme.

Further measures to encourage energy efficiency are included in the Electricity Bill. The Secretary of State and the Director General of Electricity Supply will have a duty to promote energy efficiency and economy on the part of licensed electricity suppliers who will be required to provide guidance on the efficient use of electricity.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for energy conservation arising from the Downing street seminar on 26 April.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have described the new approach of the energy efficiency office in my replies to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 30 January at column 13, and my hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) on 7 March at column 480.

Electricity Privatisation

29. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the United Kingdom's total national energy needs he expects to be met by the private sector following privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: If the market shares held by the various fuel producers remain unchanged, then some 88 per cent. of final energy consumption will be met by the private sector after privatisation, compared with 74 per cent. in 1988.

3. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the latest cost of advertising, publicity and public relations for the electricity industry generally and for its privatisation up to the date of the proposed share issue.

Mr. Parkinson: Expenditure by the industry on advertising, publicity and public relations is a matter for the industry itself. Total costs up to the date of the proposed share issue will depend on many factors yet to be decided, and cannot therefore reasonably be forecast at this stage.

British Coal

31. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

34. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he expects to discuss.

51. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he expects to discuss.

54. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

9. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the manager of British Coal, Scotland; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the chairman of British Coal. We have no plans to meet British Coal's Scottish manager at present.

46. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the manager of British Coal's north-eastern region; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no such plans at present. However, my right hon. Friend and I do, of course, meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

47. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the manager of British Coal in Scotland; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I last met the manager of British Coal in Scotland on 6 October 1988 during my underground visit to Castlebridge mine, when I was informed about the corporation's plans for the colliery.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

33. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what would be the reduction in CO_2 emissions if existing boilers were replaced by gas-condensing boilers in (a) the domestic sector and (b) public buildings.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I estimate that, on average, the replacement of an existing domestic gas fired boiler with a condensing model would reduce the boiler consumption by 15 to 20 per cent. The carbon dioxide emitted by the boiler would be reduced by a similar amount. For public buildings the equivalent figure would be around 10 per cent. An additional emission reduction would accrue if the original boiler were fired by coal or oil due to the different carbon content of the fuels.

35. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he expects to bring forward, following the 26 April 10 Downing street seminar, to control carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2000, 2010 or 2020.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Electricity privatisation will encourage greater efficiency in the supply and use of electricity; will guarantee a level of non-fossil generation, will encourage the introduction of new more efficient and less polluting technology, and will encourage electricity generation from gas. A series of tranches of generation capacity reserved exclusively for renewable sources will be set throughout the 1990s. This will guarantee renewables an additional special status within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Electricity (Bulk Supplies)

36. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's most up-to-date estimate of the comparative cost of bulk supplies of electricity to the steel industry and other heavy industrial consumers in Britain and those for major competitors in the European Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 10 April at column 335.

British Nuclear Fuels

37. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Michael Spicer: BNFL has contracts valued at some £4 billion, £2 billion of which are with Japan. These will pay for its investment in THORP and will be in a good position to compete for business in the future.

Central Electricity Generating Board

38. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

45. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chairman-designate of National Power; and what issues will be discussed.

49. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet Lord Marshall to discuss matters of common interest.

Methane Gas

39. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the prospects for the burning of methane gas in power generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Decisions on fossil fuel choice are matters for the industry. Virtually all the major independent generation projects known to my Department, totalling over 6 GW of capacity, are proposing to use natural gas. Moreover, the CEGB has recently applied for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's consent to construct four gas-fired power stations. I am also encouraged by the prospects for smaller landfill gas generation projects. These have the potential to make a significant contribution by the end of the century.

Monktonhall and Bilston Glen Collieries

40. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the future of Monktonhall and Bilston Glen collieries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has received one written representation from the Coalfield Communities Campaign.

Combined Heat and Power

41. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for policies to promote the use of combined heat and power.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The creation of a competitive power market following the privatisation of the public electricity supply industry should ensure that combined heat and power is well placed to take advantage of the new structure. There will be new powers to allow CHP operators to lay heat mains in streets. We are also seeking to ensure that independent generators, including CHP operators, will be rated on a comparable basis with the rest of the electricity supply industry. My Department has provided substantial support for CHP schemes in the past and will continue to promote investment in CHP within the energy efficiency office's new "Best Practice" programme.

United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association

43. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of UKOOA, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association (UKOOA) from time to time. These meetings cover a range of North sea-related issues.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority stock pile since November 1964, has (a) been leased and retained, (b) been leased and returned and (c) sold to France for use in its Rapsodie test fast reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No plutonium from the stockpile of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has been sold or leased for the Rapsodie test fast reactor since May 1979.

Independent Electricity Producers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Association of Independent Electricity Producers; what was discussed; and what was the outcome of the meeting.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I last met the AEIP on 5 May, when we had a useful discussion on independent electricity generation.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Parkinson: Arrangements for purchasing advertising air time for this Department are handled by the Central Office of Information. The information requested is not held by my Department and I understand that it has not been compiled centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zambia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table indicating the extent of United Kingdom assistance to Zambia by way of (a) grants and (b) loans in each of the past 10 years; and what is the sum total of outstanding loans made to Zambia which are repayable, the date by which repayment has to be made, and the level of interest payments on these loans.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	Gross public expenditure	Grants	Overseas Development Administration loans	Commonwealth Development Corporation expenditure[1]
	£ thousand	£ thousand	£ thousand	£ thousand

TRANSPORT

European Market (Freight Links)

103. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that Britain will be able to compete fully in the European market when the freight links between the Channel tunnel and the manufacturing and exporting base in the north pass through already overcrowded rail routes in London.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's routes in the London area have considerable spare capacity outside the commuter peaks. The board considers it will have ample capacity to handle Channel tunnel freight traffic in the short and medium term and in the longer term if its proposed new passenger rail link is built.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the implications for elderly people with (a) arthritis, (b) Parkinson's disease and (c) heart complaints of his Department's proposals to reform the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We propose to tighten the eligibility criteria so that, in accordance with the original aims of the scheme, orange badges are issued to people with severe mobility problems, irrespective of the medical cause.

We shall be consulting interested parties, including organisations representing disabled and elderly people, on detailed proposals for bringing the criteria into line with this objective.

River Thames (Traffic)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to increase the use of the River Thames to reduce vehicular traffic in and around London.

Mr. Portillo: The Government recognise that transport of passengers and freight by river can contribute to the relief of road congestion in London. This was reflected in an agreement concluded on 22 March under which the Government are making a grant of up to £500,000 to promote and improve the regular passenger services provided by the Riverbus partnership. The Port of London authority is particularly promoting the river carriage of bulk materials including materials for major construction projects in docklands, and refuse.

A1 Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects improvements to be carried out to the A1 between Bellshill and Mousen, Northumberland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At present it seems unlikely that work on any improvement of this section of the A1 will start before 1992-93. The flow is low and the cost is high.

Ticket Barriers (London Underground)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 115, what was the basis of his calculation that the total cost of installing automatic ticket barriers at London Underground stations will be £22·2 million; whether it included electronics, computers and other associated costs of their installation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated final cost at current prices was provided by LRT. I understand it covered the cost of gate equipment, cabling, data circuits and installation. The cost of computers was not included as they serve all the new ticketing system, not just the gates.

Shipping

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the credit, debit and balance of payments on shipping services in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to table 3·3 in "United Kingdom Balance of Payments, 1988 Edition—CSO Pink Book" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the Government statistical service, a copy of which is in the Library.

Figures for the years 1974 to 1976, which are not included in the 1988 edition, are as follows:

£ million

	Credits	Debits	Balance
1974	2,665	2,776	−111
1975	2,651	2,562	89
1976	3,233	3,155	78

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Sellindge parish council, Kent, to move the proposed high speed Channel rail route south of their village.

Mr. Portillo: The Department can trace no record of having received any representations from Sellindge parish council since British Rail announced its preferred route for the proposed rail link to the Channel tunnel.

Trunk Roads (Emergency Telephones)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for further provision of emergency telephones on all-purpose trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Over 5,000 calls have been made from emergency telephones on the A180 trunk road between Brigg and Grimsby since they were installed in March 1988. The heavy use demonstrates their value.

The Department is now to embark on an initial programme of further provision of over 140 emergency telephones at priority sites on selected lengths of the A1, A2, A45, A46, A303 and A604 trunk roads.

This programme will help all motorists, particularly vulnerable drivers, including those travelling alone or at night. The Department also works closely with disability and motoring organisations to promote better emergency and breakdown provision for those unable to leave their cars to use the telephone.

Further schemes will be added to the programme as the opportunity arises.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given and what policy decisions he has made concerning charging tolls for road vehicles crossing the proposed east London river crossing bridge between Newham and Thamesmead.

Mr. Channon: I have no proposals to levy tolls on the east London river crossing scheme.

British Rail (Costs)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what costs were identified by British Rail in the last financial year in respect of (a) funding local planning inquiries, (b) meeting specific planning requirements made by local authorities, (c) maintenance of listed buildings and other structures, (d) measures to lessen the impact of noise, (e) measures to lessen the impact of visual intrusion and (f) total expenditure on infrastructure (i) investment and (ii) maintenance.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not collect detailed management information on items (a) to (e), from British Rail. British Rail will provide information on infrastructure expenditure in its annual report and accounts for 1988-89, due to be published in July.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Co-responsibility Levies

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much co-responsibility levies will increase when the Green pound is devalued as a result of the 1989 price negotiation.

Mr. MacGregor: At the 1989 price fixing, agreement was reached on significant reductions in the levels of milk co-responsibility levy, including its removal in less-favoured areas. It was agreed that this was the first step towards total elimination of the levy, for which the United Kingdom has consistently argued. These changes, together with the 3·2 point green pound devaluation, mean that the rates of levy paid by producers in 1988-89 and that to be paid in 1989-90 compare as follows:

	1988-89 £ per tonne	1989-90 £ per tonne
(i) Producers in LFAs:
First 60,000 kg	2·861	Nil
Remainder	3·814	Nil
(ii) Producers elsewhere:
Producers of up to 60,000 kg	3·814	1·968
Producers of more than 60,000 kg	3·814	2·951

The cereals co-responsibility levy has two elements. First, there is a fixed basic levy of 3 per cent. of the intervention price. Secondly, there is an additional levy which, at the beginning of the marketing year, is set at 3 per cent. of the intervention price and is subsequently adjusted under the stabiliser arrangements if the EC cereals harvest exceeds the maximum guaranteed quantity of 160 million tonnes by less than 3 per cent. The total levy —basic plus additonal—deducted from first sales of cereals at the beginning of the 1988 marketing year was £7·06 per tonne. This was subsequently adjusted to £5·57, which was the rate applicable at the time of this year's price fixing. Following the 3·9 point green pound devaluation agreed at this year's price fixing, and taking account of the operation of the cereals stabiliser mechanism on the intervention price, the rate of levy to be deducted from the start of the 1989-90 marketing year, 1 July 1989, will be £7·32 per tonne. Any adjustment which may need to be made will depend upon the size of the 1989 EC cereals harvest.

British Summer Time

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations from the National Farmers Union concerning British summer time.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The National Farmers Union responded to my Department's request for comments on a consultation document on the arrangements for summer time to apply from 1990 which was issued on 29 April 1988. Details of the outcome of the consultations will be issued shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Manufacturing Trade)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table in the Official Report setting out the surplus or deficit in the manufacturing trade between the United Kingdom and the EEC in each of the past 20 years; and if he will publish a separate table showing the balances with the rest of the world, all on an OTC basis.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table. Figures prior to 1970 on an OTS basis are not readily available.

Airbus Industrie

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the four member states of Airbus Industrie have yet completed their studies on a new organisational structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: A new management structure for Airbus Industrie, broadly based on the recommendations contained in the 1988 report of the Airbus "Wise Men", was introduced with effect from 1 April 1989. The new structure is intended to strengthen the strategic control of Airbus projects by the four partners in the consortium while, at the same time, placing the senior managers of Airbus Industrie at the centre of all day-to-day operations of particular Airbus programmes. The supervisory board has been streamlined and now consists of five members, the four chairmen of the partner companies and Dr. Friderichs, the chairman of Airbus Industrie. A new seven-man executive board has been constituted for the day-to-day management of Airbus operations. It includes among its members the newly-appointed finance director of AI, Mr. Robert Smith, formerly of British Aerospace's Royal Ordnance operation.

Overseas Companies

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas companies have set up operations in the United Kingdom since 1979, giving a breakdown by standard region.

Mr. Atkins: The following are the Invest in Britain Bureau figures for inward investments announced in each year since 1979 for the United Kingdom broken down by DTI regions. (These figures are not readily available on a United Kingdom standard region basis). The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and include the establishment of a new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture.

Weights and Measures Legislation

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in view of recent survey evidence of overcharging of customers using stamped brim glasses, he will bring into force section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985.

Mr. Forth: Last year the Department introduced revised regulations for the construction of beer measures; and coincidently the Brewers Society published guidelines on the proper use of these measures by bar staff when dispensing beer.

These initiatives, which seek to accommodate local preferences for the way in which beer is served, are designed to encourage licensees to use the glass most appropriate for the type of beer they are serving.

I therefore have no plans at present to implement section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of recent evidence of disregard by many establishments of the agreed code of practice on selling wine by the glass, he will now introduce legislation to enforce the code.

Mr. Forth: Surveys carried out by individual local authorities generally continue to indicate an increasing level of compliance with the voluntary code of practice for sales of still table wines by the glass, particularly in the quantities in which wine is sold.

I have no present plans to introduce legislation.

Bradbury-Wilkinson Premises, Saltash

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many inquiries have been received by his Department from companies interested in taking over the former Bradbury-Wilkinson premises at Saltash; and if he will make a statement about the present position and his Department's intentions.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received no inquiries regarding this site, the future of which is a matter for its private sector owners.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the application of section 47(2) of the Financial Services Act to transactions during the course of takeovers and other dealings and practices on the financial markets.

Mr. Maude: Section 47(2) of the Financial Services Act is directed against deliberate manipulation of the market. Some concerns have been expressed that the provision may go wider than was intended. In the light of these concerns it may be helpful to set out my Department's views on some of the points which have been raised.

It has been suggested, for example, that section 47(2) would prevent or inhibit certain actions which are at present common and which are consistent with the takeover code. My Department's view is that the balance of dealings between offeror and offeree company is unaffected by the new provision, and it is difficult to see how actions taken in compliance with the code and not otherwise unlawful could constitute the offence of market manipulation.

In relation to takeover offers, it has been suggested that the act of buying shares of an offeree company might influence the price and lead in some way to a breach of section 47(2). If shares are bought by associates of the offeror or the offeree company, or by persons already holding 1 per cent. or more of the shares, these purchases must under the code be disclosed. My Department believes that in such circumstances it would not be possible to maintain that the purchase had created a false and misleading impression as to the value of or the market in the shares, since the market would be aware not only of the price and quantity of the purchase but also of the connection (if any) between the purchaser and the relevant parties to the take-over. Although the code does not provide for instantaneous disclosure, the requirements are well-established and recognised by the market as the means by which a false market is avoided.

Of course, not all purchasers are required under the code to disclose their purchases. Some people in this class may wish the offer to fail because they believe it is in the long-term interests of the offeree company that it should fail. They may, in genuine support of this belief, buy shares at above the offer price. Such a purchase would be based on a commercial assessment of the prospects of the company concerned, and even if others in the market had different views as to the value of the shares in question the Department does not believe that such purchases would amount to market manipulation. Thus we do not take the view that the section outlaws activity of this kind by those who hope that an offer will not succeed.

In such cases, there is of course a risk that anything said by or on behalf of the offeree company, for example about future prospects, may be inside information, or that any arrangements, however informal, would constitute a Companies Act concert party. Similarly, any financial arrangements raise questions as to whether unlawful assistance is being given. While actions in contravention of section 47(2) may themselves also contravene these provisions my Department does not believe that section 47(2) affects the application of such provisions. The scope for supportive action may therefore be extremely limited.

In a different context, it has been suggested that a person—say, a fund manager—who needs to buy or sell a large number of shares, and who does so in small quantities so as not to move the price against himself, might be guilty of market manipulation. This view appears to depend on it being accepted that a misleading impression as to the value of the shares is being created. The Department does not consider that in such a case the impression created is misleading. The fund manager has done nothing to indicate that he is not going to be a seller of further shares in the future. It would be a different matter if in some way he misrepresented a particular small purchase as his only purchase or dishonestly concealed his intentions in such a way as to induce a sale. Such actions, however, would be more likely to fall under section 47(1), which is a continuation (for these purposes) of what has been statute law for some time.

It has been suggested that there is some overlap between sections 47(1) and 47(2), in that a statement is capable of constituting conduct of the kind prohibited by section 47(2) even though it may not itself be prohibited by section 47(1). These two subsections define distinct offences and in committing an offence under section 47(2) a person may make statements which are not in themselves an offence under section 47(1). But in such a case it is not the statement itself which is an offence but the conduct which involves making that statement. As a prosecuting authority, the Department cannot envisage a case in which the making of a statement which was not a contravention of section 47(1) would, by and of itself, be held to be an act or course of conduct contrary to section 47(2), given the defence which section 47(3) provides.

Company Statistics

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many companies were registerd at the latest available date; and how many qualified as (a) small and (b) medium-sized for the purposes of section 248 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 15 May 1989]: There were 1,141,000 companies registered in Great Britain at 8 May 1989. Not all of these are active, but at least 90 per cent. are estimated to be eligible to deliver modified accounts according to the criteria set out in section 248 of the Companies Act 1985. Of these 2 to 3 per cent. are estimated to qualify as medium-sized companies.

Social Fund

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funds have been received from the EEC through social fund and European development fund by (a) the west midlands, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) Merseyside county.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 May 1989]: European regional development fund and European social fund commitments in recent years are shown in the table. Allocations to individual regions fluctuate considerably from year to year, according to decisions by the European Commission.

Notes:

[1] Parts of west midlands region and of Greater Manchester have not been eligible for the ERDF.

[2] Figures for the European social fund exclude funding provided by the ESF for central Government programmes, for which a regional breakdown is not available.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much advertising air time the Department of Trade and Industry purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 15 May 1989]: I am advised by the Central Office of Information, through which the Department buys such advertising, that the information is commercially confidential.

PRIME MINISTER

Maidstone

Q20. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Maidstone.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Disciplinary Powers

Q172. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 24 April, Official Report, column 392, what steps are taken to monitor centrally the exercise of disciplinary powers by individual Government Departments; and where ministerial responsibility lies for ensuring consistency in the application of such powers.

The Prime Minister: The principles which govern the conduct of the Home Civil Service are my responsibility as Minister for the Civil Service, which includes laying down the general procedures to be followed to ensure fairness and consistency of practice. The Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) is available to provide advice and guidance on their application to particular cases. Disciplinary action against an individual is the responsibility of the Department concerned and is not monitored centrally.

Wild Birds

Q12. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to protect the feeding grounds of breeding seabirds in the United Kingdom's waters under EEC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government's scientific adviser, the Nature Conservancy Council, is in the process of identifying the most important seabird feeding and gathering grounds in United Kingdom waters. It will advise the Department of the Environment when the results have been obtained. The Department will then consider the most appropriate measures to safeguard these areas.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if she will co-ordinate the activities of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Attorney-General to ensure that the pay scales of both the Crown Prosecution Service and the magistrates' clerks are such that there is no shortage of staffs in either.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General explained to the House on 8 May, there is an overall shortage of lawyers nationwide. This is of course taken into account in determining the pay of qualified lawyers employed by the Crown Prosecution Service and the magistrates courts.

EC Legislation

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the volume of legislation stemming from the European Economic Community and the democratic procedures for considering it; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I recognise the concern at the number of proposals for EC legislation now coming forward and the need for effective scrutiny of them. My right hon. Friend the Lord President keeps our arrangements under close review and currently is holding discussions with the Procedure and European Legislation Committees to establish what improvements may be made.

Voluntary Bodies (Government Grants)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the total amounts paid in grants by Government Departments to voluntary bodies during the financial year 1987-88; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The figures are shown in the table. The total amount provided in 1987 represents a cash increase of 4·6 per cent. on the level of provision in 1986-87. In the period between 1979-80 and 1987-88 the level of Government support to voluntary bodies has risen by 237 per cent. (or in real terms 91·6 per cent.).

Grants by Government Departments in 1987-88

Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	187,765
Defence	5,297,319

Trade and Industry	9,069,000
Transport	671,000
Welsh Office:
direct grants	5,530,466
urban programme	3,430,000
Total	292,915,687

[1] The 1979-80 figure for DES included £3,736,000 paid to certain adult education bodies. These have been excluded in later years as not being strictly speaking, grants to voluntary organisations. In addition the sum listed for DES grants is lower than in previous years because (i) responsibility for grants to village halls and community centres has now been transferred to local government; and (ii) a number of other bodies included hitherto are no longer classified as voluntary bodies.

Employment

In addition, payments were made directly to voluntary bodies under various employment programmes

Training Agency (formerly Manpower Services Commission):
Community Programme	564,400,000
Voluntary Projects Programme	8,700,000
Youth Training Scheme	118,305,000
Total	691,405,000

The MSC and the Department of Employment made payments to voluntary bodies under other programmes but these cannot be given in detail except at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland, Department of Economic Development

Action for Community Employment	27,674,880
Community Workshops	16,180,266
Community Volunteering Scheme	645,000
Youth Community Project	757,000
Youth Help	750,295
Total	46,007,441

Departments also made grants and payments to housing associations and societies, these are as follows

Department of Environment	923,040,000
Northern Ireland Office (Department of the Environment)	43,000,000
Scottish Office	115,319,000
Welsh Office	56,600,000
Total	1,137,959,000

Grants made to voluntary bodies in 1987-88 by non-departmental public bodies include the following

Equal Opportunities Commission	69,044
Commission for Racial Equality	1,884,358
Countryside Commission	2,900,000
Countryside Commission for Scotland	502,310

Sports Council for Scotland	2,319,285
Sports Council for Wales	1,486,347
Total	29,462,997
Grand Total	2,197,750,125

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 May.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Staff Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local education authority (a) the number of teachers in post, (b) the number of administrative and support staff and (c) the proportion that (b) is of (a) and (b).

Mr. Butcher: The total full-time equivalent teaching staff in maintained schools and colleges in each local education authority area in January 1988 is shown in the table.

The Department does not hold centrally information on administrative and support staff employed by local education authorities. However, figures from the Joint Manpower Watch indicate that for England as a whole non-teaching staff amount to 76 per cent. of teaching staff.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publication "Education Statistics 1988-89 Estimates", a copy of which is in the Library, shows breakdowns of teaching and non-teaching staff for each authority responding to its survey.

Irradiated Rodent Carcases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out all the methods that have been adopted by the Medical Research Council for the disposal of irradiated rodent carcases following experiments.

Mr. Jackson: The disposal of irradiated rodent carcases used in radiation experimental work is subject to authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The disposal routes for such carcases used by the Medical Research Council are:

1. Maceration followed by disposal to the sewer; or
2. Incineration and landfill.

Academics (Earnings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will undertake a sample survey of universities to ascertain information about the levels of non-pay earnings among academics;

(2) if he will commission research into the levels of outside earnings of academics.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no intention at present to undertake a survey himself, or commission research about, the non-pay earnings of academic staff.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 2 May, Official Report, Column 2, if he will list those recent departmental decisions which are based on anecdotal evidence.

Mr. Jackson: Decisions reached by the Department are based on full consideration of those facts which are available and relevant.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the practice of universities in the treatment of academic staff's outside earnings.

Mr. Jackson: This is not a matter on which the Department collects information.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average working week of university academic staff on research and teaching duties.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to encourage universities to make contractual provision for time to make outside earnings for university academic staff.

Mr. Jackson: That is a matter for university managements.

Open University

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the contribution made to environmental education and research by the Open university.

Mr. Jackson: Courses about or related to the environment are available in the university's undergraduate and continuing education programmes. The university also supports research undertaken by the energy and environment research group.

Cancer Research

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial support Her Majesty's Government have given to research trials of cytokines, particularly interferon, in treatment of common cancers.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. The council has mounted three trials involving the use of cytokines in the treatment of cancer, all of which are currently recruiting patients. Details of the trials are as follows:

1. A phase II evaluation of human lymphoblastoid interferon (Wellferon) in malignant glioma.
   This trial was launched in October 1988; the approximate annual support provided by the council is £7,000.
2. A trial of alpha-interferon in chronic myeloid leukaemia
   This trial was launched in September 1986 and is one arm of a larger trial of chronic myeloid leukaemia, for which the approximate annual support provided by the council is £23,000.
3. A trial of the use of alpha-2b INF in the plateau phase of myelomatosis.
   This trial was launched in December 1988 and is one arm of a larger trial of myelomatosis, for which the trial co-ordinator receives grant support of approximately £32,000 per annum. In addition, the council provides approximately £13,000 per annum for this trial.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the 1989-90 cost of the recommended changes to school teachers pay, above the original £385 million limit proposed; what amount and proportion of this excess above the original limit will be offset by the net 0·4 per cent. reduction in employers contributions for superannuation identified in his reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, of 4 May, Official Report, column 177, as being free from other assumed offset purposes; what amount and proportion will not be so offset; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The salary bill for school teachers in England will rise by some £440 million in the financial year 1989-90. This is £80 million above the England element of the original limit proposed. The effect of the extra 0·4 per cent. reduction in the cost of employers' contributions to teachers superannuation will be to reduce the school teachers salary bill by about £25 million. The remaining £55 million to be borne by local education authorities represents less than 0·4 per cent. of local authority education provision.

LINK

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about progress on LINK.

Mr. Jackson: The Government attach great importance to LINK, which aims to increase the benefits to the United Kingdom economy from Government-funded research by encouraging collaboration between industry and the science base.

I am pleased to announce today a major new LINK programme in structural composites. Collaborative research in this area is vital to ensure that United Kingdom industry is well placed to adopt these new materials in a cost effective way.

This programme will develop both new and existing expertise, and will widen the use of such materials within United Kingdom industry. The use of advanced composites as structural components is likely to have a major impact in the future.

A key aim of the programme is to co-ordinate, and stimulate existing and new United Kingdom R & D in composite materials with particular emphasis on structural applications. It will support research which will meet industry's future demands for composites with improved properties, more efficient processability and lower cost.

More than 40 companies and over 20 science base organisations have already indicated that they wish to be involved in individual collaborative research projects. Special efforts will be made to encourage the involvement of small and medium sized firms.

The structural composites programme will raise the level of United Kingdom activity at a time when national programmes are being undertaken within Europe, Japan and the USA and will complement R & D work being undertaken through the European Community's BRITE/EURAM initiative.

This programme, the 14th to be announced under LINK, will be jointly funded by the Department of Trade and Industry (£14 million) and the Science and Engineering Research Council (£6 million); matching support from industry will be needed for this £40 million, five-year programme.

Training Grants

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce his proposals for the local education authorities training grants scheme in 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: Subject to consultation with local education authorities the main thrust of the scheme will continue to be the successful implementation of the Education Reform Act, in particular the national curriculum and associated assessment arrangements. My right hon. Friend also intends to include support for the introduction of teacher appraisal, eligible training for licensed teachers and pilot schemes for articled teachers, training in managing pupils' behaviour in response to the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools and training to develop teaching and assessment of competence-based qualifications in further education.

£120·5 million is planned to be allocated for training on national priority areas—an increase of £36·3 million on 1989-90—which will qualify for 65 per cent. grant and £94·7 million on local priorities which will qualify for 50 per cent. grant.

Copies of the consultation letter have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

WALES

Hospital Closures

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each year since 1979 (a) each hospital closed completely and (b) each hospital closed partially; and if he will break that list down by each health authority, and regional health authority.

Mr. Grist: A list of hospitals which closed, and remain closed, between 1 January 1979 and 31 December 1988 is given in the following table. These closures are the result of reorganisations and improvements of health care services in Wales since 1979, notably the provision of seven new hospitals, including five district general hospitals, at a cost of some £162·4 million at 1989-90 prices. Information on changes in bed complements for individual hospitals is published annually in "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Road Accidents

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many deaths occurred on Welsh roads in each of the last three years;

(2) how many people were injured on the roads of Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Casualties	1986	1987	[1]1988
Fatal[2]	235	220	226
Serious[3]	3,243	3,173	2,900
Slight[4]	10,967	10,890	12,024

[2] When death occurs in less than 30 days as a result of the accident.
[3] When a person sustains an injury for which he/she is detained in hospital as an "in-patient" or any of the following injuries whether or not he/she is detained in hospital; fractures, concussion, internal injuries, crushings, severe cuts and lacerations, severe general shock requiring medical treatment, injuries causing death 30 or more days after the accident.
[4] When a person sustains an injury of a minor character such as a sprain, bruise or cut not judged to be severe, or slight shock requiring roadside attention.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were taken to hospital with serious injuries after road accidents in Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the number of patients and day cases who died in hospitals in Wales or were discharged from them after road traffic accidents in the last three years for which data are available is as follows:

	Number
1985	3,332
1987	2,978

This may understate the true position as not all hospitals provide full clinical details relating to discharges and deaths. The numbers with "serious" injuries cannot be separately identified.

Council House Sales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to introduce a scheme to convert council house rents into mortgages, along the lines of that announced by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am examining a scheme similar to that recently announced in Scotland.

Nursery Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to examine the provision of education for the under-fives along the same lines as those recently announced by the Department of Education and Science in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Minister of State, Department of Education and Science has established and will be chairing a committee of inquiry to consider the quality and content of the educational experience offered to under-five-year-olds, as one of the responses to the Education, Science and Arts Committee's report on educational provision for the under-fives in England. I shall be keeping in close touch with the work of this group, on which the Welsh Office has observer status.

I shall be keeping under review the need for any action in Wales in the light of the deliberations and findings of the new committee.

SCOTLAND

Pay

101. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's action to improve pay levels in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government have sought to create the conditions in which sustained growth in output and real incomes can take place. Pay levels, in Scotland as elsewhere, are essentially for employers and employees to determine, but the Government have removed a number of statutory obstacles to sensible pay determination and have encouraged employers to link pay to the performance of their firm. In their dealings with its own employees the Government have introduced more flexibility by means of performance-related pay, and new, flexible, long-term pay agreements.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total budget for 1988-89 which was allocated to the Scottish Development Department for road building and maintenance: and if he will show the projects completed and projects commenced during that financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Gross provision for trunk road building and maintenance in Scotland in 1988-89 was £130 million. Schemes costing over £1 million completed and commenced during that financial year are shown in the following table:

[1] Schemes commenced in that a contract was let during the year but actual construction did not start until a few weeks later.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the proposed roads budget allocated to the Scottish Development Department for the financial year 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: £162 million, net of receipts, has been allocated for motorway and trunk road expenditure in Scotland in 1989-90.

Health Education

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the effectiveness of health education in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have announced today the setting up of a major and wide-ranging review of health education in Scotland. This is one of the four central priority areas recommended in the SHARPEN report and which were accepted by the Government. It is a key aspect of health policy.

The review will consider the purpose of health education programmes, identify the principal objectives of such programmes and the means by which the effectiveness of those objectives can be assessed.

It will also consider and examine the way in which health education is undertaken at both national and local levels and the role of those involved, including the Scottish Health Education Group, health boards and voluntary bodies as well as the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Scottish Education Department.

We hope to appoint management consultants to conduct the review. I expect them to talk to a large number of organisations and individuals in the course of the review and to complete their work towards the end of 1989.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each local authority in Scotland (a) the community charge level for 1989-90, (b) the Government's previous estimate of the level of community charge and (c) the percentage difference between (a) and (b).

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table. The Government's estimates were of what each authority's community charge would be if the authority maintained the level of services provided in 1988-89 and therefore did not increase the volume of its spending. The figures for regional and islands councils include water charges.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of aplications for regional selective assistance received between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989, (b) the number of applications that have been processed and (c) the total amount of money paid out in that period.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 May 1989]: In the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, 255 applications for regional selective assistance were received in Scotland. Of these, 237 have been fully processed. The remaining 18 are being processed. Total payments of regional selective assistance in Scotland in the same period have amounted to £37·6 million.

Investment Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was (a) the total number of applications for the investment grants from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) what was (a) the total number of applications for the innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 May 1989]: The information requested is as follows for the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989.

Regional enterprise grants

	Innovation grants	Investment grants
Number of applications received	100	374
Number of applications approved	37	189
Value of applications approved	£851,000	£1,097,000

Total expenditure on regional enterprise grants for the period covered is £282,000 out of a provision for 1988-89 of £1·6 million. Planned provision for 1989-90 is published in the Supply Estimates. Planned net provision for regional selective assistance and related schemes (including regional enterprise grants), consistent with the figures published in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £80 million.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of applications for regional development grants outstanding on 31 March 1988, (b) the number of those outstanding applications that have subsequently been processed, (c) the number of applications that are still outstanding and (d) the total amount of money paid out on regional development grants since 31 March.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 May 1989]: The figures requested for applications in Scotland under the revised regional development grant scheme are as follows:

	Number
Number of applications outstanding at 31 March 1988	5,117
Number of these fully processed by 3 May 1989:	4,932
Number under consideration but awaiting response from applicants:	185
Number of applications awaiting attention:	nil
Total payments made between 31 March 1988 and 31 March 1989:	£50·8 million

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of European regional development fund money allocated to each of the regions in 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 May 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Grampian and Lothian each received project awards of less than £0·5 million.

[2] Programme awards show only 1988 entries. Substantial forward commitment under programmes has been secured.

[3] Covers development areas in Strathclyde, plus Sanquhar in Dumfries and Galloway and Dumgoyne ward in Central.

[4] Covers Highlands and Islands Development Board area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Torture

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the number of representations he has made in the last five years about the denial of human rights and use of torture in each of the nations in membership of the United Nations.

Mr. Eggar: In the last five years we have made many representations to the Governments of many countries, both bilaterally and with our European Community partners.

The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Nasim Ahmed who was born on 2 July 1965, and whose reference is IMM/84536 and A.421238, first applied to the British post in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom; when Mr. Ahmed successfully appealed against refusal to grant him entry, and when the British port in Islamabad was instructed to issue Mr. Ahmed with a visa to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not immediately available. A further reply will be sent to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when Mrs. Musrat Begum, whose date of birth is 1 January 1958, applied to the post in Islamabad, to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and when a decision will be taken on her application;

(2) when Mr. Mohd Arif, who was born on 1 September 1963, will be issued with a visa by the post in Islamabad following his successful appeal against refusal to grant him permission to enter the United Kingdom;

(3) when Shamin Akhter, who was born on 12 November 1964, applied to the post in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom; when her application was refused; when the post despatched an explanatory statement setting out the reasons her application was refused; and if he will make a statement;

(4) when Mr. Sodigar Hussain applied to the post in Islamabad to join his wife, Mrs. Zaidah Begum whose date of birth is 27 January 1967; and when a decision on his application will be taken.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1989, c. 362]: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the questions to the correspondence unit of migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Married Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether he will review the current arrangements for visits between married prisoners where both spouses are in custody serving prison sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current arrangements for visits between imprisoned spouses and other close relatives are set out in "Prison Standing Order 5A 20", which is available in the Library. I see no need for a review.

Postal Voting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will examine the procedures and forms associated with postal voting in order to make them less complex.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 2 March 1989, at column 274.

Driving Offences (Ministerial Immunity)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the system which grants Ministers immunity from prosecution for driving offences while on official business.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In general, road traffic law applies to vehicles and persons in the public service of the Crown as it applies to other motorists. Ministers have no immunity from prosecution for driving offences.

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of those arrested for football-related incidents during the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons were season ticket holders;

(2) how many of those arrested for football-related incidents during the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons were of pensioner age;

(3) how many of those arrested for football-related incidents during the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons were women.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not recorded centrally.

Tamil Asylum Seekers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamil asylum seekers have been returned to Sri Lanka after being refused asylum in the United Kingdom since February 1988; and what efforts he has made to monitor the situation of those returned from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: No distinction is made in statistical records between Tamils and other Sri Lankans. Removals and deportations of failed asylum seekers are not normally recorded separately. However, it is known that 47 Sri Lankans who sought asylum at ports have been removed to Sri Lanka since 1 February 1988. Additionally, in the same period 28 Sri Lankans have been removed as illegal entrants and seven have been deported. Most of these applied for asylum and were refused after consideration of their application. Information on passengers refused entry and removed, as illegal entrants or as deportees, is published annually in "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom". The 1988 volume will be published in the summer.

On monitoring, I refer the hon. Member to a reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 March, at column 232.

Trevi Group

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a co-ordinator representing the interests of the United Kingdom has been appointed for the Trevi group.

Mr. Renton: A senior officer of the Home Office is co-ordinating issues concerning the free movement of persons, pursuant to the decision of the Rhodes council last December, and is attending regular meetings with his Community counterparts.

Police (Allowances)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether police officers who presently receive a rent and rates allowance are to be given a poll tax allowance following the abolition of rates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The recent arbitration award on police rent allowance stated specifically that payments of the community charge levied on police officers should not be reimbursed by police authorities.

Parole Board

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the operation of the parole board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The parole board is an independent advisory body responsible for its own organisation. We are, however, aware that, to cope with the increased caseload, the board has increased its sittings and the number of cases considered at each one. My right hon. Friend will also be appointing extra members to the board. In addition, we are taking steps to improve the service provided to the board by the parole unit.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by the parole board to decide upon the recommendaton of the local panel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: For parole applications referred to the parole board, the average time between receiving the local review committee recommendation and notifying the inmate of the result is about five months.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether electronic surveillance devices are used by his Department or by any organisation or agency acting on its behalf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend may wish to refer to the Home Office's guidelines on the use of surveillance in police operations issued on 19 December 1984, a copy of which was placed in the Library.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that the additional cost of the Hillsborough disaster inquiry to any individual police force be borne by central funds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 12 May, at column 569.

Hull Prison

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to implement that part of Judge Stephen Tumin's report which stated that B wing of Hull prison was no place for 15 and 16-year-old boys, or for any unconvicted prisoner under 21 years of age.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no feasible alternative at present to the continued use of B Wing of Hull prison to accommodate unsentenced prisoners under 21 years of age. The plan is for a new remand centre to be built at Everthorpe in 1991-92 which will relieve the situation. Meanwhile strenuous efforts are being made to improve the regime and conditions in Hull's B wing.

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any young people from Doncaster area are currently held in Hull prison while waiting for their cases to be dealt with by the courts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 12 May there were in Hull prison 14 unsentenced prisoners aged between 17 and 20 whose home addresses were recorded as in Doncaster.

Hunt Saboteurs

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department (1) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Buckinghamshire as to why hunt saboteurs were permitted to disrupt the activities of the Northamptonshire mink hounds at Snelson, near Olney, Buckinghamshire, on 6 May; and what action has been taken in relation to the alleged recording of the car numbers of supporters by some hunt saboteurs present for intimidatory purposes;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Buckinghamshire on the policing arrangements at the meet of the Northamptonshire mink hounds at Snelson, near Olney, Buckinghamshire, on 6 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that, following attempts to disrupt the start of the hunt, 15 demonstrators and one huntsman were arrested in order to prevent a breach of the peace. All were subsequently released without charge. The event itself took place without serious disruption. A number of huntsmen and demonstrators recorded each other's vehicle registration numbers before dispersing without further incident. In the circumstances, further police action was not considered appropriate.

Vagrancy

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 11 May, what statistics his Department collects on arrests of young people for vagrancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information about the total number of arrests by each police force is collected centrally but it is not broken down into specific offence categories. Information on the number of persons dealt with by the courts in respect of offences under sections 3 and 4 of the Vagrancy Act 1824 is published annually in "Criminal Statistics". The available information for 1987 appears in tables 1.1c and 1.1d of the supplementary tables volume 1.

Voluntary Sector (Funding)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for a review of Government funding of the voluntary sector.

Mr. Hurd: Government funding of the voluntary sector has risen steadily over the last decade and now amounts to some £2 billion. It serves a wide variety of valuable purposes in areas ranging from health care to employment and training and to the environment. The Government acknowledge the voluntary sector's important position as a third force alongside the public and private sectors of the economy and the valuable contribution which it makes.

The Government have concluded that it would be timely to examine their funding of the voluntary sector with a view to ensuring that the purposes for which grants are made are properly defined and have a beneficial purpose; and that funds are being effectively and efficiently deployed in a way which is of practical help and achieves the benefits intended.

The Government have decided, therefore, to set in hand an efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector. Its terms of reference will be to examine:

(i) the full range of programmes for Government funding of the voluntary sector;
(ii) the purposes for which financial provision is made under these programmes;
(iii) the different types of funding employed;
(iv) arrangements for the identification and selection of suitable voluntary organisations for particular tasks, for the setting of objectives and the monitoring and review of performance and results;
(v) arrangements for the administration of the programmes; and to make recommendations for achieving cost effective improvements where necessary.

The matters to which the scrutiny will have regard include:

(i) the need for improvements in the procedures for agreeing payment of grants and in the conditions under which grants are awarded, to ensure that Government funds are applied properly and without waste;
(ii) the need for standard conditions in respect of political activities, campaigning, equal opportunities and so on;
(iii) whether there is scope for standard criteria to be followed in agreeing grant applications and setting priorities;
(iv) ways of improving the setting of objectives both for particular projects and for continuing funding;
(v) the scope for improving the arrangements for evaluation and monitoring of the work carried out with Government funds by (a) periodic review and (b) regular monitoring;
(vi) the levels at which financial authority is exercised under various programmes;
(vii) methods of devising measures of performance both for continuing and short-term grants;
(viii) the information about the purposes of a particular programme made available (prior to application) to those seeking funding;
(ix) the benefits or otherwise of standard grant application procedures, taking account of the different circumstances where there is open application and where a single organisation is supported.

Such a wide-ranging scrutiny is unprecedented. It has therefore been agreed that it will be carried out by a team of officials from a number of Government Departments led by Mrs. Juliet Reisz (Home Office) under the ministerial supervision of a group of Ministers chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten). I expect to receive the scrutiny report in September.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the last 10 years, what funding his Department has provided for refuges for victims of domestic violence.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 May 1989]: None, but I understand that some public funds have been provided from other sources. We understand that some funds are available from local authorities and through the Department of Environment's urban aid programme. The Department of Health provides £100,000 per year to the Women's Aid Federation, which provides information and advice to local refuges.

DEFENCE

Jet Aircraft (Anniversary)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to commemorate the 50th anniversary on 12 July 1994 of the introduction of jet aircraft into RAF service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am sure that the Royal Air Force will play an appropriate part in commemorating this important event. Detailed planning will be set in hand nearer the time.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any information as to whether there were any significant differences regarding exposure to radiation as between the British and United States nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: An assessment on the basis of the evidence available to us shows that there were considerable differences in the situations pertaining to British and United States nuclear tests.

Royal Navy

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships of the present surface fleet are having their lives extended.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of surface ships are currently undergoing routine maintenance and refit, but none is having work done on it designed to extend its service life. Consideration is being given to the feasibility of extending the lives of the assault ships HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid in parallel with other options for replacing the capability they represent.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints of unlawful discrimination were investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; how many such complaints were found proved; and how many employers were ordered to pay compensation as a result of those findings, for each year since 1981.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is given in the following table:

	Complaints investigated	Findings of unlawful discrimination	Number of payments[1]
1981	42	5	—
1982	41	2	7
1983	28	5	4
1984	34	10	3
1985	46	7	2
1986	60	11	5
1987	56	4	8
1988	41	6	6
TOTAL	355	51	36

[1] Based on the date of payment, which does not necessarily fall in the year in which the finding is made.
[2] To 30 April.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement setting out the progress made in securing the sale of Messrs Harland and Wolff since his statement to the House on 22 March, Official Report, columns 1089-1100; and if, in particular, he will outline the financial contributions and loans being made available to the new owners by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 2 May 1989]: Following the signing of the heads of agreement on 22 March, preparation for the formal completion of the sale is under way. Discussions between officials and the MEBO/Olsen team are continuing, and officials are also involved in discussions with the European Commission in seeking its approval to the terms of the sale.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear to the House on 22 March, under the heads of agreement the privatised company will receive repayable loan stock and grant towards rationalisation of £98·75 million and intervention aid on new merchant orders.

Police Discipline

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has directed that disciplinary tribunals be set up under article 14 of the order;

(2) in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland directed the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to prefer disciplinary charges against members of the police service;

(3) in how many cases of complaints brought to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland directed the Chief Constable to send reports to the Director of Public Prosecutions as empowered under articles of the order;

(4) in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has expressed dissatisfaction with the way in which the investigation was conducted;

(5) how many cases to date have in the public interest been referred to the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland by (a) the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and (b) the Northern Ireland police authority, under section 8 of the Police (N.I.) Order 1987;

(6) how many cases to date, which have not been the subject of formal complaint, have been referred to the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland under section 8 of the Police (N.I.) Order 1987;

(7) in how many instances to date the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has been asked by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for reports relating to its functions, other than the report supplied at the end of each calendar year.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: The answer to each of these questions is none.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland recommended to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary that disciplinary charges should be preferred against members of the police service.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Twenty.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases of complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 against junior officers the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has determined that a criminal offence was committed; and in how many of these the Chief Constable determined that charges ought to be brought.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: It is not the function of the Chief Constable either to determine that offences have been committed or that charges should be brought. He is, however, able to determine that a criminal offence may have been committed by police officers and that the officers ought to be charged. It is then his duty to send the appropriate papers to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The available information does not indicate in how many cases he has referred papers to the director since the 1987 order came into force.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has disapproved of the person appointed to carry out the investigation.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Two.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases to date of complaints made under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has decided, in the public interest, to supervise the investigation where not required to do so under articles 9(I) and 8(I) of the order.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Ninety-nine.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases of complaints involving serious injury made to date, under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987, the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland has supervised the investigation.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Seventy-four.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 have been investigated by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland under section 9 of the order.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Article 9 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 deals with the supervisory powers of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints. To date 173 cases have been supervised under the provisions of article 9.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many complaints have been made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 against officers below the rank of superintendent; and how many of these have been investigated (a) informally and (b) formally;

(2) how many complaints have been made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 against officers of the rank of superintendent and above; and how many of these have been investigated (a) informally and (b) formally.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: Information is not available in the form requested. However, since the commencement of the Police (NI) Order 1987 on 29 February 1988 there were 2,809 complaints against police officers below the rank of assistant chief constable. Of these, 752 have been withdrawn; 128 informally resolved and 1,929 have been or are at present being formally investigated.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 have been investigated formally by (a) members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary appointed to do so and (b) members of our United Kingdom police forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: I understand that 1,929 complaints have been or are at present being formally investigated by members of the RUC. No complaints have been investigated by members of other United Kingdom police forces.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 have been deemed suitable for informal resolution by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: I understand that 128 complaints have been found suitable for informal resolution since February 1988.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987 have been referred by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland for investigation.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: The investigation of complaints is a police responsibility. The Independent Commission for Police Complaints has wide supervisory powers in relation to complaints. To date 2,446 complaints have been referred by the Chief Constable to the commission.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints made to date under the Police (N.I.) Order 1987, have been adjudicated upon by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: The Chief Constable has not himself chaired any disciplinary hearings arising from complaints made under the order.

Elections

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been or will be taken to ascertain the number of persons refused a ballot paper at (a) the local government elections in Northern Ireland on 17 May and (b) EEC election in June, on the grounds that they were not able to produce one of the documents set out as necessary for the proof of identity.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 May 1989]: None. I have no evidence to suggest that such steps are necessary. All electors should possess or can readily obtain free of charge at least one of the range of specified documents which are listed on the back of the poll card, and I am satisfied that the system is now well understood.

ENERGY

Energy Sources

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to encourage the greater use of environment-friendly sources of energy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All sources of energy have enrivonmental consequences, but the non-fossil obligation in the Electricity Bill will guarantee a level of diversity for electricity generation. In addition, my Department is giving specific encouragement through its support for research and development on renewable forms of energy and clean, more efficient, coal technologies.

In recognition of the potential of renewables, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced that the Government had decided to add a number of extra tranches to the non-fossil fuel obligation. These will be reserved exclusively for renewable projects. This will help realise the environmental benefits which renewables offer.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 3 May, column 151, what reply, and on what date, he made to the letter from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The letter is currently receiving attention and a reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the current research projects into renewable sources of energy which are sponsored by his Department, with their estimated costs.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 19 December 1988, at columns 30-35. An update of this list, together with the estimated costs of the projects, will today be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HEALTH

Acute Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number of acute beds available and (b) the number of non-acute beds available in each district health authority, SHA and regional health authority; and if he will give the national total for each year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested has been placed in the Library and I have written to the hon. Member with a copy of such information. These figures amend those for 1987-88 provided to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 22 December, in the light of changes since reported by health authorities.

Abortions

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prostoglandin abortions were performed in England and Wales in 1987 (a) with and (b) without the use of other agents.

Mr. Freeman: The data are as follows.

Number of Prostoglandin Abortions performed in England and Wales in 1987.

a. Prostoglandins with other agents, 5,431.

b. Prostoglandins (only), 3,701.

John Leeman

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why John Leeman was discharged from Broadmoor in (a) 1974 and (b) 1981; what previous offences had been committed by John Leeman prior to being imprisoned in 1975; and what recommendations were made prior to the discharge of John Leeman from Broadmoor in 1981.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Leeman was conditionally discharged from Broadmoor hospital in 1974 on the recommendation of his responsible medical officer and a mental health review tribunal. Discharge was authorised by the Home Secretary.

Mr. Leeman was not discharged from Broadmoor in 1981. A Home Office direction terminating the restrictions on his discharge under the Mental Health Act 1959 took effect when he was in Parkhurst prison.

The record of an individual's criminal convictions is considered to be confidential, and is not disclosed except where there are overriding reasons for departure from the normal rules of confidentiality.

Health Care (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the review of the Health Service considered the reasons for the cost of health care in the United Kingdom compared with other industrial countries; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage of gross domestic product to one place of decimals spent on (a) public and (b) private health care in other industrial countries together with an estimate of the extent to which the relative cost in the United Kingdom is due to (i) the standard of health (ii) the number of elderly persons, (iii) the level of remuneration of employees and (iv) the level of public provisions.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's review of the NHS took into account a wide range of information about the costs of health care provision in this country and overseas.

The OECD's latest estimates of public and private expenditure on health as percentages of GDP in 12 leading industrial countries are shown in the table.

Differences in health expenditures between countries both in absolute and in relative terms are influenced by a wide range of economic, social and cultural factors the individual components and impacts of which are the subject of continuing research both here and abroad.

However, the raw percentages reported by the OECD will reflect the effects of factors such as the type of health funding systems adopted by individual countries; the mix of items comprising expenditure on health care and differences in relative prices.

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to summarise here the results of relevant international research into this subject.

Public and private expenditure on health as a percentage of GDP, 1986

Hospitals (Running Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government will take into account the higher cost of running hospitals in buildings such as hutted camps and Victorian workhouses when the new arrangements for the hospital services are introduced.

Mr. Freeman: The introduction of a system for charging for capital announced in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will enable health authorities to appraise capital investment options more effectively. Comparison of the running costs of hospitals of different ages, types and functional conditions is complicated by a number of factors including the tendency for new hospitals to be used more intensively than those they replace. The Department is sponsoring research in this area to see to what extent overall running costs are related to the physical characteristics of the hospital stock. If successful this research would add further to the quality of investment appraisal in the National Health Service.

Pensioners

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the population of females over 60 years and males over 65 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows.

Mid 1987 estimates of resident population (thousands)

	Males aged 65 and over	Females aged 60 and over	Total persons over retirement age
England	2,949·0	5,750·8	8,699·8

Northern Ireland	74·9	152·7	227·6

Population estimates relating to mid-1988 are currently being prepared and will become available shortly.

Electorates

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the shire counties, London boroughs and metropolitan boroughs in England in ranking order according to the degree by which their electorates vary from the nationally averaged electorate appropriate to the numbers of parliamentary constituencies within them.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received regarding the genetic effects of radiation exposure.

Mr. Freeman: The National Radiological Protection Board is under a statutory obligation to provide advice to Government and others on the effects of radiation. The board's advice on genetic effects of radiation exposure is contained in NRPB publication R226, "Health Effects Models Developed from the 1988 UNSCEAR Report", a copy of which will be placed in the Library shortly. I am advised that there is some evidence that radiation causes genetic defects in animals; however, epidemiological studies of groups of people exposed to large doses of radiation have produced no conclusive evidence of any genetic damage that has been passed on to their children.

Gynaecologists

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by his Department to candidates for consultancy posts in gynaecology concerning their rights under the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has not issued any guidance to candidates for consultant posts in gynaecology, not all of which involve duties relating to the termination of pregnancy. Under a long-standing agreement with the medical profession no reference to termination duties should be included in the advertisement of hospital posts, but it should be included in the job description made available to all applicants.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any plans for hospitals in the Yorkshire regional health authority to consult (a) medical staff, (b) non-medical staff and (c) members of the general public in the hospital catchment area before putting themselves forward as possible self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: Only expressions of interest in self-governing status are being requested at this stage. When applications are invited, RHAs will seek the views of those with an interest in an application, particularly the health authorities concerned, staff, general practitioners, CBCs and the local community.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will require hospitals which seek to become self-governing to undertake ballots of all medical and non-medical staff to determine the level of support for such proposals; and whether he will meet the cost of any such ballots.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence of consultation with medical and non-medical staff he will require in support of applications by hospitals to become self-governing;

(2) what evidence of consultation with patients he will require in support of applications by hospitals to become self-governing.

Mr. Mellor: RHAs will give publicity to applications and will seek the views of those with an interest which will be submitted to me to consider alongside the application.

NHS Review

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates will be the annual capital charge for a body scanner with an initial purchase price of £500,000 under the proposals in his White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Mellor: We are still considering the detailed basis of valuation of assets for capital charging purposes so no estimate is yet possible. The NHS review working paper Number 5 on capital charges describes in further detail how the proposals will be implemented.

Pontefract Hospital

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the complaints made by families of patients who have attended the hospital alleging a fall in standards of the elderly care unit in the Pontefract hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many written complaints have been made to authorities about changes in standards at the elderly care unit in Pontefract hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has received any representation about changes in the standards of the support services in the elderly care unit of Pontefract hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The DHA follows up all complaints (figures in the table show complaints and letters of appreciation). An unusually high figure for January to March this year led to individual discussions with complainants and the CHC secretary. As a result of this local managers have taken action to remedy immediate problems (for example over linen supply) and to improve staff training and counselling. I am sure the DHA will ensure that the appreciation of the services in this unit is matched by high quality care.

Remanded Juveniles

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is giving any consideration to funding secure accommodation for remanded juveniles from Doncaster and neighbouring areas awaiting a court appearance who, because of their behaviour, are unsuitable for living in normal open local authority children's homes.

Mr. Mellor: I have approved a grant in principle, to enable Humberside county council to provide a new 10 place secure unit. This will provide accommodation for remands, and other children, who need this specialised form of care from local authorities in the Yorkshire and Humberside region generally, including Doncaster. I understand tenders have already been sought for the project.

Westminster and Chelsea Teaching Hospital

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) why no provision is made in table 4 of the Supply Estimates for class XIV, vote 1, for the costs of constructing the new Westminster and Chelsea teaching hospital;

(2) what resources have been allocated in the next three financial years for construction of the new Westminster and Chelsea teaching hospital.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 April 1989]: Provision for estimated expenditure on the Westminster and Chelsea hospital is contained within the total sum analysed in table 4. As a result of an administrative error the scheme is not, however, separately identified. I apologise for the omission. The information requested, set out in the form in which it would otherwise have appeared in the Supply Estimate, is given in the table.

Spectacles and Dental Treatment

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will now make a statement on the arrangements which have been made to reimburse those people who may have been required to pay too much for spectacles or dental treatment as a result of incorrect instructions having been issued to the staff in the agency benefits unit.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 2 May 1989]: Starting in the week beginning 15 May, the agency benefits unit of the Department of Social Security will reassess claims from those who, between 11 April and 4 November 1988, were assessed as having to make a contribution towards relevant costs and had non-dependents living with them.

Where the reassessment shows entitlement to more help, the unit will send claimants a special claim form which will ask for details of charges paid and other relevant costs incurred. Where people paid too much it will be refunded.

A special arrangement for optical vouchers is necessary to avoid disproportionate administrative costs. Those who obtained glasses will be paid the difference between the mistakenly assessed contribution and the correct one. This will mean that everyone will get at least their proper entitlement or—generally in the case of the cheaper lens prescriptions—more than that.

Child Minders

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Nurseries and Childminders Act 1948 for all child minders to be officially registered.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 May 1989]: Local authority social services departments are responsible for enforcing the registration requirements in the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948 (as amended) and they have power to prosecute offenders.

The Government have undertaken to update the 1948 Act by introducing amendments to the Children Bill at present being considered by a Standing Committee of the House.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library details of each major publicity campaign mounted by his Department in 1985-86 and each successive year, including in each case the objectives of the campaign, the intended audience and the outcome of the monitoring of the achievement of the intended objectives, and national research conducted for him by the Central Office of Information together with a note of the intended objectives in the campaigns in 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 May 1989]: The following is a list of major publicity campaigns mounted by my Department where expenditure has exceeded £0·5 million in any financial year over the period 1985-86 to 1988-89:

Campaign	Objectives	Audience
Aids	To provide information on the means of transmission of and prevent the spread of HIV infection	The general public
Drug misuse	To provide information on the risks of and reduce the incidence of drug misuse	The general public
Nurse recruitment	To improve recruitment and retention of trainee and qualified nurses to meet the future needs of the NHS	Potential recruits and former NHS employees

Information on the outcome of monitoring and the achievement of objectives is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Research conducted by the Central Office of Information on major campaigns over the financial years 1985-86 to 1988-89 is as follows:

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

7. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received in favour of the retention of wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: We have received about 360 representations in favour of retaining wages councils, including those referred to by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 21 March, at columns 555-56.

68. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the Government's proposed abolition of the wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent on 21 March, Official Report, columns 555-56, and to the hon. Member for Oldham, West on 23 March, Official Report, columns 798-802. Since those replies about 50 further representations have been received.

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from British managers in respect of his plans to abolish wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not this Department's practice to reveal the content of representations made by either individuals or organisations. I would refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 21 March, Official Report, columns 555-56 and to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 23 March, Official Report, columns 798-802.

21. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what protection will be offered to the low-paid after the abolition of the wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: The future of the wages councils has yet to be decided. However, the best protection for any worker is the removal of mechanisms and practices which may threaten his continued employment or prevent his initial recruitment.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

15. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: 430,000 people have started their own business under the enterprise allowance scheme since it began in 1982. Some 87,000 people are currently in receipt of the allowance.

Self-employment

17. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently self-employed in the east midlands.

Mr. Cope: In December 1988 there were 205,000 self-employed people in the east midlands, an increase of 27,000 over the previous two years.

43. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently self-employed in the south-west.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 302,000 self-employed in the south-west region. This represents an increase of 35,000 or 13 per cent. since December 1986.

39. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were self-employed in (a) March 1983 and (b) March 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Estimates for March 1989 are not yet available. In March 1983 there were 2,147,000 self-employed in Great Britain. In December 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, the number was 2,988,000. This represents an increase of 841,000 or 39 per cent. since March 1983.

Company Law

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy towards implementation of the European Economic Community fifth directive on company law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We shall continue to oppose vigorously the proposals for compulsory worker participation in this draft directive. They are unnecessary and would seriously damage the excellent voluntary arrangements which exist in many United Kingdom companies.

Labour Statistics

16. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of fall in unemployment in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the standard region of East Anglia, defined as Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire, unemployment fell by 19,100, or 34·3 per cent., over the 12 months to March 1989 on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis. It is now at its lowest level for well over eight years; and the unemployment rate at 3·5 per cent. is less than half of what it was three years ago.

19. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the recent rate of fall in unemployment in the east midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to March 1989 unemployment in the east midlands fell by 35,500 on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis. At 118,200 unemployment in the region is now at its lowest level for eight years.

20. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of fall in unemployment in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to March 1989, unemployment in the west midlands fell by 67,800, or 27·2 per cent., on the consistent seasonally adjusted basis and is now at its lowest level for well over eight years. The unemployment rate in the west midlands is now down to 6·7 per cent. and has been falling faster than in any other region of the country.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of employment in the European Economic Community nations and in European Free Trade Association nations; and what were the comparable figures five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Cope: The latest published information available for all countries is for 1987. The figures are as follows:

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table from the 1988 labour force survey, for each Great Britain region and Greater London, by male-female, and claimant status, showing the numbers of people without work who had looked for a job in the four week reference period, and were available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Lee: The available information for 1988 is given in table A. A reliable analysis of the regional figures by claimant status cannot be provided for individual years, but averages for the four years 1985 to 1988 are given in table B.

Note:

The figures from the labour force survey are subject to sampling errors. In some cases figures may not appear to add because of rounding.

100. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now employed in service industries in South Yorkshire, expressed as a percentage of the workforce; and what is the comparable figure for the south-east.

Mr. Lee: The available information about employment in the county, taken from the census of employment, is for employees in employment and the latest available figures are for September 1984. At that time, 58 per cent. of all employees in employment in South Yorkshire were employed in service industries; the comparable September 1984 figure for the South East region was 73 per cent.

More up-to-date employee estimates for counties, from the September 1987 census of employment, will become available later this year.

90. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in the northern region.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 18 April 1989. Official Report, column 153.

84. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 18 April 1989, Official Report, column 154.

75. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in the west midlands.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 18 April 1989. Official Report, column 152.

69. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently in employment.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the work force in employment in Great Britain stood at 25,961,000, the highest level on record. This represents an increase of 2,964,000 or 13 per cent. since March 1983. This rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

55. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the changes in levels of unemployment on the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to March 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom fell by 535,800, on a consistent basis. Unemployment has now fallen over 32 consecutive months by 1,215,100 since July 1986.

51. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently self-employed in East Anglia.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 138,000 self-employed in East Anglia. This represents an increase of 22,000 or 19 per cent. since December 1986.

48. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the recent rate of fall in unemployment in the south-east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the 12 months to March 1989, the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the south-east fell by 159,500, on a consistent basis. At 387,500, unemployment in the south-east is now at its lowest level for more than eight years.

44. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in East Anglia.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) and for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 18 April 1989, Official Report, column 153.

45. Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) on 18 April 1989, Official Report, column 152.

42. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the level of employment in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) on 18 April 1989, Official Report, column 151.

36. Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on current levels of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: In March 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,918,100, the lowest for more than eight years on a consistent basis.

Enterprise Training

22. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently obtaining skills on enterprise training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Over the last financial year about 53,000 people have taken up this type of training. This represents an increase of 9,000 on the previous year's total.

North Derbyshire (Coalfield Communities)

23. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has plans to increase the numbers in employment in the coalfield communities of north Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures, which are all available in north Derbyshire as elsewhere, and which are helping to increase the numbers in employment.

During the 12 months to March 1989 unemployment in Derbyshire fell by 10,183, 24·2 per cent. of the March 1988 figure.

Remedial Education

24. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government training initiatives aimed at the long-term unemployed includes provision for remedial education where required.

Mr. Nicholls: An important aspect of employment training is to improve trainees' awareness of the work environment and enhance their motivation and confidence. Provision for vocational literacy and numeracy training is included in employment training where unemployed people need such help to benefit fully from occupational training. Where appropriate, training is also offered in English as a second language. The aim is to integrate training in these skills with occupational training wherever possible.

Construction Industry Training Board

25. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future of the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 14 February 1989. Consultations with the board and organisations representing employers in the construction industry are continuing.

Low Pay

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the eradication of low pay.

Mr. Nicholls: Low pay is a relative concept. No matter how much living standards rise, some workers will always be paid less than others. The best way to help the lower paid is through the development of a prosperous and growing economy, which the Government's policies are helping to achieve.

52. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the incidence of low pay in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Nicholls: Pay in Yorkshire and Humberside, as elsewhere, is a matter for employers and employees or their representatives to determine.

Secondary Picketing

27. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to alter the present legislation on secondary picketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: As indicated in the Green Paper, "Removing Barriers to Employment", which was published on 20 March 1989, the Government propose no change to the law on picketing.

Training and Enterprise Councils

28. Mr. Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet representatives of the chambers of commerce to discuss the establishment of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Over the past few months, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have had frequent contacts with individual chambers and with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce to discuss the establishment of TECs.

Chambers of commerce have been very active in improving employer commitment to training and are playing a key role in the establishment of TECs. We look to their continued support and involvement.

61. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met employers to discuss training and enterprise councils in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We have been encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country and in East Anglia to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils. A number of employers from the area attended a dinner on training and enterprise councils in late February given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

We understand that a number of groups of employers are interested in establishing training and enterprise councils in East Anglia and we look forward to receiving their proposals.

Tourism and Catering

29. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the development of tourism in Northumbria.

Mr. Lee: Northumbria already attracts more than 4 million visitors each year. With its combination of beautiful countryside, historic towns, and a wealth of natural and heritage attractions, the region offers considerable potential for further expansion of its tourism industry. The Gateshead garden festival in 1990 will help provide an additional stimulus to the development of the region.

98. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met with local tourist authorities to discuss promoting and developing tourism in the north-west of England.

Mr. Lee: I am in virtually weekly contact with north-west tourist authorities to discuss promoting and developing tourism in that region.

37. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the tourism and catering industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that, in December 1988, there were 1·4 million employees in employment in tourism-related industries in Great Britain. This figure includes only those catering activities related to tourism. There are no directly comparable estimates for the number of self-employed, but according to the preliminary results of the 1988 labour force survey, it is estimated that there were 0·2 million self-employed workers in the hotel and catering industry in the spring of 1988.

European Community Social Fund

30. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to secure European social fund grants for projects in the Borders.

Mr. Cope: Applications for finance from the European social fund for the Borders were forwarded to the European Commission in the normal way and with full support from my Department. The decision on which projects are funded rests with the Commission.

40. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what efforts are being made to secure European social fund grants for projects in Cornwall.

Mr. Cope: Applications for finance from the European social fund for Cornwall were forwarded to the European Commission in the normal way and with full support from my Department. The decision on which projects are funded rests with the Commission.

Employment Training

32. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the operations of the employment training scheme in south Yorkshire.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training in south Yorkshire continues to make excellent progress providing unemployed people with a wide range of training opportunities to help them acquire the skills and experience needed to get jobs.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether all new recruits to employment training during 1989-90 will continue to receive training premiums of £11·95, £11·25 and £10, depending on their circumstances; whether he has any plans to increase each of these training premiums in line with inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: As was announced on 12 April 1989, from 22 May all new entrants to employment training will be paid a training premium of £10 per week. All trainees receiving a premium of £11·25 or £11·95 at 22 May will continue to do so until they leave the programme.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the profiles of the number of expected starts with training managers, excluding conversion from other programmes, on employment training for each month since September 1988, for each training agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: Profiles of the number of expected starts with training managers are for internal management purposes only.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of European social fund funding he is seeking for employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The United Kingdom has submitted a number of applications for European social fund aid in respect of anticipated expenditure under the employment training programme which are being considered by the European Commission in the light of the total demands being made by the United Kingdom and other member states. The Commission has indicated that European social fund aid is to be allocated for the employment training programme but the amounts are not yet known. A decision will be given shortly.

Wages Inspectors

33. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors there are in the north-west region; and how many there were in 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: There are currently 12 inspectors in post in the north west division of the wages inspectorate. There were 21 inspectors in the division in 1979 and 11 in 1987.

56. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors there are nationally; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Currently there are 66 wages inspectors in post nationally. Arrangements are in hand to bring the number of inspectors up to the full complement of 71. In 1979, there were 158 inspectors.

Employees (Contracts)

34. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, how many employees have contracts which exclude rights to redundancy or unfair dismissal.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Wages

35. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best available estimate of the proportion of the work force earning less than £3·80 per hour.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the New Earnings Survey that about 40 per cent. of the adult work force in Great Britain, including both full-time and part-time employees, earned less than £3·80 per hour in April 1988.

Unit Labour Costs

38. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much unit labour costs in the United Kingdom have increased over the last 12 months; and what information he has as to by how much labour costs have increased over the same period in France, West Germany, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Lee: International comparisons of unit labour costs for the whole economy are not available. However, the latest available information for manufacturing industries is provided in the table:

Unit labour costs in manufacturing
Percentage changes in the year to the fourth quarter of 1988

	per cent.
United Kingdom	0·4
France	−1·5
West Germany	0·7
Japan	−2·0
United States	1·1

Notes:

1. The percentages are calculated from index series produced by the International Monetary Fund; the latest available figures for the five countries on a consistent basis are for the fourth quarter of 1988.
2. The source index series are in local currency and are not adjusted for exchange rate changes.

Skill Centres

41. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a prospectus will be sent to all those bidding for the skill centres.

Mr. Cope: The skills training agency will be offered for sale through a private tender process, and the sale will be open to all interested parties.

65. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who owns the freehold of Deptford skill centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The freehold is Crown property, at present held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment. Management and financial responsibility is a matter for the Training Commission.

47. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will report to the House what progress has been made on the management buy-out of the national network of skill centres.

Mr. Cope: In his statement to the House on 13 March, Official Report, column 35, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State referred to the existence of a management buy-out team, and said that he had agreed to give them financial assistance to make a bid when the skills training agency is offered for sale. It is for the team to decide whether to bid when the formal offer for sale occurs.

Dock Labour Scheme

46. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme in the port of London.

Mr. Nicholls: The restrictions of the dock labour scheme have contributed to the decline in business and jobs in the port of London and in other ports covered by the scheme.

Non-oil cargo passing through the port of London area declined by 9 per cent. between 1970-1987, from 30·4 million tonnes to 27·7 million tonnes. The number of registered dock workers declined from 16,573 in 1970 to 1,739 in May 1989.

85. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme in Hull, Goole and Grimsby.

Mr. Nicholls: The restrictions of the dock labour scheme have contributed to the declining share of business and jobs in the ports of Hull, Goole and Grimsby.

The growth in trade handled by ports on the south and east coasts outside the dock labour scheme has been far greater than in the scheme ports, including Hull, Goole and Grimsby.

The number of registered dock workers in Hull, Goole and Grimsby fell from 4,470 in 1970 to 1,563 on 2 May 1989.

82. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many dockers employed in dock labour scheme ports are aged 25-35 years, 35-45 years and over 45 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The 1987 National Dock Labour Board annual report, the most recent available, provides the following information on the numbers of registered dock workers in each age group.

Age group	Number of workers
35-45	3,200
Over 45	6,408

79. Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme in Liverpool.

Mr. Nicholls: The restrictions of the dock labour scheme have contributed to the decline of business and jobs in the port of Liverpool and in other ports covered by the scheme.

Non-oil cargo passing through the port of Liverpool (including Garston) decreased from 16,464 tonnes in 1970 to 8,886 in 1987: a fall of 46 per cent. In the same period Heysham, a non-scheme, west coast port increased its traffic by over 300 per cent. The numbers of registered dock workers employed in Liverpool and Birkenhead has fallen from 10,449 in 1970 to 1,244 in April 1989.

67. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many dockers were employed in dock labour scheme ports and in non-dock labour scheme ports in (a) 1959 and (b) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

89. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many dockers were employed in dock labour scheme ports and non-dock labour scheme ports in 1959 and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: According to national dock labour board returns employment of registered dock workers in dock labour scheme ports declined from 71,846 in 1959 to 9,319 in May 1989. Figures for non-scheme ports over the same period are not available, but between 1983 and 1987 employment of dock workers in those ports rose by 10 per cent. to 3,900. A quarter of all dock workers are therefore now employed in non-scheme ports.

57. Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme in Southampton.

Mr. Nicholls: The restrictions of the dock labour scheme have contributed to the declining share of business and jobs in the port of Southampton.

The growth in trade handled by ports on the south and east coasts outside the dock labour scheme has been far greater than for scheme ports such as Southampton.

The number of registered dock workers in Southampton has dropped by 66 per cent., from 1,944 in 1970 to 681 in April 1989.

58. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1970, the number of registered dock workers has declined from 45,542 to 9,310—a drop of 79 per cent. Between 1967 and 1987, the share of the United Kingdom market held by non-scheme ports increased from 10 per cent. to nearly 30 per cent. of a smaller total tonnage.

The dock labour scheme has contributed to the declining share of business and jobs in the ports in which it operates.

59. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to discuss the reintroduction of casual labour into dock labour scheme ports with the National Association of Port Employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Arrangements following the abolition of the Dock Labour Scheme are a matter for employers and dock workers in the ports concerned, as is already the case for other workers in those ports and dock workers in ports outside the scheme. My right hon. Friend has no plans to enter into discussions with those concerned.

Employers of 93 per cent. of dock workers in scheme ports have given assurances not to return to a system of casual work. I understand that they have indicated a willingness to examine this and other issues on a port by port basis.

60. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations has he received on his White Paper, "Employment in the Ports, the Dock Labour Scheme"; and if he will make a statement.

53. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on his plans to abolish the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received a number of such representations. The abolition of the dock labour scheme will lead to increased investment and employment opportunities in British ports and ports areas, and has been welcomed by all sectors of industry.

95. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the past operation of the dock labour scheme in Immingham and Grimsby.

Mr. Nicholls: The restrictions of the dock labour scheme have contributed to the declining share of business and jobs in the port of Grimsby and Immingham.

The growth in trade handled by ports on the south and east coasts outside the dock labour scheme has been far greater than for scheme ports such as Grimsby and Immingham. The number of registered dock workers in Grimsby and Immingham fell from 1,344 in 1970 to 684 in May 1989.

"Removing Barriers to Employment"

49. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received in response to his Green Paper, "Removing Barriers to Employment".

Mr. Nicholls: Our Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" was published on 20 March and the closing date for comments is 20 June. We are, therefore, in the early stages of the consultation period. To date, six representations have been received.

Minimum Wage

50. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government will implement the Council of Europe's decency threshold of an hourly rate of £3·80 as a minimum wage.

Mr. Nicholls: No. there is no such thing as a Council of Europe decency threshold for a minimum acceptable level of earnings.

70. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to introduce a statutory minimum wage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. A national minimum wage would raise employers' costs and destroy jobs, including the jobs of those whom it was designed to help.

Work Force

54. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the anticipated changes in the make-up of the work force by age and sex over the next 10 years.

Mr. Lee: My Department's latest projections of the civilian labour force show a number of significant changes between now and the end of the century. In particular, it is expected that the share of young people in the labour force will decline markedly and the share of women will rise. These projections were published in the April 1989 edition of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

TUC

62. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he has any plans to meet the General Secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss industrial relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend meets the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Training Schemes

63. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people who would otherwise have been on the unemployment register have been on Government training schemes since 1979.

Mr. Lee: No such estimates are available.

Picketing

64. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to convert the current law on picketing to a voluntary code as recommended by the Trades Union Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment", published on 20 March, states that the Government propose no change to the law on picketing.

93. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss picketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no current plans for such a meeting.

West Midlands (Engineering Apprentices)

66. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the number of engineering apprenticeships in the west midlands, expressed as a percentage of the numbers available in 1979.

Mr. Cope: Currently in the midlands there are 54 per cent. of the number of apprentices registered with the engineering industry training board in 1979. It is not known how many engineering apprentices there are outside the board's registration system.

Wages Act 1986

71. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what assessment he has made of the effects of the Wages Act 1986 on young workers' pay (a) by region and (b) nationally.

Mr. Nicholls: The removal of wages council minima has enabled employers to offer, and young people to accept, jobs at rates which would previously have been unlawful, and there is evidence that this has resulted in increased job opportunities for those under 21. It is not possible to measure the effect of this greater flexibility on pay levels, but there has been no general reduction in the earnings of young people in wages council trades. These have continued to increase in real terms.

Skill Training

72. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skills training in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Cope: A skilled work force is essential to the growing economy in Yorkshire and Humberside. The Government recognise this and are playing their part. We are establishing local training and enterprise councils which will put employers in the lead in determining local skills training needs. Business growth training launched last month will help companies in Yorkshire and Humberside to improve the effectiveness of their training. In addition young people and unemployed adults are given the opportunity to train through YTS and employment training.

86. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skills training in the west midlands.

Mr. Cope: A skilled work force is essential to the growing economy in the west midlands. The Government recognise this and are playing their part. We are establishing local training and enterprise councils which will put employers in the lead in determining local skills training needs. Business growth training launched last month will help companies in the west midlands to improve the effectiveness of their training. In addition young people and unemployed adults are given the opportunity to train through YTS and employment training.

80. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skills training in the north-west.

Mr. Cope: A skilled work force is essential to the growing economy in the north-west. The Government recognise this and are playing their part. We are establishing local training and enterprise councils which will put employers in the lead in determining local skills training needs. Business growth training launched last month will help companies in the north-west to improve the effectiveness of their training. In addition young people and unemployed adults are given the opportunity to train through YTS and employment training.

Training Commission

73. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the development of the Training Commission.

Mr. Cope: The Employment Bill seeks to complete the abolition of the Training Commission.

New Businesses

74. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses have registered for value added tax during the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Cope: The net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses in 1987 was 45,000, or nearly 900 a week on average.

National Port Employers

76. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet representatives of the national port employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

YTS

77. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of two-year YTS.

Mr. Cope: Over 80 per cent. of those who complete their two-year YTS programme go into employment; over 60 per cent. of those who complete gain a qualification. YTS is providing the skills and qualification that young people and the country needs as we move into the 1990s.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees were in receipt of a training agency lodging allowance to undertake training away from their home by training agency area, at the end of March 1988, and the end of January, February and March 1989; and how many were in receipt of the allowance by region at March of each year since YTS started.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people of YTS eligible age, registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place at the end of January, February and March 1989; and of those how many were receiving bridging allowance or extended child benefit or income support.

Mr. Cope: I am satisfied that the Training Agency has more than sufficient YTS places available in all areas of the country for all those who apply for one.

Information on numbers receiving bridging allowance and for those whose parents were receiving extended child benefit is provided in the table. Information on the number of young people receiving income support is not available.

Numbers receiving bridging allowance

Date	Number
12 January 1989	11,994
9 February 1989	14,163
9 March 1989	13,955

Numbers whose parents are receiving extended child benefit

Date	Number
30 January 1989	1,451
27 February 1989	1,960
27 March 1989	2,000

Local Enterprise Agencies

78. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amount of Government funding was made available in 1988-89 to local enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: Government support to local enterprise agencies in the United Kingdom in 1988-89 exceeded £8·3 million.

Job Creation

81. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new initiatives he has to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment has fallen by over 1·2 million and for 32 months in succession, the longest and largest sustained fall on record, as a direct result of the sustained growth brought about by the Government's sound economic policies. Since 1983 the workforce in employment has increased by nearly 3 million and there are now more people in work in this country than ever before in our history. We will continue to provide the right conditions for this jobs growth to continue. In addition we already have in place a comprehensive range of measures to help unemployed people back into the jobs that are becoming available—in particular the restart programme, job clubs and employment training.

Unions (Secondary Action)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the legislation on secondary action in an industrial action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Proposals for the reform of the law on secondary action are contained in the Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" which was published on 20 March 1989.

Smoking

87. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his departmental policy towards smoking in the work place.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend welcomes the publication by the Health and Safety Executive in November 1988 of a free booklet "Passive Smoking at Work" which recommends that employers, in consultation with employees or their representatives, develop and implement policies to control smoking in their work place. The booklet advises employers to limit the exposure at work of non-smokers to tobacco smoke.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in the light of criticisms of the Health and Safety Executive's booklet "Passive Smoking at Work" he will take steps to withdraw this booklet from circulation and replace it with one which has the approval of the medical profession, and which takes account of the advice of the fourth report of the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend supports the advice given by the Health and Safety Executive in the booklet "Passive Smoking at Work" and has no intention of asking the executive to withdraw or replace it. The booklet takes account of the fourth report of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health and also refers readers to other sources of more detailed advice such as that published by the Health Education Authority. It outlines practical ways in which smoking policies can be introduced at work and was agreed with representatives of employers, trade unions and the medical profession.

Job Clubs

88. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs have been closed down, and are to be closed down in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Scotland and (c) England and Wales.

Mr. Lee: Changes to the job club network were announced in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 January 1989, Official Report column 810. As part of those changes the number of job clubs which have been closed down or are to be closed down shortly is:

	Number
(a) Strathclyde	5
(b) Scotland	7
(c) England and Wales	207

Alternative provision is available where job clubs have been closed.

Business Growth Training

91. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on business growth training.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 19 April 1989, Official Report, column 211.

Small Businesses

92. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the expansion of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with the CBI to discuss issues affecting small firms and other matters.

94. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss the development of small businesses.

Mr. Cope: I have regular contact with the BVCA but have no immediate plan to meet the chairman of the association.

Low Pay Unit

96. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received the most recent report of the low pay unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend is aware of this report and of similar publications prepared by the low pay unit, which do not call for any comment from him.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received the low pay Unit report, "Ten Years On: The Poor Decade"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has seen this report and similar publications prepared by the low pay unit, which purport to show large increases in the numbers of low-paid people, based on the unit's own definition and quoting the so-called Council of Europe "decency threshold". The Government do not accept the validity of those calculations. Earnings and take-home pay have increased in real terms at all levels of income since 1979, and among both women and men.

Companies (Worker Representation)

99. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next intends to discuss worker representation on company boards with his European Economic Community counterparts in the Council of Employment Ministers.

Mr. Cope: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs will be attending a meeting of internal market Ministers on 12 June when this subject may be discussed.

Asbestos

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what investigation the Health and Safety Executive has conducted into the burning of asbestos at the protein fractionation centre in Edinburgh adjacent to the Liberton and Southfield hospitals; and what conclusions they have reached.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are currently investigating the incineration of filters at the protein fractionation centre in Edinburgh. I will write to the hon. Member when the investigation is complete.

Cobalt Dust

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the results of the Health and Safety Executive's recent hard metal special national project.

Mr. Nicholls: Results so far available show that measurements of cobalt dust in air were below the current recommended occupational exposure limit at 16 factories visited by the Health and Safety Executive in the hard metal special national project. At 17 factories visited the level of cobalt dust was not controlled below the recommended limit.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Health and Safety Executive will be taking to ensure that compliance by the hard metal industry with the occupational exposure limit for cobalt is improved.

Mr Nicholls: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive have enforcement powers under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to require an employer to comply with his duties to ensure so far as is reasonably practicable the health, safety and welfare of his employees. These duties extend to the risks associated with the exposure of workers to cobalt dust.

At visits inspectors check that employers comply with the recommended occupational exposure limit for cobalt and its compounds and will take enforcement action necessary where companies do not meet the required standards.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what instructions Health and Safety Executive inspectors have been working in taking enforcement action in relation to employers' failures to comply with the cobalt occupational exposure limit and to provide adequate medical surveillance.

Mr. Nicholls: At visits, inspectors consider whether employers have complied with their duties under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare of their employees. Inspectors check that employers comply with the recommended occupational exposure limit for cobalt and its compounds and will take any enforcement action necessary where companies do not meet the required standards.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants called for restart interview have failed to attend their interview; how many of those failing to attend are believed to have found work; how many of those failing to attend have not found work; how many failing to attend have their benefit stopped and how many of these have successfully appealed against the benefit decision; and how many failing to attend have subsequently re-registered as unemployed in the most recent 12-month period.

Mr Lee: Between April 1988 and March 1989, 3,066,000 were called for restart interview of which 326,000 were referred to unemployment benefit offices for failing to attend that interview. 25,387 (7·8 per cent.) of these had their benefit or credits disallowed.

The other information requested is not available.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants each month have been referred to the unemployment benefit service due to doubts over non-availability or doubts about their restricted availability since December 1988 for each employment service region.

Mr. Lee: Up to December 1988 statistics on decisions by adjudication officers on availability cases were produced by the Department of social security on a six-monthly basis. From January 1989 the figures will be produced every quarter. The figures for the period ending 31 March 1989 are not yet available, but I will write to the hon. Member when statistics are to hand on decisions on availability cases for the period requested.

Child Minders

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many child minder allowances have been granted to lone parent ET participants since September 1988; and how many were granted during the most recently available monthly period, for each training agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the number of lone parents on employment training receiving child care payments before April 1989 is not available. The number of lone parents receiving child care payments during April is given in table 1.

Claimants (Surveys)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the terms of reference and other details of the surveys being carried out or commissioned by his Department amongst claimants at either unemployment benefit offices or jobcentres in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department commissioned the Harris Research Centre Ltd. to undertake a survey of claimants at unemployment benefit offices in the west midlands conurbation. Interviewing took place during March and April. All those interviewed were selected at random by interviewers. All interviews were anonymous and voluntary. The aim was to collect information about a representative sample of claimants, not about individuals.

This survey is part of a wider study of the labour market in the west midlands conurbation, which also includes a survey of employers' vacancies and recruitment practices. The aim of the study is to establish what the barriers are to the efficient operation of the labour market and, in particular to see what are the factors which prevent longer-term unemployed people from being able to take advantage of the available jobs and to help determine how best my Department's programmes can meet their needs.

Availability for Work

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list from the 1988 labour force survey by region, including Greater London and by male and female, the number of people not counted as unemployed by the definition using broad ILO guidelines on the grounds that they had not looked for a job in the four weeks prior to interview, but who stated that they would like a job if one was available, and (a) were available to start work within two weeks or (b) were not available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Lee: Preliminary results from the 1988 labour force survey as requested are shown in the following table:

Fair Employment Act (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those employers who have made a compensatory payment to a complainant under the Fair Employment Act; and what were the sums involved in each case, the original date of each settlement and the actual date of payment since the Act became law to the present time.

Mr. Viggers: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 21 April 1989 to the question from the hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) at column 316.

ENVIRONMENT

Job Creation

102. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many part-time jobs have been created by Cleveland county council since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: Cleveland county council employed 10,616 part-time staff in December 1979. By December 1988 it employed 12,927, a net increase of 2,311, or 21·8 per cent.

National Business Rate

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he estimates Lambeth will receive from the proceeds of the national business rate, in relation to the current yield from rates of non-domestic properties.

Mr. Gummer: The proceeds of the national business rate will be distributed as an equal amount per adult. The level of receipts in any area will depend on the distributable amount per adult and the number of adults in that area. This information will not be available before the autumn. It is of no significance to community chargepayers if the income from non-domestic ratepayers retained in Lambeth changes when the new system is introduced. Grant will be paid according to need. So if Lambeth retained more non-domestic rate income, the need for grant would be lower and chargepayers would not benefit.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the number of local authorities with designated gipsy sites and those without.

Mr. Trippier: The number of local authorities which are designated areas under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 is as follows:

	Designated	Not designated
Shire districts	94	203
Metropolitan districts	10	26
London Boroughs	22	10

Brodsworth Parish Council (Letter)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he replied to the letter sent to him by Brodsworth parish council in the county of South Yorkshire, dated 14 March, in respect of sewage and river pollution; and if he will publish his reply in the Official Report.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department replied to the council on 9 May and I have sent a copy to the hon. Member. I have no plans to publish the reply.

Puffins

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission a study into the disappearance of puffins along the south coast.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Nature Conservancy Council advised that there has been no fall in the overall numbers of puffins on the south coast. The latest available figures show a maximum of some 260 birds in the area between 1985 and 1987, compared with 205 in 1969-70. While some small colonies may have declined or moved elsewhere, any localised changes are not considered so significant, in relation to the total British puffin population of over 500,000 breeding pairs, to justify commissioning a study.

Sulphur Dioxide

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress being made to remove sulphur dioxide from power station and factory emissions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helen's, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 2 May, at column 53.

Community Charge

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table outlining how many people his Department estimates will gain and how many will lose as a result of the introduction of the community charge in (a) Leeds, West and (b) Kirkstall ward.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 16 March at column 318, to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen).

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out (a) all the exempt categories of those who will not have to pay the poll tax and (b) the exact nature and amount of the exemptions including housing benefit payment arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. The categories of people who are exempt from liability to pay the personal community charge are listed in schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988. We estimate that the number of individuals in these categories will be about half a million.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside of 8 May, Official Report, column 350, he will publish the letter in the Official Report.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply of 11 May at column 521 to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who (a) collected the local information for and (b) distributed the newspaper articles on the poll tax in the name of the Minister for Local Government which appeared last week.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. My articles were distributed by the Department's press office and the regional offices of the COI. The information they contained was collected from a range of sources.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the leaflets entitled "The Community Charge (the So-called Poll Tax); How It Will Work for You" have been printed.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1989]: A total of 23 million.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of printing the leaflets entitled "The Community Charge (the So-called Poll Tax); How it Will Work for You."

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1989]: The total cost of production was £367,887.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the newspapers which received articles on the poll tax in the name of the Minister for Local Government last week.

Mr. Gummer: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman shortly with this information.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when regulations relating to the processing of information gathered for the purpose of compiling the poll tax register will come into effect; what guidelines his Department will issue to councils on this matter; what representations he has received concerning the sending out by Westminster city council of registration forms with a 21-day deadline for reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 May 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Regulations prescribing the powers of community charges registration officers to require information from the public were laid before Parliament on 17 March and come into force on 22 May. Where information is required under this provision, the person concerned has 21 days within which to respond. It is open to CCRO's to seek information before that date on a voluntary basis but they have been advised that such requests would not have any statutory character. I expect however that most recipients of requests before 22 May will co-operate by providing the information to compile the register in a smooth and economical manner.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to meet the costs which have so far been incurred in setting up the community charge system in Nottingham beyond the £307,000 specific grant for 1989-90 already made available.

Mr. Gummer: No. To agree to meet any costs incurred by authorities in preparing for the community charge would give no incentive to efficiency. Nottingham has been allocated £306,864 specific grant and a similar amount of expenditure has been supported through RSG. It is now for it to use its available resources to ensure that the new arrangements are effectively implemented.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what a managing director would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in proportions of 80-20, respectively, if he or she lived in a typical five-bedroom house in Hornsey;

(2) what a home-help would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in proportions of 80-20, respectively, if he or she lived in a typical council high-rise flat in Hornsey.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 2 May, at column 46.

Sea Dredged Aggregates

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total United Kingdom demand for sea dredged aggregates for the last five years; what is the percentage growth over the last ten years; and what are the predicted levels of demand during the next five years.

Mr. Chope: The total United Kingdom demand for sea dredged aggregates over the last five years for which figures are available (1983-87) was 70·03 million tonnes (mt).

The percentage growth over the last 10 years (1977-87) is 46 per cent. Specific predictions for the estimated level of demand over the next five years (1989-93) are not available. But an estimate is made in MPG5, "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales" that the total level of demand over this period is likely to be 81·1mt.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, (Dr. Thomas) Official Report, 2 May, column 53, he will list the 12 sites earmarked by UK Nirex Ltd for further appraisal.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 2 May Official Report, column 53, if he will list the 12 sites chosen for further appraisal by Nirex.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received a list of the 12 reserve sites identified by Nirex.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the gross amount owed to each local authority in England in rent arrears; what proportion such sums represent as a percentage of rental income; and how much has been owed in each case for (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) two years.

Mr. Trippier: A table was placed in the Library on 1 March this year showing rent arrears reported at 1 April 1988 and the arrears as a percentage of rent roll. Corresponding information for the position at 1 April 1989 will be available towards the end of this year.

Information about total tenants' arrears (including rates and service charges and so on) together with estimates of the length of arrears is contained in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publication "Housing Rents Statistics at April 1988", a copy of which is also in the Library.

BISF Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he was invited to the national meeting of the BISF home owners held on 6 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I was not invited to this meeting. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 8 May at column 353, to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart).

Waste Reduction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that integrated pollution control will require industry to take account of waste minimisation and waste reduction.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Government's proposals industrial processes scheduled for integrated pollution control will need a consent from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to operate. That consent will require the generation and emission of specified polluting wastes to be minimised through the application of best available technology not entailing excessive cost. The consent will also require the minimisation of the impact on the environment as a whole of all waste outputs from scheduled processes.

Energy Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that integrated pollution control will require industry to take account of energy conservation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Integrated pollution control will not directly regulate the energy efficiency of prescribed processes.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 24 April, Official Report, column 413, if he will make a statement as to the parameters within which Her Majesty's Government will define pensions for Crown Suppliers employees as broadly comparable to present arrangements.

Mr. Chope: The pension terms on offer would be assessed by the Government Actuary.

Plumstead Baths and Library

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recommendations he has received from English Heritage about the possible listing of Plumstead baths and library; and what has been his response.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage has recommended that the baths and library are not buildings of special architectural or historic interest, and I have decided to accept its advice. Accordingly, these buildings will not be included in the statutory list.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is being undertaken to establish whether cryptosporidia is contained in water filter beds.

Mr. Howard: Research into cryptosporidia in water supplies is one of the questions being examined by the group of experts established by the Government under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated cost for each of (a) Morecombe South; (b) Morecombe North, and (c) Bardsea of (i) a long sea outfall, (ii) full sewage treatment works with a short sea outfall, and (iii) full sewage treatment works with a long sea outfall to enable them to comply with European Economic Community bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; and when the appropriate solution will be put in place, giving the estimated cost of commencement and completion.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 8 May, at column 352, to his question about the bathing waters at Formby, Ainsdale and Southport.

Domestic Waste

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage the reprocessing of domestic waste by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for waste disposal authorities to choose the most appropriate method of disposal for their own locality, taking account of the economic and environmental implications in so doing. We are currently considering changes to the legislation which will ensure that the true costs of waste disposal are met by those disposing of the waste. It may well be that recycling or other methods of treating waste will then be seen as more attractive options.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the results of the review of local government district council boundaries in the west midlands.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 11 May 1989]: Before 31 March 1992—the date by which the Local Government Boundary Commission must complete its reviews.

Paper Recycling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many paper recycling plants there are operating in the United Kingdom currently; what are their respective capacities; and how much recycled paper they produce.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 May 1989]: I understand that there are 54 mills in the United Kingdom (approximately half of all the paper and board mills in the country) that use waste paper. In 1988 they consumed a total of 2·4 million tonnes of waste paper and produced an estimated 2·1 million tonnes of paper made wholly or partly from waste paper. Details of their respective capacities or production are not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to encourage the recycling of paper and the use of recycled paper.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 May 1989]: The Department has shown the way by phasing in the use of recycled paper for correspondence since 1984; other Departments are doing the same.

We are also co-operating in the current series of seminars organised by the Department of Trade and Industry aimed at raising awareness of the growing demand for waste paper as a raw material for newsprint production.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary for Trade and Industry has responsibility for co-ordinating Government policy on recycling. I and other colleagues work closely with him to promote recycling whenever it is an economically viable method of waste disposal.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the consequences for local authorities of financing new capital expenditure direct from revenue after the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Under the proposed new capital finance system contained in the Local Government and Housing Bill, local authorities will be free to finance additional capital expenditure direct from a revenue account. This freedom will extend the accountability of the community charge to capital as well as revenue expenditure. I am discussing with the local authority associations how allowance for the direct financing of capital expenditure should be included in the total revenue needs assessment used to determine local authorities' needs grant.

Tree Preservation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to announce the results of his review of legislation relating to tree preservation orders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The review of tree preservation policy and legislation is still in progress.

It is too soon to say when a further announcement may be made.

NATIONAL FINANCE

"Spot the Ball" Competitions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was collected in value added tax on "spot the ball" competitions in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not available at a sufficient level of detail for estimates to be made.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education (Research)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish an estimate in current prices of his support for research in higher education through (a) the Universities Funding Council, (b) the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and (c) the research councils.

Mr. Jackson: Estimated expenditure on research in higher education in 1989-90 is as follows:

	£ million
UFC	780.0
PCFC	10·3
Research councils	345·1
Total	1,135·4

Open University (Assistance to Commonwealth)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the contribution made by the Open university in assisting Commonwealth countries in establishing universities and other teaching-at-a-distance educational establishments.

Mr. Jackson: Staff from the Open university have undertaken numerous short-term specialist consultancies and have organised workshops throughout the Commonwealth, in Africa, Asia, and Australasia. They have also arranged familiarisation and specialist programmes for visitors from Commonwealth countries. In addition the Open university has played a major part in planning and developing Open universities in India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka and Hong Kong.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General if, pursuant to his answer of 5 April, Official Report, column 185, he will list the total number of immigration appeals (a) lodged and (b) lodged and ready to proceed.

The Attorney-General: On 29 March, the most recent date for which figures are available, 14,186 appeals had been lodged with the immigration adjudicators and 465 applications for leave to appeal had been lodged with the immigration appeal tribunal. On that date, the total number of cases lodged and ready to proceed to a hearing (a) before the adjudicators was 2,627; and (b) before the tribunal was 262.

DEFENCE

Headquarters Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid to each of the following contractors by his Department in respect of headquarters contracts in the year ended 31 March 1988 (a) Wimet Wear Parts Ltd., (b) J. S. Chinn Holdings Ltd., (c) Abbey Panels Investments plc., (d) Coventry Climax Engines Ltd., (e) Cornercroft Engineering Ltd., (f) Rotherham and Sons Ltd., (g) Commercial Shearing Inc., (h) Dunlop Ltd., (i) Alvis Ltd., (j) Lucas Aerospace Ltd., and (k) GEC Telecommunications Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: The payment made to each of the following companies in the year ended 31 March in respect of headquarters contracts were as follows:

	£ million
Coventry Climax Engines Ltd.	1·75
Dunlop Ltd.	13·00
Alvis Ltd.	21·00
Lucas Aerospace Ltd.	35·00

Payments made to GEC Telecommunications Ltd. are included within the total payments made to the General Electric Company and cannot be separately identified.

We have no record of any headquarters contracts having been placed with any of the other companies listed.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the general differences which occur between individual memoranda of understanding governing the international collaborative production of military equipment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Within the general framework used for memoranda of understanding governing collaborative projects, issues which arise for consideration on a case-by-case basis include arrangements for management, contracting, cost and work-sharing, intellectual property rights and exports to third parties.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is possible to identify, from the records used to compile the regional disaggregation of expenditure published on page 62 of "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988", volume 2, the proportion of expenditure made to Rolls-Royce plc. which was allocated to the west midlands standard region in that analysis.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to identify payouts to individual companies from the information used to compile the regional disaggregation of expenditure published in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates". Furthermore, it would be a breach of commercial confidence to give the degree of detail requested for an individual company.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid to each of the following contractors in respect of headquarters contracts by his Department in the year ended 31 March (a) National Plastics Ltd., (b) Commercial Hydraulics Keelavite Ltd., (c) Kalmar Climax Ltd., and (d) Jaguar Cars Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: The payments made to each of these companies in the year 31 March 1989 in respect of headquarters contracts were as follows:

	£ million
National Plastics Ltd.	4·7
Commercial Hydraulics Keelavite Ltd.	2·3
Kalmar Climax Ltd.	2·1
Jaguar Cars Ltd.	1·4

Mr. Nellist To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the value of headquarter contracts awarded by his Department on behalf of foreign Governments in each of the five years up to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding reply 4 April 1989]: The information in the format requested is subject to commercial confidentiality. However, defence export sales by British industry are expected to be worth some £3,500 million in 1988. In earlier years, the figures were:

	£ million
1984	2,250
1985	2,900
1986	5,900
1987	3,500

Further information concerning deliveries of defence equipment is given in table 2.7 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989" (Cm. 675 II).

Malaysia (Arms Sales)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there was any reference to United Kingdom overseas aid to Malaysia in any of the correspondence in 1988 concerning arms sales to Malaysia, a memorandum of understanding on which was signed in September 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: All dealings between the two Governments on the proposed sale of arms were formalised in the memorandum of understanding signed in September 1988. No mention is made in that document of overseas aid to Malaysia.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any representations from the chairmen designate of Power Generator and National Power seeking the creation of a separate national nuclear generation corporation as part of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have discussions from time to time with both chairmen-designate of the successor companies to the CEGB about a wide range of issues relating to the reorganisation and subsequent privatisation of the electricity industry. These discussions are necessarily confidential.

Druridge Bay

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many dwelling houses, including any used as holiday accommodation, will be transferred from the ownership of the Central Electricity Generating Board to National Power in connection with the transfer under the provisions of the Electricity Bill of the area proposed for a nuclear power station at Druridge bay, Northumberland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under clause 63 of the Electricity Bill, the CEGB would be required to prepare a transfer scheme for the allocation of all its assets to the successor companies. The proposed transfer of assets would be subject to my approval but is, initially, a matter for the CEGB. I am therefore asking the CEGB to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Oil Rigs (Safety)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has as to whether the process pipework and vessels on the Piper Alpha platform were originally designed to comply with requirements of the National Association of Corrosion Engineers MR 01 75 standard for handling sour oil and gas;

(2) if he is aware of any occasions in the United Kingdom continental shelf of premature failure of platform piping or vessels due to cracking induced by sour oil or gas;

(3) what information he has as to whether during production from the Piper Alpha platform any sections of piping or vessels handled oil or gas which would be designated as sour by the NACE standard;

(4) whether the operator of the Piper Alpha platform at any time informed the certifying authority of the handling of sour oil and gas and agreed a suitable programme of non-destructive testing to determine the suitability of the piping and vessels to handle sour oil and gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has not received any reports of premature failure of offshore installation piping or vessels in the UKCS due to cracking induced by sour oil or gas. The bulk of the Piper Alpha installation was designed before the NACE MR 0175 standard was published. However, all installations are required to have a certificate of fitness issued by a certifying authority. The CA must ascertain, inter alia, that the materials employed are suitable for handling the products involved.

I am advised that, from 1986, the levels of hydrogen sulphide produced from some of the Piper Alpha wells was increasing, and that the NACE standard would now designate some of the oil and gas on the platform as "sour". The owner is required to provide sufficient information to the CA for an independent assessment of the design to be carried out and for a periodic survey of the equipment to be undertaken.

My Department understands from the CA that Occidental discussed with it a corrosion monitoring system, including non-destructive testing, which was designed to assess the suitability of the piping and vessels to handle the oil and gas involved, including the expected levels of hydrogen sulphide. Only when the CA is satisfied that it is proper to do so will it issue or renew a certificate of fitness.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received a report on the causes of the recent explosion on the Cormorant Alpha platform; if he will make it his policy to publish any such report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The investigation into the cause of this incident is still in progress. As the hon. Member knows, and for reasons I have already explained, it would not be in accordance with our normal practice to publish the report on the findings of the investigation. I shall ensure that any lessons to be learned will be passed on to the industry at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning the recommencement of production on (a) the Cormorant Alpha platform and (b) the Brent pipeline system.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest information that my Department has from Shell indicates that the company believes there is a reasonable probability that start up of the Brent pipeline system will be achieved by 26 May 1989. Shell does not expect that the Cormorant Alpha platform will resume production before July 1989.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain and place copies of the daily transcript of the inquiry into the Piper Alpha tragedy in the Library.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The transcript is already accessible to the hon. Member at a number of locations, including my offices at Millbank, but I am happy to assist him further by placing a copy in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Quangos

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of members of each quango and non-departmental public body.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A table giving this information has been placed in the Library.

Public Order

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parades were notified to the police under the terms of the Public Order (N.I.) Order 1986 in each of the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; what information organisers of parades are expected to give in the notice to police; and what form this information has to take.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1989]: In respect of parades notified to the police in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 10 May 1989 at column 444. Those figures relate to parades under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 and the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987. No similar order was made in 1986.

The information required from parade organisers is a matter for the Chief Constable. However, I understand that the organisers are expected to give sufficient information to enable him to make adequate policing arrangements for the particular occasion.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar Shootings

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will now reconsider his decision not to hold a full public judicial inquiry into the shootings in Gibraltar of Mairead Farrell, Daniel McCann and Sean Savage;

(2) if he has received a copy of the independent report, commissioned by Amnesty International, on the Gibraltar shootings of Sunday 6 March 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has received a copy of the independent report, commissioned by the National Council for Civil Liberties, on the Gibraltar shootings of Sunday 6 March 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received copies of the reports by Amnesty International and the National Council for Civil Liberties. We remain of the view that there are no grounds for holding a further inquiry into the deaths of Mairead Farrell, Daniel McCann and Sean Savage.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role of his Department's AIDS unit; how many staff and at what grades are employed in it; what is its budget for the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In the diplomatic wing, AIDS is the responsibility of the narcotics control and AIDS department. Its role is to consider the foreign policy implications of our AIDS-related policies. Staff dealing with AIDS are 15 per cent. × one DS4, 30 per cent. × one DS5, 100 per cent. × one DS9, 50 per cent. × one DS10 and 30 per cent. × one S2A. NCAD has no dedicated budget but AIDS-related assistance may be funded from assistant under-secretaries' general purpose budgets.

AIDS-related assistance under the overseas aid programme is coordinated by the Overseas Development Administration health and population division. HPD staff dealing with AIDS are 10 per cent. × grade 5, 90 per cent. × SEO, 55 per cent. × HEO, 95 per cent. × EO, 70 per cent. × AO, 5 per cent. × personal secretary, 40 per cent. × typist. The ODA has committed £7·2 million so far for expenditure this financial year on AIDS prevention and control. Of this, £5·4 million will be administered by HPD.

Guyana (Elections)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Guyanese authorities to ensure that procedures operate for free and fair elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have no plans to make such representations to the Guyanese authorities. National elections are not due to be held in Guyana until 1990 and the great importance which we attach to the principle of free and fair elections is already widely known.

British Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources are specifically allocated to the British Council to subsidise the travel costs of scientists engaged in the British-German academic research collaboration programme; what is the maximum grant available to individuals; and what are the criteria by which this sum is determined.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council is contributing £175,000 towards the cost of the joint British-German academic research collaboration programme in this its first year. A part of this money is for organisational visits but the major part is intended to contribute to both the travel and the living costs of British scholars supported under the programme. A standard contribution of £150 is offered towards the cost of travel, together with a standard contribution towards living expenses while the British scientist is in Germany at the rate of £200 per week. The contribution towards travel, which is not intended to cover all travel costs, is based on the cheapest return air fare between most airports in Britain and Germany.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has given to health authorities in Wales on ensuring wherever possible that patients whose first language is Welsh, have access to Welsh-speaking nurses in hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office Health Circular WHSC(IS)117 "The Health Service and The Welsh Language", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, recognises the importance of individuals being able to converse in their mother tongue during contact with the Health Service, and asks authorities to offer appropriate services wherever this would be reasonable and practicable.

Museum of Welsh Antiquities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning his case for safeguarding the future of the museum of Welsh antiquities, and the associated art gallery, at Bangor; whether the Welsh Office are making any direct financial contribution towards the upkeep of these facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Six representations about the future of the museum of Welsh antiquities and the art gallery at Bangor have been received. The Welsh Office does not provide direct financial support for local museums and galleries. But local sources of funding for such facilities may be supplemented by the Council of Museums in Wales and the Welsh Arts Council which are centrally funded.

Access (Development)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional monies are to be made available other than the higher education quantum to promote the development of access throughout Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: £50,000 is being made available from the higher education quantum in 1989-90 to establish a Wales access unit that will encourage the development of access courses giving entry to higher education. The university of Wales has been invited to join and contribute to the initiative.

Expenditure

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an analysis of expenditure shown in table 17.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" Cm. 617 on a similar basis to his reply of 25 January 1988, to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams), Official Report column 108.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 31 January 1989 at columns 97-110.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To aks the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Welsh water authority commenced its current review into the costs of alternative schemes to deal with the 11 Welsh bathing beaches that do not conform with European Community bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; on what date the current review is expected to be completed; and if he will arrange for the review to be published.

Mr. Grist: Conclusions from the review of the bathing water compliance programme will be included in information made available prior to the flotation of Welsh Water.

Campaigns

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of each campaign mounted by his Department in 1985-86 and each successive year, including, in each case, the objectives of the campaign, the intended audience and the outcome of the monitoring of the achievement of the intended objectives, and national research conducted for him by the Central Office of Information together with a note of the intended objectives in the campaign in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 10 May 1989, at columns 437-8.

Housing Investment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of his initial housing investment allocated to local authorities in Wales for (i) 1989-90, (ii) 1987-88, (iii) 1985-86, (iv) 1983-84, (v) 1981-82 and (vi) 1979-80, at constant 1989-90 prices, separately distinguishing each authority.

Mr. Grist: Initial housing allocations at constant 1989-90 prices, by local authority, for the years 1981-82, 1983-84, 1985-86, 1987-88 and 1989-90 are shown in the following table. Initial housing allocations are not available for 1979-80.

Local Authorities (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library, for each local authority in Wales, its capital allocation, in total for 1989-90, showing the percentage change from (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1981-82.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table. The total amount to be allocated for 1989-90 is £336·9 million of which £307·3 million has been allocated to date. A copy of this answer will be placed in the Library of the House.

Water Quality

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 2 May, Official Report, column 59, if he will place in the Library details of the time limits on the derogations and delays relating to the non-compliance of potable waters in Wales with the European directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption 80/77/EC.

Mr. Grist: I shall arrange to place the relevant information in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a list of the outfalls around the Welsh coast where consents have been given by his Department to the Welsh water authority for the disposal of sewage sludge.

Mr. Grist: Yes.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Commission

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Southend, East of 8 May, if she has provided advice to Ministers about the procedures which are available to them in cases where the Commission submit proposals for legislation which do not fall within agreed Community competence; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As I have told the House, we will continue to examine carefully whether proposals for EC legislation fall within agreed Community competence and we shall continue to deal with such proposals in the Council of Ministers in whatever way best protects and promotes British interests.

House of Commons (Attendance)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions she has attended the Chamber on official duties in the past 12 months, apart from when dealing with oral questions.

The Prime Minister: I frequently attend the Chamber on official duties.

Poverty (Manchester)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will agree to meet, either in Manchester or London, a group of constituents of the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton who are living in poverty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Airport Policy (Scotland)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received from Scottish industry and commerce concerning Scottish lowland airports policy; and what reply she has given.

The Prime Minister: I have received representations from a Scottish bank, the chairman of a major Scottish firm and two Scottish chambers of commerce. In reply I have said that it was clear from the financial information on Prestwick airport submitted by BAA plc, along with its request for a review of the Scottish lowland airports policy, that there had in fact been a steady improvement in Prestwick's financial position. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, having consulted my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, concluded that a review of current policy would not be appropriate. I also pointed out in my reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland considers that access to Prestwick could be improved and that steps are in hand to improve both rail and road access to the airport.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

86. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what forecast studies of increased rail freight tonnage, following the opening of the Channel tunnel, his Department has made; whether the proposed rail routes for this traffic will be able to cope with any substantial increase; and to what extent the exporting base of the country in the north will be efficiently served by these routes and thus able to fully compete in the European market.

Mr. Portillo: In compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act, British Rail have to publish before the end of this year their plans for Channel tunnel freight and passenger services. The plans will take into account BR's widespread consultations with national and regional interests and customers. BR is satisfied that the rail network itself is capable of handling the substantial increase in freight traffic that is envisaged, but this report will look at the adequacy of road/rail interchange facilities and the need for improvements in local rail access.

Traffic Speed

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has available on the average speed of traffic in (a) central London, (b) Paris, (c) Rome and (d) Madrid.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asserting for a year that traffic moves faster in London than in comparable cities. I do not know whether this is true. So far no one has contradicted the claim.

Comparisons of average traffic speeds between cities are difficult. The figures we have show speeds of 20 kilometres per hour or less for most major cities. Differences in survey method and coverage do not permit any firm conclusions to be drawn about differences.

Speeds in central London are regularly surveyed at three or four-year intervals using timed runs over a network of 160 km of road, including all A roads. In 1986, the average speed between 7 am and 7 pm was found to be 18 kph. Full details are published in statistics bulletin (87)41. A copy is in the library.

The available information for other cities is more limited. For Rome, the Rome municipal administration has provided figures for 1986 relating to the 13 km bypass route around the historic centre. The centre itself, covering roughly 14 square kilometres, is subject to traffic control measures which permit only residents, public transport and vehicles with special tickets to enter in the periods 7 am to 11 am and 3 pm to 7 pm. A series of timed runs commencing at 7.30 am, 10.00 am, 12.30 pm and 5.30 pm produced an average speed of 20 kph.

According to the office of the mayor, the average traffic speed in Paris in 1987 was estimated at between 14 and 15 kph. Details of the survey method used and the area covered are not available.

Our searches have failed to locate any statistics on the average traffic speed in Madrid.

I believe traffic does move faster in Berlin, where few drive in from the suburbs.

British Rail

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with whom he is consulting over his Department's consideration of the future of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend expects to consult widely in due course if a decision is made to privatise British Rail.

A1 Belford Bypass

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the most recently recorded traffic flows in each direction on the A1 Belford bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has no data on the A1 Belford bypass. The nearest point on the A1 for which a count has been made is at Ellingham south of Belford. The estimated 1987 annual average daily flow for combined directions at that point is 5,500. The AADF is not computed by direction. The count on which the AADF is based was carried out for 12 hours (7am to 7pm) on 5 October 1987 and recorded 2,569 vehicles northbound and 2,147 southbound. The records show that conditions were foggy on the day of the count, which may have affected traffic levels.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to the safety implications of the dispute involving 200 maintenance workers on the Severn bridge and the recruitment of unskilled labour.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have not been any safety implications for users of the bridge as a consequence of the dispute. Under the conditions of contract, the contractor is responsible for safety on site. Labour recruitment is also his concern.

Road Works

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the period of the following construction and maintenance works (a) Tees viaduct A19, (b) Darlington area A1(M), (c) Dishforth interchange A1 and (d) Doncaster area A1(M); what estimates he has of average delay times at peak periods for each set of works; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for undertaking all these works at the same time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is:

	[1]months	[2]minutes
(a) Tees Viaduct A19	28	3
(b) Darlington area A1(M)	4	20 to 30
(c) Dishforth Interchange A1	17	0 to 30
(d) Doncaster area A1(M)	[3]2¼	20 to 30

[1] Period of works.
[2] Estimated average delay at peak times.
[3] Now finished.

The delays vary greatly depending upon the stage of the works and traffic conditions.

These road works are essential to maintain and improve these heavily trafficked routes.

Road Traffic (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public inquiries have been held, pursuant to section 19 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act; and if he will name and indicate the result of each such inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Central records are not kept of inquiries held in connection with traffic regulation orders made under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984.

ENVIRONMENT

Factory Building

85. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of factory building in 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: The value of construction orders for new factories for private sector clients in 1988 was £2·1 billion in current prices, an increase of 36 per cent. over the previous year.

Community Charge

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the special situation of hon. Members regarding community charge payments and liability.

Mr. Gummer: A few hon. Members have raised the position of those whose parliamentary duties require them to keep more than one home. Just as in any other case, it is for the relevant community charges registration officers to decide where an individual's main residence is for the purposes of the community charge. Like any other citizen, a Member of Parliament has the right to take such a decision to a valuation and community charge tribunal if he is dissatisfied.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his proposal to exclude from standard community charge unoccupied property which is held for the purpose of being available for occupation by a minister of religion as a residence from which to perform the duties of his or her office would also apply to unoccupied property owned by the Religious Society of Friends for the purposes of that society's ministry.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 May 1989]: The Government are currently consulting on the draft of a regulation under section 40 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. The regulation—as drafted—sets a zero multiplier for the purposes of the standard charge for all unoccupied property which is held for the purpose of being available for occupation by a minister of religion as a residence from which to perform the duties of his office. The Government's proposal is to continue for the community charge the present position under the General Rate Act 1967. As is the case under the General Rate Act, the draft regulations do not give any definition of "minister of religion".

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the poll tax per head in Oxford city.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Illustrative 1989-90 community charges in England will be published once detailed budget returns from local authorities have been received and analysed.

Housing Act 1985

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement section 450A of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend proposes to make an order bringing into force section 5 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986, which inserted section 450A into the Housing Act 1985, as soon as the necessary regulations are ready to be made; they are in preparation and will be completed as soon as resources permit.

Urban Programme

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures have been introduced following the report of the National Audit Office to monitor payments of grants under the urban programme and to assess the effectiveness of the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Various measures were introduced under the urban programme management initiative in 1985 in anticipation of the NAO report that year. These included the preparation by each local authority of standardised inner area programmes, annual reports and regular financial forecasts. The Department annually examines selected projects and has a continuing programme of research to assess the programme's effectiveness.

Football Stadiums

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he estimates the cost to be of making every Football League ground all-seater.

Mr. Moynihan: The cost of making every Football League ground all-seater would depend on a variety of factors including the number and type of seats to be installed at each ground. I am not in a position to estimate these factors.

Planning Applications

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will change responsibility for notification to adjoining owners of planning applications from the local authority to the applicant.

Mr. Howard: No. The present arrangements reflect the purpose of the planning system which is to regulate the development and use of land in the public interest. The extent of publicity for planning applications is best left to the discretion of the local planning authority, which can exercise their judgment in the light of local circumstances. A general requirement for applicants to notify owners of adjoining land would be an additional and unwarranted burden for applicants, and for local authorities in ensuring compliance.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will place in the Library, the information his Department holds concerning time-limited derogations and delays which have been granted on the non-compliance of potable waters in England with the European directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption 80/77/EC.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 7 February 1989 at column 591-7 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

"Tenants' Choice"

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the leaflet "Tenants' Choice" was withdrawn by his Department; what were the reasons for withdrawing it; and what was the cost of producing and distributing the leaflet.

Mr. Trippier: A tenants' choice leaflet was produced in June 1988 at a cost of £1,102 to explain the provisions of the then Housing Bill. About 5,000 copies were sent out in response to inquiries.

A second leaflet was produced in March 1989 at a cost of £22,598 to explain the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988. More than 11,000 have been sent out, also in response to inquiries. Neither booklet was withdrawn, although the first is now obsolete.

Water Disconnections

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of water disconnections for each regional water authority for each of the last five years.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the following table. Information on disconnections in 1988-89 is not yet available. Information on disconnections by the Welsh water authority is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Water authority disconnections

Authority	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
North West	110	238	457	448
Northumbrian	70	59	300	480
Severn Trent	650	1,074	1,000	932

Authority	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Yorkshire	25	189	293	560
Anglian	218	774	2,268	1,586
Thames	788	235	576	1,594
Southern	115	1,249	1,152	1,164
Wessex	0	0	0	32
South West	76	404	404	324
England	2,052	4,212	6,450	7,120

There were approximately 6,600 water authority disconnections for non-payment in 1981-82.

Humber Estuary

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are being taken to reduce water pollution in and around the Humber estuary.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The Humber estuary from its confluence with the River Trent to the sea, is classified as good or fair quality (class A or B). Since the early 1960s there has been a progressive improvement in water quality. Measures being taken to reduce pollution include improvements to sewage treatment works, particularly at Leeds, Huddersfield, Sheffield and Chesterfield; a new long sewage outfall at Grimsby; and improvements by several factories to their effluents discharges to the Humber and the Ouse.

Sea Pollution (Study)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the pilot study for the testing of viruses in sea water will include the Solent and adjacent waters; if he will place in the Library the details and parameters of the study; and if he will extend the study to include the effect of disposal of sewage at sea on marine wildlife and the food chain.

Mr. Howard: I can today announce that my Department has let a contract to establish the risks of health of bathing in the seas off the United Kingdom. This is on the recommendation of a working group of experts which was set up last year to advise me on the best way to assess the risk of contracting illnesses from sea bathing. The working group has recommended that two types of study should be made at bathing waters that meet the standards set in the EEC bathing water directive.

The first study involves bathers who are on the beach of their own volition. Information of any perceived symptoms will be obtained by means of a questionnaire at the time and subsequent telephone follow-ups.

The second study will involve the use of healthy volunteers who will be asked to swim in waters meeting EEC standards. The volunteers will be examined medically both before and after swimming. The Committee on Ethical Issues in Medicine of the Royal College of Physicians has given clearance for this study.

A contract has now been let to the Water Research Centre to carry out the first stage of the study this year. Further studies are likely to be required in 1990 and later years. The bathing waters at which the studies are to take place have yet to be selected.

Reports of the studies will be placed in the Library in due course. The studies will not be extended to study the effect of sewage disposal at sea or marine wildlife and the food chain. This area of research is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Water Meters

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by the Property Services Agency in installing water meters in residential buildings owned by Her Majesty's Government; and whether a water meter has been installed at No. 10 Downing street.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 May 1989]: Departments are responsible for water comsumption in the buildings they occupy: the PSA gives professional advice and recommends the installation of meters where justified on economic grounds.

Nos. 10, 11 and 12 Downing street are jointly served by one water meter.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated cost for each of (a) Minehead terminus, (b) Dunster North West, (c) Burnham jetty, (d) Barrow, (e) Weston Super Mare uphill slipway, (f) Weston Super Mare grand pier and (g) Clevedon swimming pool of (i) a long sea outfall, (ii) full sewage treatment works with a short sea outfall and (iii) full sewage treatment works with a long sea outfall to enable them to comply with European Economic Community bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; and when the appropriate solution will be put in place, giving estimated cost of commencement and completion.

Mr. Howard: I understand that Wessex water authority has schemes in progress which aim to bring these bathing beaches into compliance with the EC bathing water directive by mid-1991. The details are as follows:

Beaches	Scheme/type	Total capital expenditure £ million	Expected completion date
Minehead Terminus; Dunster North	Sea outfall with headworks	10·8	1989-90
Burnham Sea Jetty; Barrow	Diversion of Sewage to inland works	3·1	1990-91
Weston Super Mare; Uphill Slipway and Grand Jetty	New headworks for sea outfall	4·4	1990-91
Clevedon Swimming Pool	Diversion of sewage to inland works	1·2	1990-91

The comparative costs of alternative schemes is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Yemen (Aid)

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much public money has been allocated to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen during the past 12 months; for what purposes; and whether the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen has taken up all these allocations;

(2) how much public money has been allocated to the Yemeni Arab Republic during the past 12 months; for what purposes and whether the Yemeni Arab Republic has taken up all these allocations.

Mr. Chris Patten: For details of the level and nature of our aid to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic in the financial year 1988-89, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 10 April at column 572.

Expenditure for the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen was somewhat lower than originally anticipated mainly because of problems arising from delay to the signature of a memorandum of understanding on technical cooperation. Expenditure for the Yemen Arab Republic was somewhat higher following approval of a project to be funded from the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much public money has been allocated to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen by the European Community and the United Nations and its specialised agencies during the past 12 months; for what purposes; and whether the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen has taken up all these allocations;

(2) how much public money has been allocated to the Yemeni Arab Republic by the European Community and the United Nations and its specialised agencies during the past 12 months; for what purposes; and whether the Yemeni Arab Republic has taken up all these allocations.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are not aware of any pre-set annual allocations but in 1987, the latest year for which we have information, actual net flows of aid to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen from the European Community and from the United Nations system were US$0·06 million (£0·04 million) and US$18·49 million (£11·4 million) respectively. Comparable figures for the Yemen Arab Republic (YAR) are US$2·45 million (£1·48 million) and US$16·75 million (£10·09 million) respectively.

European Community aid to the PDRY was in the form of medical assistance; and to the YAR was in the form of food aid and assistance for rural development. The register of development activities of the United Nations system 1987, a copy of which is in the Library, provides a breakdown of United Nations aid to these countries by project.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the number of notices of intention to deport under the Immigration Act 1971 and (b) the number of persons subsequently removed for each week in 1989; if he will indicate the average length of time between issuing a notice of intention to deport and deportation in 1988 and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The latest available information about the number of notices of intention to deport and the number of persons removed under the deportation powers is contained in table 14 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 10/89 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. Corresponding information for the first quarter of 1989 is due to be published next month. The average length of time beween the issue of a notice of intention to deport and removal under the deportation powers is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The period varies greatly from case to case.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the outcome of the meeting of EC Immigration Ministers and of Trevi Ministers in Madrid on 12 May.

Mr. Hurd: The meeting of Ministers responsible for immigration, attended also by a vice-president of the Commission, was the sixth such meeting following an initiative taken during the United Kingdom presidency in 1986 to help prepare the EC's approach to the creation of the single market by end 1992 so far as the movement of persons is concerned.

The meeting on 12 May took a significant step forward on asylum by instructing the official group to prepare a draft convention to deal with the so-called "refugee in orbit" problem. This would establish the criteria for determing which state should be responsible for examining an application for asylum. The meeting reviewed the other work done by officials, and in particular noted with satisfaction that the first regular bulletin on forged and false documents had been produced in April in accordance with the group's earlier recommendations. I welcome this example of solid, practical co-operation on shared operational problems.

I took the opportunity of the meeting to re-state the Government's view of the interpretation of the relevant provision of the Single European Act and the frontier controls of persons, as endorsed by the House on 4 May at column 417.

The later meeting of Trevi Ministers took further measures to enhance collaboration between European Community countries to combat terrorism and other crime. Agreement was reached on the study of forged documents, streamlined procedures for secure communications between Trevi countries, further exchanges on specialist matters, and the establishment in all member states of national drugs intelligence units similar to our own, as well as the later examination of the establishment of a European drugs intelligence unit. Ministers agreed to further work on closer co-operation between police forces.

They also considered the preliminary work of the Group established within Trevi to study border checks and other security measures post 1992 in order that the changes to take place should not adversely affect the prevention of terrorism, drug trafficking and other serious crime in the Community.

Accommodation Agencies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) accommodation agencies and (b) directors of accommodation agencies have (i) had summons issued against them, (ii) been successfully prosecuted and (iii) continued to trade after successful prosecution under the Accommodation Agencies Act 1953 for each year since 1975.

Mr. John Patten: Information available to me relates to the number of prosecutions and convictions under the Accommodation Agencies Act 1953 in England and Wales for 1986 and 1987.

	1986	1987
Prosecutions	21	3
Convictions	8	2

To produce further information for each year from 1975 would involve disproportionate cost. Information as to whether the prosecution was against the agency or a director and whether the agency continued to trade is not available.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the projected size of each index and the projected number of accesses to each index, including those accesses that retrieve information from more than one index of the new police national computer for each year until 1993.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The projected size of each index on the new police national computer for the years 1991, 1992 and 1993 is as follows:

millions

	1991	1992	1993
Criminal Names	6·300	6·700	7·200
Wanted Missing	0·100	0·120	0·140
Disqualified Drivers	0·250	0·270	0·290
Impending Prosecution	0·500	0·540	0·570
Convictions	2·300	2·500	2·600
Fingerprints	4·000	4·300	4·600
Vehicles	42·800	45·800	49·000
Stolen Property	0·030	0·032	0·034

The estimated number of inquiries to each index on the new police national computer for the years 1991, 1992 and 1993 is as follows:

millions

	1991	1992	1993
All names indexes combined	15·700	16·700	17·700
Vehicles	19·100	20·300	21·500
Stolen Property	0·090	0·950	0·101

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will place the operational specification of the new police national computer and its accompanying management summary in the Library.

Mr. Hurd: I have placed a copy of the functional specification for the new police national computer in the Library.

Parking

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to review the enforcement of parking restrictions.

Mr. Hurd: Parking enforcement has been under review by a working party under Home Office chairmanship on which the Department of Transport, the police service and the local authority associations have been represented. The working party has now completed its report, which identifies a number of areas of concern and possible proposals for change. I am placing a copy of the report in the Library. The Government will consider their conclusions carefully over the next few months.

Political Refugees

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reply has been sent to the letter sent to his Department from Amnesty International dated 21 April about political refugees.

Mr. Renton: None, as yet. Amnesty International's letter raises a number of different points which we need to consider fully before replying.

War Crimes

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his decision on the possible prosecution of Nazi war crimes perpetrators now resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: I shall consider what further action is required when I have had an opportunity to study the report of the war crimes inquiry, which I expect to receive in June.

Football Stadiums

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to discuss all-seater football stadiums with the football authorities.

Mr. John Patten: The Government will be consulting the football authorities about the introduction of all seated accommodation at major football clubs. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is hoping to meet them for this purpose later this month.

Private Remand Centres

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of cells in any privately managed remand centres will be for (a) single and (b) double occupation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is too early to take detailed decisions, but if the contracting out of the design, construction and operation of remand centres were to go ahead, I would expect inmates normally to be accommodated in individual cells, with some provision for circumstances where it is considered there are advantages for inmates to share with others.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, Official Report, column 748, what information his Department possesses concerning the incidence and location of confirmation of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infection in cattle at slaughterhouses of fatstock markets.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on Friday 12 May at column 57.

National Office of Animal Health

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the duties of the National Office of Animal Health together with the sources of its income and any specific tasks that it has been set by Government.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The National Office of Animal Health Ltd. is a trade organisation representing manufacturers of veterinary medicines. I do not know how it is financed. It has not been set tasks by Government although it is consulted, along with other representative organisations, on matters affecting its members.

Food and Wine Surpluses

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount, expressed in pounds sterling, which the EEC plans to spend this year on the disposal or destruction of food and wine surpluses; and if he will also publish a table showing these amounts in respect of the previous 15 years.

Mr. Ryder: The 1989 Community budget made provision for expenditure of £8,281·9 million on export refunds, subsidies for internal disposals, losses on sale out of intervention and depreciation of stocks. Comparable data for earlier years are shown in the table.

	£ million
1974	431·1
1975	677·3
1976	1,058·4
1977	1,284·8
1978	2,836·2
1979	3,860·1
1980	3,947·5
1981	3,417·9
1982	3,565·0
1983	4,280·4
1984	5,249·1
1985	5,384·0
1986	6,272·4
[1]1987	8,130·8
[1,2]1988	8,451·4
[2]1989	8,281·9

[1] 1987 budget year covered 10 months' expenditure, 1988 budget year covered 11½ months' expenditure.
[2] Excluding provision for additional depreciation of old stocks; 1,240 mecu in 1988 and 1,449 mecu in 1989.

Food Labelling

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 25 April, column 493, he will list the mechanical problems that he believes would arise if the European Commission's proposal for information labelling on food was implemented.

Mr. Ryder: The European Commission's proposal concerns only post-harvest pesticide treatments. Some pesticide active ingredients can be used either pre or post-harvest. A requirement to label post-harvest might mislead consumers into believing no pre-harvest treatment had been given. In some cases it may be possible to evade the control by switching treatment which is normally post-harvest to the pre-harvest stage; it will be very difficult for the enforcement authorities to police such switching, and, more fundamentally, to test for the wide range of possible treatments.

There could also be problems for packers, wholesalers and retailers especially when they are dealing with consignments from a number of sources which have been subject to differing treatments. The costs need to be weighed against the benefits which might arise from the proposal, especially when the results of pesticide residue monitoring are published.

Pesticides

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 25 April, column 492, whether any of the maximum residue levels for pesticides are at such a level they would result in any of international acceptable daily intakes being exceeded.

Mr. Ryder: No. The MRLs used in the United Kingdom are either the same as, or less than, those used by international bodies such as the WHO/FAO Codex Alimentarius Commission and should not be expected to result in international ADIs being exceeded.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his reply of 3 March, Official Report, columns 373-74, he will list for each of the 17 measures he has taken to control salmonella in poultry; whether primary or secondary legislation has been or will be implemented giving dates for each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The measures listed in my earlier reply are either covered by secondary legislation or are non-statutory. For each of the measures mentioned in my reply of 3 March, numbered as in that reply, the information is as follows:

	Entry into force
1. The Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) (Amendment) Order 1989	2 February 1989
2. Achieved by administrative action
3. The Processed Animal Protein Order 1989	14 April 1989 and 13 June 1989
4. Achieved by administrative action
5. See my rely of 3 March
6. The Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989	16 March 1989
7. Still to be implemented
8. Achieved by administrative action
9. Achieved by administrative action

	Entry into force
10. Still to be implemented
11. Still to be implemented
12-17. Non-statutory

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of (a) registrations and (b) applications for the set-aside scheme were validated by field inspections in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: [holding answer 11 May 1989]: About one quarter of total applications for set-aside in the United Kingdom in 1988-89 were subject to field inspection before acceptance. Further field inspections of farms accepted into the scheme will be taking place as part of the ongoing monitoring of set-aside obligations. Farms which have been registered have not in general been field inspected, but will be liable to inspection on a sample basis if and when applications are made under the scheme.

EMPLOYMENT

Task Force

87. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of the impact on British business of the activities of the task force on small and medium-sized enterprises; and what plans there are to extend the role of the task force in the run up to 1992.

Mr. Cope: As part of its action programme for small and medium sized enterprises, the task force has introduced a number of initiatives designed to assist SMEs. Most of these are at a pilot stage and have yet to be assessed, but some evaluation has been carried out of the network of European information centres set up by the Commission, of which there are four in the UK. Clients of these centres have reported a high level of satisfaction with these services and the commission now proposes to extend the network.

The Commission has also put forward a proposal for a formal legal base for the activities of the task force, and closer involvement by member states in its plans for the future. The UK Government welcome these proposals, placing particular priority on the task force's deregulatory activities and the need to evaluate its cost-effectiveness carefully.

Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds were in receipt of bridging allowance by region at the end of January, February and March 1989.

Mr. Cope: The numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of bridging allowance for the nearest available dates are as follows:

Region	9 February 1989	9 March 1989	13 April 1989
East Midlands and Eastern	1,513	1,380	1,170
West Midlands	1,498	1,507	1,298
Wales	832	774	671
Eastern Division	620	657	542
Southern Division	576	543	521
Western Division	667	612	554
South West	753	760	630
Northern	1,088	1,124	1,021
Yorks and Humberside	1,820	1,816	1,487
Scotland	2,194	2,182	1,912
North West	2,602	2,600	2,235

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list at the most recently available date, YTS providers by the following occupation categories (a) administration and clerical, (b) creative, education, recreation, (c) health and community, (d) personal services, (e) selling and storage, (f) construction, (g) electrical engineering, (h) mechanical engineering, (i) motor vehicle repair, (j) non metal processing, (k) catering and food, (l) agriculture, horticulture, forestry, (m) mining, (n) fishing, (o) transport, (p) scientific, (q) printing, and (r) clothing and textiles.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. A copy of the YTS directory of approved training organisations is in the Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list at the most recently available date, YTS providers by the following industry categories (a) agriculture, forestry, fishing, (b) energy and water, (c) extraction, metals, minerals, chemicals, (d) metal goods, engineering, vehicles, (e) other manufacturing, (f) construction, (g) distribution, hotel, catering, repairs, (h) transport and communications, (i) banking and finance, (j) other services, and (k) not classified.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. A copy of the YTS directory of approved training organisations is in the library.

Training Schemes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of trainees on each employment training scheme operating in England, Wales and Northern Ireland and give the name of each scheme and the total allowances paid to each scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the number of people in training with individual employment training managers in England and Wales can only be provided at disproportionate cost. The names and addresses of Training managers are held in the employment training directory of training agents and training managers, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. Information about the amount of trainee allowances paid to trainees with individual training managers is not available. Government programmes in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for how many trainees has each employment training scheme management agency and employer in England, Wales and Northern Ireland contracted to fill for each month since the inception of the scheme; and what percentage of these places have actually been filled in each case on a monthly basis.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested can be provided in respect of England and Wales only at disproportionate cost. Government programmes in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of staff involved in monitoring fraud by employment training scheme management agencies and employers in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training in England and Wales is delivered by the Training Agency's network of 50 area offices, each of which has a team of officers who, as part of their duties, are responsible for investigating cases of fraud. In England and Wales, the incidence of fraud in the programme is monitored by the Training Agency's head office on the basis of quarterly returns provided by each area office.

Responsibility for Government programmes in Northern Ireland lies with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of fraud his Department has detected among employment training scheme management agencies and employers in England, Wales and Northern Ireland; what sums were involved; and how many prosecutions have proceeded.

Mr. Nicholls: No cases of fraud by employment training agents and managers in England and Wales have been detected since the start of the programme on 1 September 1988.

Responsibility for Government programmes in Northern Ireland lies with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training scheme management agencies and employers in England, Wales and Northern Ireland have been terminated because of fraud or other malpractice.

Mr. Nicholls: No training agents or managers contracting with the Training Agency under employment training in England and Wales have been terminated because of fraud or other malpractice.

Responsibility for Government programmes in Northern Ireland lies with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

HEALTH

Pensioners

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the estimated growth in the population over 75 years old for each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Pain

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is being made for research into alternatives to narcotic analgesics for nerve pain sufferers who cannot be relieved by these means.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is not directly funding research into the problem, but the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom carries out research and development in virtually all therapeutic areas.

This is supported by the Department through the prices of National Health Service medicines. The current cost of this support is approximately 20 per cent. of the National Health Service drugs bill.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the National Health Service reforms will have on the current situation in which drug addicts living in one health authority area are treated in another without refund because of the restrictive prescribing policies in the former.

Mr. Freeman: Under the proposed reforms of the National Health Service, district health authorities will have powers to charge each other for patients from outside their administrative boundaries, either under contract or, exceptionally, through extra-contractual arrangements.

Head Lice and Nits

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the incidence of head lice and nits in schoolchildren in North Staffordshire; and if he will direct extra resources to enable school nurses to carry out more frequent and regular inspections.

Mr. Freeman: Information specifically about the incidence of head lice infestation is not available. However, the following details relate to health surveillance by nurses in the area covered by North Staffordshire health authority:

Maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools

Number of infestations[1]	1987-88 North Staffordshire health authority
Number of pupils examined (thousands)	80·5
Number of pupils found to be infested (thousands)	2·4
Infested pupils as a percentage of the maintained school population aged 5 to 14 years	4·26

[1] Infestations include head lice, vermin, scabies, ringworm, impetigo and verrucæ.

Responsibility for the control of head lice infection among pupils rests with individual health authorities through the school health service. It is for them to determine the policy for dealing with this problem in the light of local circumstances. Many have stopped routine head inspections and are now adopting more positive practices through health education programmes and advice to parents on head lice infestation and how to deal with the problem. By increasing parental awareness cases of infestation can be indentified and dealt with more promptly.

West Lancashire District Health Authority

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget for the West Lancashire district health authority in 1978-79, 1983-84 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to pursue his inquiries with Mr. R. B. Martin, chairman of North Western regional health authority, which is responsible for allocating resources to its districts.

Midwives (Regrading)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Social Services Select Committee's recommendations on midwives' regrading.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) and the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) on 10 May at columns 450-51.

GPs (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average expenditure per patient by general practitioners.

Mr. Freeman: in 1988-89, the estimated average cost of drugs and appliances prescribed by general medical practitioners per patient in England was about £37. The average cost per patient on the general medical services was about £29·50. These figures are based on provisional and estimated returns and exclude the costs of hospital referrals initiated by general medical practitioners, and the administrative costs of family practitioner committees.

Physiological Measurement Technicians

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to improve the pay and career prospects of physiological measurement technicians.

Mr. Freeman: Pay and grading structures are matters for negotiation in the appropriate Whitley council. I understand that yesterday (16 May) the management side of the professional and technical B Whitley council made an offer to the staff side which would improve the pay and grading structures applicable to many NHS technical staff groups, including physiological measurement technicians.

Nurses (High Technology)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to expand post registration training opportunities for nurses in high technology care.

Mr. Mellor: To assist health authorities to expand their post-registration training opportunities for nurses in high technology care we created a central fund of £3 million and invited authorities to submit bids against this fund. Allocations have now been made as follows:

Regional health authority	£
Northern	202,000
Yorkshire	190,000
Trent	242,000

Regional health authority	£
East Anglia	123,000
North West Thames	162,000
North East Thames	238,000
South East Thames	265,000
South West Thames	200,000
Wessex	152,000
Oxford	128,000
South Western	163,000
West Midlands	353,000
Mersey	150,000
North Western	202,000
London Post Graduate SHA's	142,000
Total	2,902,000

We have also allocated £100,000 to the English national board to fund five additional nurse tutor posts.

The purpose of the additional funds is to provide start-up costs, additional tutors and some student salaries for courses in high-technology care. Detailed decisions on allocations will be for regional health authorities, but we shall be asking them to expand student numbers in courses which are already running, to start extra courses and develop new types of courses in critical care nursing.

We are separately providing £400,000 to the English national board to undertake a review of all post-registration nurse education and training.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications he has received since April 1988 from hon. Members on behalf of 19-year-olds, or the families of 19-year-olds, for extra-statutory payments of income support to be made in order to allow such students to complete courses of non-advanced education; and how many of such applications have been successful.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since April 1988, we have received 31 such requests. Extra-statutory payments are made only where legislation is faulty, and does not meet our intention. This is not appropriate in these circumstances; accordingly, none of the applicants has been successful.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail how councillors' expenses are taken into account when computing eligibility for income and support and family credit; and if he will give the reference to the regulations which determine these rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Councillors' expenses are treated in the same way as the expenses incurred by anyone in employment and receiving income support or family credit.

Payments made in respect of income tax, socal security contributions and one half of a contribution towards an occupational or personal pension scheme are disregarded under regulation 36(3) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 and regulation 20(3) of the Family Credit (General) Regulations 1987. In addition, payments received for employment expenses which are wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred are not treated as earnings and are also disregarded under regulation 35(2)(c) of, and paragraph 3 of schedule 9 to, the Income Support Regulations and regulation 19(2)(b) of, and paragraph 32 of schedule 2 to, the Family Credit Regulations. However, any payments for employment expenses which are not wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred are treated as earnings in the normal way in accordance with regulation 35(1)(f) of the Income Support Regulations and regulation 19(1)(d) of the Family Credit Regulations.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds had made applications for income support on grounds of extreme hardship and how many had been granted at the end of January, February and March 1989; and how many at the same dates had been granted income support on grounds of being within exempted categories, shown by category and by region.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applications from 16 and 17-year-olds on grounds of "severe hardship" and the number of directions given to enable benefit to be paid, at each of the dates specified, are in the following table:

Cumulative totals—period ending	Totals
27 January 1989
Applications received	3,492
Directions given	2,332
24 February 1989
Applications received	4,770
Directions given	3,092
31 March 1989
Applications received	6,336
Directions given	4,104

Notes:
1. Based on 100 per cent. count of applications received.
2. Information relates to the number of applications received rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some individuals may have received more than one direction.
3. Figures are cumulative to the last Friday in each month.

The numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds granted income support because they fall within one of the groups defined in regulations ceased to be collected after October 1988. They could be obtained now only at disproportionate cost.

Members' Letters

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many letters he received from hon. Members in each month for the last four months;

(2) what was the average delay between receipt of letters from hon. Members to date of reply in each of the last four months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information in respect of letters, most of which were from hon. Members receiving a ministerial reply, is as follows:

	Totals
January 1989
Letters received	1,333
Average time to reply	45 days
February 1989
Letters received	1,533
Average time to reply	35 days

	Totals
March 1989
Letters received	1,676
Average time to reply	32 days
April 1989
Letters received	1,714
Average time to reply	38 days

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps are being taken to deal with correspondence from hon. Members more expeditiously;

(2) what proportion of letters from hon. Members sent to his office he estimates could have been dealt with more speedily by the local Department of Social Services office concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are constantly seeking to improve the service provided to hon. Members.

As my hon. Friend suggests, usually the most satisfactory way to resolve queries relating to the personal circumstances of individual constituents is to take them up directly with the manager of the appropriate local or Central office. Many hon. Members already do so. However, no figures are kept on which an estimate could be made of the proportion of letters which could be dealt with more speedily in this way.

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total value of applications for (a) budgeting loans, (b) cash loans and (c) community care grants from the social fund for the year 1988-89 in respect of the Department of Social Security local offices at Eston, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Stockton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers of community care grant, crisis loans and budgeting loan applications processed and the value of these applications is available in the Library.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners' income was derived from (a) social security benefits, (b) occupational pensions, (c) savings and investment and (d) earnings in 1974, 1979, 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Source of pensioners' gross incomes

Per cent.

	1974	1979	1983	1986
All social security benefits	55	61	60	59

Note: Information for 1986 is the latest available.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the increase in pensioner income for each quintile of the income distribution in each year since 1974.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the maximum level of income support payments, in cash and constant prices, available to meet residential care and nursing home fees in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The tables show the supplementary benefit-income support limits for help with fees in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes. The figures given without brackets are amounts in cash prices; the ones in brackets are rounded March 1989 prices.

Attendance Allowance Board

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many of his Department's staff, and what grades, have been seconded to the attendance allowance board under paragraph 9, schedule 11, Social Security Act 1975; how many are located in London and Blackpool; and what are the comparable figures for the past three years;

(2) if he will publish the arrangements made under paragraph 9, schedule 11, Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. Scott: The requested information is in the table. Staff are made available to the attendance allowance board having regard to its needs, the type of work involved and the personnel policies of the Department. I should emphasise that these staff are not involved in the decision-making process.

Community Charge

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions have taken place involving his Department as to the effects of the poll tax on the social security budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No discussions have taken place with any organisations outside Government.

Availability for Work

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current average length of time between an unemployed claimant receiving an adjudication officer's adverse decision on grounds of restricted availability and non-availability for work and a subsequent appeal, by standard Great Britain region, including Greater London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number of acute beds available and (b) the number of non-acute beds available in each regional health authority; and if he will give the national total for each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no regional health authorities in Scotland. The nearest equivalent to a regional health authority is Scotland taken as a whole. The average available number of staffed beds in NHS hospitals in Scotland at 30 September in each year since 1979 is set out in the table below.

Year	[1]Acute	[2]Non-acute	Total
1979	24,546	33,956	58,501
1980	24,412	33,793	58,205
1981	24,222	33,808	58,028
1982	23,727	33,715	57,440
1983	23,574	33,722	57,295
1984	23,367	33,849	57,216
1985	33,936	33,399	56,335
1986	22,450	33,284	55,734
1987	22,113	32,775	54,888
1988	21,691	32,235	53,925

These figures reflect changes in clinical practice and more extensive use of community care offset by increased provision for priority groups such as the elderly.

[1]Includes the following specialty groups: acute, supra-area, obstetrics and special categories

[2]Includes long-stay, psychiatric and mental handicap specialty groups.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each year since 1979 (a) each hospital closed completely and (b) each hospital closed partially; and if he will break that list down by each region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available by region, and details are not held centrally of partially closed hospitals. The information requested on hospitals closed completely is as detailed below and covered 2,883 beds. During the same period, 60 projects involving 6,747 beds and 521 day places were opened:

Broadstones Jubilee Hospital, Port Glasgow
Duncan McPherson Hospital, Gourock
Gateside Hospital, Greenock
Greenock Eye Infirmary
Greenock Royal Infirmary
Dunbar Cottage Hospital

Staff Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by each region for each year since 1979 the numbers of staff expressed as a whole-time equivalent and as actual full-time and part-time members in the following categories (a) ancillary, (b) administration and clerical, (c) nurses and midwives and (d) professional and technical.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no regional health authorities in Scotland. The nearest equivalent to a regional health authority is Scotland taken as a whole. The information requested for the years 1979 to 1987 can be found at table 9.2 in successive volumes of "Scottish Health Statistics", published annually by information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency in Scotland. Copies are held in the Library. The latest information, provisional data relating to 30 September 1988, is as follows:

Selected staff groups	Whole time	Part time	Whole time equivalent
Ancillary	11,855	18,584	22,067·8
Administrative and Clerical	12,203	4,670	14,752·2
Nurses and Midwives[1]	27,060	14,585	35,663·3
Professional and Technical[2]	9,980	2,352	11,084·6

[1] Qualified staff only.

[2] Includes scientific, paramedical, technical and works staff, opticians and pharmacists.

Capital Projects

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give detail of each capital project costing more than £1 million (a) actually under construction and (b) at the proposal or planning stage; if he will give the estimated date of completion for each project; and if he will break this list down by each region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no health regions but the information for Scotland is as follows:

	Estimated date of Completion
Projects Under Construction
Pollok Health Centre, Glasgow	Spring 1989
Castlemilk Health Centre, Glasgow	Spring 1989
Raigmore (Control of Infection Unit and on-call accommodation), Inverness	May 1989
Balfour Hospital, Kirkwall	July 1989
Gilbert Bain Hospital (Phase I), Lerwick	August 1989
Ravenscraig Phase IIIA, Greenock (Alcohol and Rehabilitation Unit)	December 1989
Dumfries and Galloway Services for the mentally handicapped	[1]1989
City Hospital, 2nd 60 bed unit, Aberdeen	May 1990
Seafield Hospital, Ayr	December 1990
West Lothian District General Hospital, Livingston
a. Phase II	1991
b. Residences	February 1990

Royal Scottish National Hospital, Larbert	1993
Ayrshire Central Laundry	not known
Rutherglen Geriatric Services	not known
Leverndale Support Services	not known

[1] This is a phased development on a number of sites, other stages will follow.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each region, details of proposed capital developments costing more than £1 million which have been cancelled for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No hospital project has been cancelled by my right hon. and learned Friend or his predecessor since 1979.

Roads

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) in what respects his announcement of 8 May concerning surface access to Prestwick airport changes the timetable for the Ayr road route as set out in his letter of 8 April 1987 to the hon. Member for Eastwood;

(2) what measures he now intends to take to improve road links between East Kilbride new town and Prestwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The announcement of 8 May does not affect the timetable for the Ayr road route. The Secretary of State for Scotland is now considering the report of the public local inquiry in respect of this project. The works are at present programmed to start late 1990 but achieving this will depend on the outcome of the inquiry.

Following the planned upgrading of the A77, further improvement of the road links between East Kilbride new town and Prestwick airport would depend upon the upgrading of a local road which would be a matter for Strathclyde regional council to consider.

Press Officers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of press officers employed in his Department; in what capacity they serve; and what is the scope of their duties.

Mr. Rifkind: At 30 April 1989 there were 27 press officers, namely:

1 chief information officer (A)
1 chief information officer (B)
3 principal information officers
9 senior information officers
10 information officers
3 assistant information officers

Their function is to support (by the provision of advice and specialist skills) Ministers and the Scottish Office Departments in supplying information to press, radio and television. They also provide a service, on request, to United Kingdom Departments, the Crown Office, those other departments that fall within my responsibilities such as Scottish Courts Administration, and a range of non-departmental public bodies. SIO is also responsible for media arrangements in relation to royal and state visits to Scotland; the provision of information overseas through the Central Office of Information; and the overseas visitor programme of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The office, which provides a 24-hour service, also lends support to the emergency services on media matters in the event of major civil emergencies such as Lockerbie.

The Scottish information Office has press offices in Edinburgh, London and Glasgow.

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors Nirex took into account in choosing to shortlist Dounreay as a possible site for the disposal of solid low and intermediate-level radioactive waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The factors which Nirex took into account in choosing Dounreay and Sellafield as sites for investigation for the disposal of radioactive wastes, are set out in Nirex's report to the Government, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what information he has concerning the future location of radioactive waste disposal sites in Scotland by Nirex; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on Wednesday 17 May 1989.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Nirex has advised him that it has identified any other sites besides Dounreay as being suitable for the disposal of nuclear waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: (holding answer 15 May 1989): I am aware that Nirex has identified sites in addition to Dounreay as potentially suitable for the disposal of radioactive waste. Its report to the Government, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, indicated a short list of 12 sites, but it recommended, and the Government has accepted, that investigations should be limited to Dounreay and Sellafield in the first instance.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competitiveness

16. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in competitiveness of British industry in the last 10 years.

49. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in competitiveness of British industry in the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: Competitiveness involves numerous factors including quality, reliability, assurance of delivery and after-sales service. In relation to price competitiveness alone, unit labour costs in United Kingdom manufacturing compared with those in other industrial countries, allowing for the effects of exchange rate movements, are thought to have been on average the same in 1988 as in 1979.

24. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the change in competitiveness of British industry in the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: Competitiveness involves numerous factors including quality, reliability, assurance of delivery and after-sales service. In relation to price competitiveness alone, unit labour costs in United Kingdom manufacturing compared with those in other industrial countries, allowing for the effects of exchange rate movements, are thought to have been on average the same in 1988 as in 1979.

Girobank

17. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received on the future of Girobank.

Mr. Newton: Since the beginning of the year I have received a small number of representations from MPs and members of the public, raising a variety of questions about the future of Girobank.

34. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the future of Girobank.

61. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the future of Girobank.

70. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the future of Girobank.

Mr. Newton: As I stated in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 20 April, the Post Office board accepted a conditional offer by the Alliance and Leicester Building Society for Girobank, and I endorsed the decision. Detailed negotiations between the two parties are continuing with a view to completion as soon as possible in the coming weeks.

The regulatory authorities will need to be satisfied and my consent will be needed before a sale can take place.

Manufacturing Sales

18. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the share of imports in United Kingdom manufacturing sales three years ago; and what it is at the present date.

52. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the share of imports in United Kingdom manufacturing sales in each of the last three years; and what it is now.

Mr. Alan Clark: The share of imports in United Kingdom manufacturing sales was 34·3 per cent. in 1985 and 35·8 per cent. in the 12-month period ending in the first quarter of 1988.

Post Boxes (Sealing)

19. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has had any discussion with Sir Bryan Nicholson of the Post Office regarding the case for reviewing the legal basis whereby post boxes may be sealed off.

Mr. Forth: No, Sir. Section 59 of the British Telecommunications Act 1981 makes it clear that the Post Office is entitled to interrupt, suspend or restrict any service provided by it in an emergency. On occasion, the Post Office is obliged to suspend collections from certain letter boxes during periods of industrial action and, in such circumstances, the letter boxes are sealed up.

World Trade

21. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom share of world trade in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988.

44. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom share of world trade in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988.

68. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom's share of world trade in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom share of world exports was 5·2 per cent. in 1978 and in January to September 1988, the latest period for which figures are available.

25. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which three industrial countries have lost the largest share of world trade over the last 10 years.

31. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which three industrial countries have lost the largest share of world trade over the last 10 years.

42. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which three industrial countries have lost the largest share of world trade over the last 10 years.

73. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which three industrial countries have lost the largest share of world trade over the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Netherlands, France and Greece recorded the largest reductions in share of world trade between 1978 and 1988.

Anti-dumping Duties

22. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many anti-dumping duties the European Economic Community has established on imports into the European Economic Community over the last year.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the period May 1988 to April 1989, definitive anti-dumpting duties were imposed by the EC in 30 cases involving 15 products.

Manufactured Goods (Exports)

23. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent United Kingdom share of world exports of manufactured goods; and what was the level in 1979, 1969 and 1959.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom share of the main manufacturing countries' exports of manufactures was 8·2 per cent. in the first three quarters of 1988, 9·1 per cent. in 1979, 11·2 per cent. in 1969 and 17·9 per cent. in 1959.

"The Observer"

26. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Newspaper Publishers Association to discuss control of The Observer newspaper.

Mr. Maude: I have had no meeting with the Newspaper Publishers Association to discuss control of The Observer newspaper.

Consumer Affairs (EC)

27. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss consumer affairs.

28. Mr. Stuart Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to meet the European Community Commissioner for Consumer Affairs; and what he expects to discuss.

41. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to meet the European Community Commissioner for Consumer Affairs; and what he expects to discuss.

43. Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what matters he proposes to discuss at the forthcoming meeting of European Economic Community Consumer Ministers.

53. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what matters he proposes to discuss at the forthcoming meeting of European Economic Community Consumer Ministers.

62. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what matters he proposes to discuss at the forthcoming meeting of European Economic Community Consumer Ministers.

74. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss consumer affairs.

76. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet his European Community counterparts to discuss consumer affairs.

Mr. Forth: I hope to meet my European Community counterparts and Mr. Van Miert, Commissioner with responsibility for consumer issues, at the Council of Consumer Ministers which the Spanish Presidency has planned for 1 June. The provisional agenda is as follows:

Proposal for a Council directive amending directive 87/102/EEC for the approximation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions of member states concerning consumer credit.

Draft resolution for the relaunch of EC consumer policy.

Commission report on the European home and leisure accident surveillance system.

Exchange of views on the Commission report on consumer education.

Commission presentation of the general product safety directive.

Any other business.

Brewing Industry (MMC Report)

29. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received any representations concerning the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the brewery industry.

Mr. Maude: I have received a large number of representations expressing various points of view.

51. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to respond to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report on the supply of beer.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend and I are currently considering the various representations being made to us, and we will announce as soon as possible the action that we propose to take.

Pound Sterling

30. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the current rate of the pound sterling against the deutschmark and dollar is having on export performance of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Manufacturing industry continues to improve its expert performance. The first quarter volume rose by 5 per cent. compared with the last quarter of 1988.

36. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice his Department is giving to export industries regarding the exchange rate of sterling.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our consistent advice to exporters on exchange rates has been that they should consider protecting themselves against the risk of exchange rate fluctuation and to consult experts, primarily the banks, about the best way of doing this.

Interest Rates

32. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce regulations to require moneylenders, banks and credit agencies, including credit card companies, to show clearly and simply in statements to customers the real rate of interest on any balance outstanding.

Mr. Maude: I have no plans to amend the current regulations under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, which have been in force since May 1985, relating to the disclosure of the rate of interest applied to outstanding balances due under running account credit agreements. These types of agreement apply to credit cards, store cards and budget accounts. Discussions are currently underway with the banks on making known the rate of interest that has been applied to an overdraft.

46. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the impact of the current level of interest rates on United Kingdom manufacturing industry.

Mr. Atkins: Manufacturing industry will greatly benefit from the Government's firm anti-inflationary policy because inflation is the greatest threat to the nation's prosperity.

47. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost to industry of the rise in base rates since April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The cost to industrial and commercial companies to date of the changes in bank base rates since April 1988, compared with the cost if bank base rates had remained the same since April 1988, is estimated to be about £1·3 billion. The hon. Member should bear in mind, however, that a one percentage point increase in interest rates, even if sustained for a full year, costs companies far less than a one percentage point increase in pay settlements.

Manufacturing Output

33. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the output per employee in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom, France, the United States of America, West Germany and Japan.

71. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the output per employee in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom, France, the United States of America, West Germany and Japan.

78. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the output per employee in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom, France, the United States of America, West Germany and Japan.

83. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the seven major industrial countries have a higher manufacturing productivity level than the United Kingdom; and which have a lower.

84. Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the output per employee in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom, France, the United States of America, West Germany and Japan.

Mr. Atkins: No reliable comparisons exist for absolute levels of output per employee in manufacturing industry between different countries, but available figures show that in the 1980s output per employee in manufacturing industry has grown faster in the United Kingdom than in France, the United States of America, West Germany or Japan.

77. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent United Kingdom share of world exports of manufactured goods; and what was the level in 1979, 1969 and 1959.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 10 May 1989, Official Report column 435.

72. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the figure for the same month in 1973.

Mr. Atkins: In March 1989 manufacturing output was at a level of 118·5, based on 1985 equal to 100. This is 7½ per cent. more than the level of 110·4 for March 1973. But my hon. Friend will appreciate that monthly data can be erratic. A firmer based comparison would be that in the first quarter of 1989 manufacturing output was 7½ per cent. higher than in the same period in 1973. It was also 6½ per cent. higher than in the first quarter of 1988. Manufacturing output is now at its highest ever level.

Information Technology

35. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom trade deficit in information technology products in 1988.

67. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the United Kingdom trade deficit in information technology products in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom trade deficit in the products of the electronic and information technology sector was £2·3 billion in the 12 months to September 1988.

Borrowers (Advice)

37. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received recent representations from United Kingdom banks, other financial institutions and credit-giving institutions in general concerning proposed regulations giving advice to borrowers on secured and unsecured loan obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Maude: Draft proposals were recently circulated to credit trade associations, enforcement bodies and consumer organisations on amendments to the consumer credit advertisements regulations. These include a warning that a borrower's home is at risk if repayments are not kept up on a secured loan. Comments were invited by 28 April and these are under consideration.

Inward Investment

38. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total of inward investment recorded by industries engaged in motor and component manufacturing since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1984 there have been 83 inward investment projects in the United Kingdom in the motor and component manufacturing sectors involving the creation of around 12,000 new jobs and the safeguarding of around 18,000 existing jobs. These projects include the establishment of new businesses, the expansion or acquisition of existing businesses and involvement in joint ventures. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available. The job figures are based upon information provided to the Department at the time the investment decisions were made and take no account of subsequent developments.

Included among these figures are the major investments by Nissan in 1984 creating 2,700 jobs in the North East (later expanded in 1987, creating a further 1,400 jobs); and of Ford in 1988 which will create more than 1,700 jobs in Wales. In April 1989 Toyota announced its decision to manufacture cars in Derbyshire with the eventual creation of 3,000 new jobs. Bosch announced that it will be manufacturing alternators in Wales creating over 1,000 new jobs; and Fujitsu announced a new factory in the North East with the eventual creation of 1,500 new jobs.

From 1980 to 1987 inclusive, the latest years for which such information is available, foreign companies directly invested £0·9 billion net in the their subsidiary associate and branch conerns in the United Kingdom vehicle industry. This figure, which excludes funds raised locally understates the amount of new investment in production capacity because other overseas funding flows are included.

48. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of inward investments in 1979 and for the most recent year for which information is available.

Mr. Atkins: The latest available information on the level of inward investment in the United Kingdom is given in table 9.1 of the United Kingdom Balance of Payments —1988 (the CSO Pink Book). A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

39. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his current criteria for referring a bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

58. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his current criteria for referring a bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: The Government's policy remains as we set it out on 3 March 1988. Our review, the results of which we announced at that time, concluded that the effect of a merger on competition in the United Kingdom should continue to be the main criterion in deciding whether a merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Household Electrical Goods

40. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current import penetration of the market for household electrical goods.

59. Mr. Orme: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current import penetration of the market for household electrical goods.

82. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current import penetration of the market for household electrical goods.

Mr. Atkins: Taking the coverage of "household electrical goods" to be the same as that of business monitor PQ 3460—"Domestic electrical appliances"—it is estimated that in 1988 the import penetration of the market for household electrical goods was 40 per cent.

Manufacturing Productivity

45. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the seven major industrial countries have higher manufacturing productivity than the United Kingdom; and which have a lower level.

Mr. Atkins: No reliable comparisons exist for absolute levels of manufacturing productivity between different countries, but available figures show that in the 1980s the United Kingdom has had the fastest rate of growth of manufacturing productivity of the seven major industrialised countries.

Chemical Industry

50. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution the chemical industry has made to the balance of payments over the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: The contribution for the three-year period is estimated as a positive balance of some £9 billion.

EC (Inward Investment)

54. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the total amount of (a) United States inward investment into member states of the European Community and (b) inward investment into the United States by European firms, over the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information, as published by the United States Department of Commerce, is as follow:

Flows of United States direct investment

US$ billion

	1986	1987	1988
United States 'outward' direct investment in the EC	12·8	20·9	[1]5·8
'Inward' direct investment in the United States by the EC	19·1	31·4	[1]22·4

Estate Agents

55. Mr. Cousins : To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what changes to the Estate Agents Act 1979 he is considering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I am currently in the process of concluding a review of estate agency. The review has examined the operations of the Estate Agents Act 1979 and has considered recommendations from the Director General of Fair Trading and proposals from estate agency bodies. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

81. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in drawing up a statutory code on practice for estate agents.

Mr. Forth: I am currently in the process of concluding a review of estate agency. In the course of my review I have given particular consideration to whether it might be appropriate to develop a code of practice for estate agents to supplement the existing consumer protection provisions of the Estate Agents Act 1979. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

British Shipbuilders

56. Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met Mr. John Lister on Thursday 12 January and am in regular contact with him on matters relating to the corporation's disposals programme.

Textiles

57. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on trends in productivity and output in the United Kingdom textiles industry over the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988 output and productivity in the United Kingdom textiles industry are estimated to have been 2·5 per cent. higher and 7·1 per cent. higher respectively than in 1985.

Chlorofluorocarbons

60. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect he expects there to be on industry from the controls on chlorofluorocarbon production and consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Because of the wide variety of uses to which chlorofluorocarbons are put, the effects of the controls will vary for both producers and industrial consumers depending on the precise products and applications involved. Market forces should encourage the development of alternative technologies, products and processes.

The controls represent both a challenge and an opportunity to which industry is already making positive responses.

Single European Market

63. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the help which is being given to companies to enable them to take full advantage of the establishment of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Maude: DTI's "Europe Open for Business" campaign provides a comprehensive service to business including:

A 24-hour telephone 'hotline': 01-200 1992.
Factsheets on the single market programme.
An 'action checklist for business'.
"Spearhead" database giving the up-to-date position on single market proposals and details of relevant Community legislation.
Range of booklets on standards.
Video pack on the Brussels decision-making process.
Quarterly newsletter Single Market News.
Proposals.

64. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to ensure that industry in (a) the North East of Scotland and (b) the other regions of the United Kingdom is ready to benefit from the single European market.

Mr. Maude: The completion of the single market by the end of 1992 will affect all regions, directly or indirectly. The central message of our "Europe Open for Business" campaign is therefore to encourage all firms, wherever they are located, to take action now to ensure that they benefit from the opportunities the single market will bring.

Barlow Clowes

65. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of their investments has now been recovered by investors in the McDonald Wheeler and Barlow Clowes funds; and how many criminal charges have now been preferred in respect of those involved in these businesses.

Mr. Maude: I understand that investors in McDonald Wheeler have received 36p in the pound in distributions made to date. Investors in Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Ltd., whose accounts were with Lloyds Bank trustee account have received 75p in the pound and other investors in Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Ltd. have received 25p in the pound to date.

Mr. John David William Wheeler has been charged on three charges of fraudulent trading, 11 of theft, two of using a false instrument, one of publishing a false statement and one of false accounting. These charges are the subject of extradition proceedings in the Republic of Ireland. Mr. John Arthur Woodall has been charged on three charges of fraudulent trading, one of theft, one of false accounting and one of publishing a false statement. Mr. Peter Clowes and others have been charged on two charges of conspiracy to steal, 13 of theft, one of false accounting and one of perverting the course of justice.

Building Societies and Insurance Companies

66. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the impact on consumer choice of the development of tied arrangements between building societies and insurance companies.

Mr. Forth: I have made no formal assessment but this is an issue which my Department and the other departments concerned are keeping under review.

Competition

69. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to meet with the responsible vice-president of the European Commission to discuss competition policy.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend and I expect to meet Sir Leon Brittan from time to time, to discuss a variety of competition issues.

Machine Tools

75. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from the machine tool industry.

Mr. Atkins: I have not recently received any representation from the machine tool industry.

"Releasing Enterprise"

79. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in helping to achieve a greater understanding between Government and business following the publication last year of "Releasing Enterprise".

Mr. Maude: Departments have now drawn up their action programmes to boost the number and range of secondments and attachments of employees from the Civil Service to business and vice versa and the number of civil servants holding non-executive directorships. Overall, these programmes imply a doubling of the numbers involved by the end of this year. On 1 March, the Government launched the bridge programme to alert businesses to these new interchange opportunities and to encourage direct contact with Departments. I sent a copy of the documents to all hon. Members.

Departments' plans also include training, workshops and management action to improve awareness of the impact of Government on enterprise.

Packaging (Security)

80. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent talks he has held with food manufacturers with regard to packaging security.

Mr. Forth: No such talks have been held as food matters are not the responsibility of this Department.

UniChem

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on UniChem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission concluded that UniChem has arrangements for the allotment of shares in its capital which are anti-competitive and against the public interest.

I accept the MMC's findings and conclusions. As from tomorrow, 18 May 1989, purchases from UniChem by its members will not be able to contribute towards the allotment of shares in its capital. A notice will shortly be published describing in detail the order I propose to make with a view to achieving this result.

UniChem is an industrial and provident society whose main activity is the wholesale supply of pharmaceutical goods. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission was asked to investigate UniChem's allocation of shares prior to its proposed conversion into a public limited company in mid 1990. UniChem had decided to allocate a large number of shares at £1 per share nominal value (refundable if members left the society) to new and existing members of the society. The allocations to be made on the basis of the levels of business placed by them with UniChem in the period up to May 1990.

Because UniChem is a profitable business with a large share of the market, the value of shares on conversion is likely to be well in excess of the nominal value. Partly as a result of this prospect of considerable capital gain, UniChem has attracted both new members and additional business from existing members, and increased its market share.

The commission found that the arrangements enabled UniChem to increase market share by means other than price reduction or improved quality of service, and that competitors were not likely to be able to compete using similar arrangements, or, having regard to the low margins prevailing in the industry, through price reductions or other forms of discount. The commission concluded that UniChem's arrangements had distorted competition and were therefore anti-competitive. The commission went on to conclude that the arrangements were also against the public interest and, if the arrangements were allowed to remain in place, would continue to be, as leading to reduced competition in the supply of goods to retail pharmacies, reduced choice of wholesalers, and reduced quality of service.

The commission also concluded that measures should be taken to prevent further damage to the wholesale pharmaceutical market, and recommended that any shares to be issued by UniChem in future should not be related to purchases from UniChem made after publication of the report. Nor should UniChem change the minimum level of turnover required for membership, or the number of shares to which new members must subscribe.

I accept the commission's recommendations. I intend to make an order which will prohibit UniChem Limited from continuing to operate its "share scheme", under which shares will be allotted by reference to the amounts of goods and services acquired from UniChem, except in respect of allotment by reference to goods and services acquired by 17 May 1989. UniChem may not make or carry out any agreement in respect of allotment by reference to later acquisitions of goods or services.

UniChem must also hold its minimum purchase qualification for continued membership to £3,000 per month and its initial share subscription qualification to 200 per premises, up to a maximum of 1,000.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any further announcement to make concerning the National Engineering Laboratory.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has now received the report from Touche Ross Management Consultants appointed on 29 November 1988 to undertake a detailed study of the National Engineering Laboratory and to advise on the restructuring that is necessary as the way forward towards privatisation. Copies of a summary of their report are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses and made available to staff at NEL.

Taking account of the report and the advice of the NEL supervisory board, we concluded that the considerable skills of the laboratory are best exploited in a framework which provides greater opportunities for commercial drive. In our view this is best secured through privatisation. We have concluded that in order to achieve a successful privatisation, restructuring and a new commercially oriented approach to business must first be established. This process could take some years.

To prepare for privatisation, we propose to follow the recommendation of Touche Ross and to transfer the laboratory out of the Civil Service into the ownership of a limited company, to be called the National Technology Centre Ltd., whose shares will be held initially by Government, but which could later be sold when the business of the laboratory has been transformed. The necessary legislation will be brought forward as soon as possible. The laboratory will play a central role within the National Technology Centre and within the East Kilbride site. The future of the East Kilbride site is also important, and we intend that it should be developed as a science and technology park which will be an attractive location for science based companies.

Management Training

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he has taken in support of the charter group initiative for management training.

Mr Forth: My Department's strong support for the management charter initiative (charter group initiative) is set out clearly in the 1988 White Paper, "DTI—the Department for Enterprise"(Cm. 278). We have offered pump-priming funding of up to £0·5 million a year for up to five years, to match employer donations. £500,000 was awarded during financial year 1988-89. DTI and all major Government Departments have become founder members of the management charter initiative.

Link

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the LINK programmes so far announced, showing in each case the funds committed to them by (a) the Government, (b) higher education institutions, (c) the research councils and (d) the private sector.

Mr. Forth: The LINK programmes so far announced, together with the funding authorised, are listed below. Higher education institutions are normally recipients of research council funding. The private sector is required at least to match the Government funding for each LINK programme.

Programme	Funding (£ million)
	Government Departments	Research councils	Private sector
Molecular electronics	5·00	5·00	10·00

Telephones (Pensioners)

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, when he next meets the Director-General of Oftel, he will direct him to make it a condition of British Telecom's licence that they abolish rental charges on telephones for pensioner customers.

Mr. Atkins: Under the terms of the Telecommunications Act 1984, it would be entirely for the Director General of Telecommunications to consider whether such a licence condition would be appropriate. I understand that he is considering with British Telecom the details of a more effective replacement for the existing low user rebate scheme and that he is aware of the importance such a scheme has for those pensioners who spend relatively little on telephone calls.

Space

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards space and its exploitation.

Mr. Atkins: The Government work primarily through the European Space Agency in pursuing space science research and in developing those areas of space activity that have commercial potential. Earth observation is now the centre piece of civil space policy. The United Kingdom has joined ESA's Columbus programme, concentrating on the polar platform element: and the Government are funding the establishment of the earth observation data centre at Farnborough. The civil space programme is implemented through the British National Space Centre which brings together the space interests of various Departments and research councils. Greater private sector participation in space programmes is being encouraged. But the Government expect to maintain its own expenditure on civil space at the level of approximately £130 million per annum. Further details are given in the Government's response to the Second Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, 1987-88 Session. The memorandum containing this response was placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 28 July 1988 [Official Report, House of Lords, c. 477.] and was subsequently published in HL Paper 105 (11 October 1988).

House of Fraser

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 12 April, Official Report, column 543, when he expects the urgent and thorough investigations into the leaking of his Departmental inspectors' report on the acquisition of the House of Fraser to be concluded.

Mr. Forth: This investigation is still in progress. It is not yet possible to forecast when it will be concluded.

Kemp Report

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consult interested parties before reaching any decision on the recommendations of the Kemp report on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: The report on the future status of ECGD has only just been received by DTI Ministers. The procedures for considering it are still being examined.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received the report by Mr. Kemp on the future status of Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: Mr. Kemp has submitted his report on the future status of ECGD to the Secretary of State and other relevant DTI Ministers.

Written Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary System

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consequences would ensue for the United Kingdom economy and United Kingdom citizens in the event of sterling joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system and what would be the necessary changes in public policy.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 8 May, at column 318.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether value added tax is charged on Ministry of Defence purchases from the United States of America which are delivered direct to British forces in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: United Kingdom VAT is not applicable to such purchases. By virtue of international agreements, German VAT is not charged.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much advertising air time Her Majesty's Treasury purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 May 1989]: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Service (Discipline)

Q17. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment has been made of the effects on discipline in the Civil Service of the practice of officials sanctioning the unauthorised release of official information other than through conventional channels without prior explicit ministerial consent.

The Prime Minister: None.

Court of Auditors

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the procedure for considering the annual reports of the Court of Auditors; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The annual reports of the Court of Auditors are discussed each year at the Economic and Finance Council in line with a procedure which the United Kingdom was instrumental in securing.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 May.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 May.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teaching Vacancies (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current number of teaching vacancies at educational establishments in the Bolton education authority area; and what categories of subject the vacancies fall into.

Mrs. Rumbold: In January 1989 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 10 full-time teacher vacancies in nursery and primary schools maintained by bolton local education authority—one in the nursery, five in the infant and four in the junior age group.

At the same date there was one full-time teacher vacancy (in English) in maintained secondary schools.

No information is available regarding vacancies in other educational establishments.

Open University

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the outcome of the latest meeting of the visiting committee of the Open university in terms of evaluation of the future course profile and financial stability of the university.

Mr. Jackson: At its latest meeting on 13 and 14 April the Open university visiting committee began its consideration of the university's programmes and financial forecasts. It will complete its assessment, and report to my right hon. Friend in the summer.

Volunteer Youth Workers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the letter of 7 March from the chairman of Warwickshire association of youth clubs, Mrs. B. E. Winstanley, about grant aid for the training of volunteer youth workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department sent a reply to Mrs. Winstanley on May 10. A copy of the reply has been sent to the hon. Member.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost of maintenance grants paid to part-time students in each of the past 10 years in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms with 1979=100.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the projected cost of maintenance grants to be paid to part-time students in each of the next five years.

Mr. Jackson: The information which would be required to provide such a projection is not collected centrally.

College Lecturers (School Teachers)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage college lecturers to become school teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: Last October the Department published a discussion paper on the staffing implications of projected student numbers in LEA-maintained FE colleges in England. That paper suggested that local education authorities should consider redeploying suitably qualified surplus FE lecturers to teach shortage subjects in schools. Under the proposed licensed teacher scheme, FE lecturers with two years' experience will become eligible for qualified teacher status after one year's service as a licensed teacher instead of two as will be the case generally.

Incentive Allowances

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend of 5 May, Official Report, column 256, that no further information is at present available, what further information he intends to collect in relation to awards of incentive allowances, for each school or financial year since 30 September 1987; when and by what means he intends to collect such further information; if he will estimate the date or dates of publication of such further information; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The database of teacher records will provide detailed information on an annual basis about the numbers of teachers in receipt of incentive allowances. The first such data, showing the position in March 1988, are likely to become available early next year.

University Statistical Record

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he collects information from, or has access to, the University Statistical Record.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has no direct access to the University Statistical Record. Given prior notice, the USR can on occasions supply information not available in published reports, although details of individual institutions normally remain confidential.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Citizens Imprisoned Abroad

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the figures for each of the last five years for which records are available of the numbers of British citizens imprisoned abroad who returned to this country within that year.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state for the last year for which figures are available how many British citizens imprisoned abroad received (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four and (e) more than four visits from consular officials.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report all those consular posts which have a local benevolent fund or charity on which they can draw for buying extra food, soap, and so on for British citizens imprisoned abroad, stating against each (a) the total drawn for each of the last five years for which figures are available and (b) the total amount available from each source in this financial year.

Mr. Eggar: Many of our consular posts around the world have access to local benevolent funds. Such funds exist purely due to private donations. Since public funds are not involved we do not keep a central list. The funds also vary enormously in their extent and purpose as well as the degree to which consular posts may draw on them.

Lorrain Esme Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the issue in Hong Kong on 30 November 1985 of a warrant for the arrest of Lorrain Esme Osman, and the quashing of the warrant by the Hong Kong Court of Appeal on 4 May 1989 on the grounds that it was vitiated by bias.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the relevant authorities in Hong Kong and for the courts here.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of the Republic of Liberia in respect of Lorrain Esme Osman; whether Mr. Osman has diplomatic immunity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There has been an exchange of notes with the Liberian Government through its embassy in London about Mr. Osman's appointment as Liberian ambassador-at-large to the European Community and his status in the United Kingdom. It is for the courts to decide whether Mr. Osman has any diplomatic immunity, in accordance with the Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 and the facts presented to them.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas Masks (Israel)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why his Department is refusing an export licence to allow gas masks to be sold to Israel for purely defensive purposes.

Mr. Alan Clark: No application has been received for a licence to export gas masks to Israel.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Population Control

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications were received for 1989 for allocations through the joint funding scheme for population and family planning projects; what these applications were and from which organisations; how many and which were accepted; and what amounts were allocated to each organisation.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is maintained by financial year rather than calendar year. Details of the population and family planning project applications which have been received under the joint funding scheme for the current financial year, 1989-90, and following years are:

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions for 1989 are being made to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the World Health Organisation's special programme on human reproduction.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have made the following pledges for 1989:

International Planned Parenthood Federation:
£6·75 million (including £0·5 million for AIDS prevention programme);
United Nations Population Fund:
£5·5 million:
World Health Organisation's special programme on human reproduction: £2·2 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list bilateral disbursements for population and family planning activities in each of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989, classified by project and country.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration funded the following population-related projects in 1987:

Bangladesh
World Bank Third Population and Family Health Project (825,000)
Botswana
Public Health and Primary Nurse Tutor (£20,000)
Fiji
Population Census (£15,000)
The Gambia
Provision of family planning materials (£2,000)
India
Orissa Family Welfare Project Phase I (£566,000)
Integrated Family Welfare Gujarat (£8,000)
Assistance to the Registrar General's Office (£18,000)
Kiribati
Population Census (£4,000)
Malawi
Population Census (£62,000
Malaysia
Adviser in Demography (£52,000)
Nepal
ODA/UNFPA Project (Pilot Operational Research in Community Based Family Planning/Mother and Child Health Activities (£2,000)
Pakistan
Population Welfare Projects I and II (141,000)
Tanzania
Family Planning Study (£22,000)
Population Census (£6,000)

In addition, the provision of family planning services formed part of a large number of primary health care projects and programmes in which we were involved. The Overseas Development Administration also provided £78,000 under its research and development programme for population-related work.

Disbursement figures for 1988 and 1989 are not yet available. The following projects were under way or were approved in 1988 and 1989:

Bangladesh
World Bank Third Population and Family Health Project
Botswana
Public Health and Family Planning Tutor
Fiji
Assistance to Population Census
India
Orissa Family Welfare Project phases I and II
Integrated Family Welfare Project Gujarat
Population components in Slum Improvement Projects (Hyderabad, Indore and Vijayawada)
Assistance to the Registrar General's Office
Kenya
World Bank Third Population Project
Population Census

Kiribati
Population Census
Malawi
Population Census
Malaysia
Adviser in Demography (Economic Planning Unit)
Nepal
Population Studies
Pakistan
Population Welfare Projects I and II
Reproduction Health Services Project
Tanzania
Population Census

In 1987, 29 trainees came to the United Kingdom on population-related courses. In 1988 a further 37 trainees began similar courses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Pornography

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received representations about the increase in pornographic books and magazines in circulation; whether he is giving consideration to a more effective definition of obscenity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We receive correspondence about a number of aspects of our controls on obscene material. The Government have supported recent attempts to strengthen the test of obscenity in the Obscene Publications Act 1959, and have strengthened the controls on child pornography. Attempts to change the 1959 Act have not yet commanded the support of Parliament.

Car Pound (Metropolitan Police)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether maximum use and benefit is currently being derived from the Metropolitan police car pound at Calthorpe street, London WC1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that although the car pound at Calthorpe street WC1 has not yet been used to full capacity it is regarded as an important acquisition, allowing the Metropolitan police scope for expansion of their removal operations and providing additional space which may be required in the event of closure of other car pounds.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will update his Department's 1982 research into electoral registration entitled "Electoral Registration in 1981".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 1981 study was based on replies to questions included in the post-enumeration survey following the 1981 census. Parliament will be informed of any proposal, in the light of consideration in due course, to include similar questions in the post-enumeration survey following the 1991 census.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated turnover of off-course betting on greyhound racing for 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office is not in a position to make an estimate of the proportion of off-course betting attributable to greyhound racing.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will announce if there will be an inquiry into greyhound racing finances;

(2) how many representations he has received in favour of an inquiry into greyhound racing finances.

Mr. John Patten: Between November 1988, when the British Greyhound Racing Board launched a campaign for an inquiry into the finances of greyhound racing (and of horseracing) and their relationship to off-course betting, and 15 May, we have received 13 letters from Members of Parliament in support of or asking about such an inquiry. In addition, in that period there have been two earlier questions asking if such an inquiry is to be established, and early-day motion 185, which calls on the Government to undertake a "wider inquiry into off-course bookmaking and the feasibility of a levy for greyhound racing".

In his reply on 22 March to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt), my right hon. Friend said that he would announce his conclusion on the recommendation from the Government-appointed members of the Horserace Betting Levy Board that there should be an inquiry into the long-term funding of racing when he had received and considered advice from Lloyds merchant bank as to the feasibility of privatising the Horserace Totalisator Board. Whether or not the financing of greyhound racing should be included in such an inquiry is among the considerations which my right hon. Friend is taking into account.

Polling Stations (Access)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give instructions to all electoral returning officers that every polling station should have reasonable access for disabled people, including those in wheelchairs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 6 April 1989, at column 738.

Remand

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest period during the past 20 years for which a person has been held in custody on remand; and who currently on remand has been held for the longest time.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information about the longest periods held on remand during the last 20 years is not available centrally. On 31 March 1989 one unconvicted prisoner had been held in Pentonville prison for more than three years having been committed to custody pending completion of extradition proceedings. An indication of the length of time spent in prison service establishments by persons received on remand is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (tables 2.3, 2.4 of the latest issue, for 1987, Cm. 547), copies of which are in the Library.

Lorrain Esme Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long Lorrain Esme Osman, currently held in Her Majesty's prison, Pentonville, has been in custody; what grounds there are for Mr. Osman's continued detention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Osman has been in custody since 7 December 1985. He was committed in custody by Bow street magistrates court on 1 June 1987 to await the Home Secretary's order for his surrender to the Hong Kong authorities under the provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967. Since then his surrender has been repeatedly deferred pending the outcome of applications for writs of habeas corpus and related appeals.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the request for extradition received from Hong Kong accompanying a warrant of arrest dated 30 November 1985 in respect of Lorrain Esme Osman.

Mr. John Patten: The request for Mr. Osman's extradition has been considered by the courts. The information provided to the courts in accordance with the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967 included the arrest warrant and supporting documents. It is not the practice to publish other communications about extradition cases.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to order Lorrain Esme Osman to be returned to Hong Kong until the English courts have completed their consideration of the effect of the decision by the Hong Kong Court of Appeal on 4 May 1989 quashing a warrant dated 30 November 1985 on the grounds that it was vitiated by bias; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Under the provisions of the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967 my right hon. Friend cannot order the return of a fugitive until any proceedings challenging the committal for surrender by the Bow street magistrates, whether by way of an application for habeas corpus or an appeal arising from such an application, have been concluded.

Police (Deaths)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in England and Wales have lost their lives in the course of their duty in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of police officers in England and Wales who were killed in the course of duty during each of the past five years is as follows:

	Number
1984	15
1985	7
1986	9
1987	11
1988	2

In each of the years 1987 and 1988 one officer in addition to the above figures lost his life as a result of responding to criminal action while off duty.

Passports

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received during 1989 about delays in the renewal of passports held by United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Renton: We have received about 250 letters of complaint about delays at the passport offices since the beginning of the year. Not all of these related specifically to applications for renewal or replacement of an existing passport.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Beverley of 15 May, what he treats as legitimate uses to which electronic surveillance listening devices may be put as distinct from television-based devices.

Mr. Hurd: The Younger report on privacy referred to the use of equipment for aural surveillance in investigative and documentary journalism and in the observation of patients by hospital staff.

Firearms (Amendment) Act

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to implement the remaining provisions of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Hurd: I signed a commencement order on 17 May 1989 which will bring into effect the remaining provisions of the Act as follows:

Sections coming into force on 1 July 1989
Section 2	(Re-definition of exempted shotguns)
Section 3	(Grant and renewal of shotgun certificates)
Section 4	(Transfers of shotgun)
Section 5	(Restriction on sale of ammunition for smooth-bore guns)
Section 6	(Shortening of barrels)
Sections 7(2) and 7(3)	(Conversion of weapon to which section 1 of the 1968 Act applies not to affect classification)
Section 11	(Grant of co-terminous certificates)
Section 13(1)	(Firearms dealers)
Section 15	(Rifle and pistol clubs)
Section 19	(Firearms and ammunition in museums)
Section 20	(Removal of arms and ammunition to Northern Ireland)
Section 23(4) 23(5) 23(6)	(Minor and consequential amendments)
Section 24(2)	(Expenses and receipts)
Sections coming into force on 1 October 1989
Section 17	(Visitors' permits)
Section 18	(Firearms acquired for export)
Section 23(8)	(Repeal of section 14 of the 1968 Act)

Transitional arrangements have been made to allow owners of smooth-bore guns raised to section 1 control a period of seven months—from 1 July 1989 to 31 January 1990—in which to comply with the new controls. During this time they will have a number of options open to them. If they wish to retain the weapon in its existing condition they may apply for a firearm certificate, or a variation to an existing one, subject to the criteria laid down in the Firearms Act 1968 being met. They may continue to hold the gun on a shotgun certificate by adapting it so that it has a non-detachable magazine incapable of holding more than two cartridges in the manner approved under section 2(3) of the Act. Or they may arrange to have it de-activated. Alternatively, the weapon may be sold to a registered firearms dealer or to the holder of a section 1 firearm certificate who is authorised to acquire it.

Immigration

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision he has made regarding allowing Fiore, an Italian citizen, to remain in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 May 1989]: In 1981 the Italian Government requested the extradition of Mr. Fiore for a number of offences, but the request failed in the courts because a prime facie case could not be established. No further request has been received from the Italian Government for his extradition. When the extradition provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 are brought into force later this year the United Kingdom will be able to ratify the European convention on extradition, which does not impose a prime facie requirement.

Consideration has also been given to Mr. Fiore's deportation under section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971. Under Community law, a Community national working here can be deported on grounds of public policy, public security or public health. In accordance with case law established by the European Court, however, it would be necessary to have evidence of personal conduct constituting a present threat to the requirements of public policy. Mr. Fiore has been interviewed by officers of the immigration department of the Home Office, but the evidence available does not meet the strict criteria for deportation required under European law.

WALES

Administrative and Clerical Staff

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received concerning the pay of administrative and clerical staff in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Student Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision there is in Wales for student nurses, whose first language is Welsh, to study for nursing qualifications; and if he will list those schools of nursing in Wales who provide training for nurses whose first language is Welsh.

Mr. Grist: For individuals in Wales to register and practise as a nurse they must obtain qualifications prescribed by the United Kingdom central council for nursing, midwifery and health visiting. Registration enables nurses to practise anywhere in the United Kingdom. Student nurses in Wales are therefore trained solely through the medium of English.

Polytechnic of Wales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his intentions regarding the future funding and status of the Polytechnic of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Polytechnic of Wales will continue to be funded from the higher education quantum on the advice of the Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education. If it acquires corporate status as a limited company it will become an assisted, rather than a maintained, institution, but its funding arrangements would not change. The question of the polytechnic acquiring corporate status in this way is a matter for Mid Glamorgan county council as the maintaining local education authority.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for improvement of community dental services; what additional resources he is making available to district health authorities for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office officials will be discussing community dental services with officers of district health authorities in order to assess the adequacy of current levels of provision in the light of the recently issued circular WHC(89)28 entitled "The Future Development of Community Dental Services".

Housing Associations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there is any cash limit on the central Government resources available to housing associations in Wales for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: There is currently no technical cash limit on central Government resources available to housing associations in Wales, but I determine each year the allocation within which Housing for Wales must plan its development programme.

Mental Health

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the two recent changes in the staff of his Department responsible for mental health provision were post deletions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number and value of regional selective assistance applications in Wales in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number and value of regional selective assistance applications received by my Department was as follows:

Year	[1] Number of applications	Value of grant applied for (£ million)
1987-88	198	68
1988-89	267	135

[1] RSA project and training grants.

NHS (Complaints)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints he has received about the National Health Service in Wales in the calendar years of (a) 1986, (b) 1987, and (c) 1988.

Mr. Grist: This information is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number and value of regional development grant applications in Wales for (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87, (c) 1987-88 and (d) 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of applications received by my Department under the revised regional development grant scheme (RDG II) and the related project expenditure were as follows:

Year	[1] Number of applications	[2] Related project expenditure (£ million)
1985-86	952	169
1986-87	1,640	351
1987-88	3,438	1,567

[1] The RDG II scheme closed to new applications on 31 March 1988. Ineligible applications received subsequent to that date have been excluded from the answer.

[2] The related project expenditure represents the capital expenditure forecast to be incurred by applicants on projects toward which grant is sought. An RDG II applicant is not required to state the value of grant applied for.

National Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the inflation-adjusted expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales per year over each of the last 10 years up to the year ending March 1989.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Total National Health Service gross expenditure

Year	[1] £ million
1979-80	904·7
1980-81	982·0
1981-82	1,018·6
1982-83	1,048·9
1983-84	1,064·1
1984-85	1,096·1
1985-86	1,109·7
1986-87	1,154·3
1987-88	1,219·0
1988-89	1,273·7

[1] Actual expenditure has been adjusted for the effect of general inflation by using the gross domestic product market price deflator, brought to a 1988-89 price base.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the figures for perinatal mortality in Wales for each year since 1979, in a form statistically comparable to those produced elsewhere in western Europe.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of registered perinatal deaths and the perinatal mortality rates for Wales since 1979 are given in the following table:

Perinatal deaths in Wales

Year	[1] Number	[2] Rate
1979	569	15·6
1980	483	12·8
1981	508	14·1
1982	400	11·1
1983	405	11·3
1984	380	10·5
1985	378	10·2
1986	384	10·3
1987	351	9·2

[1] The number of registered stillbirths and deaths within the first week of life.

[2] Perinatal deaths per 1,000 total (ie live and still births).

Source: OPCS.

Precise data comparability with countries outside the United Kingdom are problematic as the legal requirements of the registration systems vary, as do the recording practices, particularly as regards stillbirth.

Within the United Kingdom stillbirths of 28 weeks gestation and over should be registered. Lower gestation limits apply in some countries for example France (26 weeks). In other countries a physical measurement of the stillborn is the criterion. For example birthweight of 1,000g or more applies in Federal Republic of Germany and in some countries the criterion is either gestation or physical measurement.

Talgarth and Crickhowell Bypasses

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will be able to publish the final line of route of (a) the Talgarth and (b) the Crickhowell bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Not for some time yet.

Public consultation on alternative options for a bypass of Talgarth will be undertaken towards the end of the year and a fee competition for the appointment of consultants to undertake a bypass feasibility study for Crickhowell will be held shortly.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales during which year he expects work to commence on (a) the Talgarth and (b) the Crickhowell bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: "Roads in Wales 1989—Progress and Plans for the 1990's" shows Talgarth bypass for possible start in the medium term period April 1991 to March 1994 and Crickhowell bypass as a long-term scheme unlikely to start before 1994-95. It is not possible to be more precise.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of National Health Service hospitals in each of the Welsh health authority areas for every year from 1979 to the end of 1988.

Mr. Grist: A list of hospitals in Wales, up to and including 1987, has been published annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales" copies of which are in the Library of the House. During 1988, one hospital—Neath annexe in west Glamorgan—closed and one hospital—Minffordd in Gwynedd—reopened.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated to Tai Cymru for its rural housing initiative; and how much of this money will be allocated to each district and borough council area in Wales for 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: No specific allocation has been made to Housing for Wales-Tai Cymru for rural housing, but I have asked it to maintain its investment in rural areas in line with previous years at around 25 per cent. of its development programme. With regard to detailed allocations by Housing for Wales to district and borough council areas, I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Water Bill

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department's water and environmental protection division will now reply to the letters sent on 14 December 1988 and 19 March 1989 to M. Mathews, R. H. Lockyear and P. M. Jones regarding the effects of the Water Bill on the Swansea City Council (Tawe Barrage) Act 1986.

Mr. Grist: A letter was sent on Wednesday 17 May.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the average farm income in Wales for each of the last five years for which figures are available and adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Peter Walker: Average net income for dairy and livestock farms in Wales for each of the five years since 1983-84 was as follows:

Year	Average net income £ per farm
1982-83	8,052
1983-84	7,562
1984-85	6,746
1985-86	7,914
1986-87	8,509

On an index basis, and adjusted for inflation, the figures are as follows:

Year
1982-83	100
1983-84	92
1984-85	79
1985-86	84
1986-87	81

1982-83 = 100

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the additional powers poll tax registration officers have to the current rate collection system in terms of access and examination of personal details.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax and there will be no poll tax registration officers.

World Habitat Day

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what special steps are being taken by his Department to mark World Habitat Day.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following the United Nations General Assembly adoption, in December 1988, of a global strategy for shelter to the year 2000, the Department will be preparing regular national monitoring reports, to be presented on World Habitat Day, on progress towards implementing the global strategy.

New Towns (Sale of Assets)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the total sum realised by sale of assets by the Commission for the New Towns for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Trippier: The sums realised by the Commission for the New Towns are as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	6·43
1980-81	29·61
1981-82	61·85
1982-83	51·18
1983-84	55·25
1984-85	57·59
1985-86	78·67
1986-87	169·31
1987-88	216·66
[1]1988-89	334·00
Total	1,060·55

[1] Provisional.
Figures are gross, before deduction of selling expenses.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects the United Kingdom to meet the Montreal protocol target of a 50 per cent. reduction in the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Montreal protocol requires consumption of chlorofluorocarbons to be cut to 50 per cent. of 1986 levels by 1999. We expect this to be achieved within the United Kingdom by the end of this year, 10 years ahead of the protocol timetable.

Water Pollution

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will ban the discharge of raw sewage into the Bristol channel; when he expects these waters will meet EC bathing water standards; and if he will seek a clean water policy for this waterway on the part of both English and Welsh water authorities.

Mr. Howard: All the English and Welsh water authorities discharging into the Bristol channel have investment programmes to improve the quality of these waters, taking account of the best available technology. It is the Government's policy that all identified bathing waters should meet the standards set in the EC directive as soon as possible.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, in descending order, the domestic rate in the pound set by the London boroughs for (i) 1983-84 and (ii) 1989-90, showing for each borough the political control at each date.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

Parkinson Houses

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether an acceptable repair scheme for individual semi-detached Parkinson houses is in prospect.

Mr. Trippier: PRC Homes Ltd. licence No. 050 allows for the repair of individual semi-detached Parkinson houses, but access is needed to the adjoining property to carry out works to the party wall. It is for the individual owner of the property to decide whether this is acceptable.

Homelessness

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make any changes to his review of the legislation on homelessness as a result of the report published on 8 May by the London Boroughs Association.

Mr. Trippier: The review of homelessness legislation is not yet complete: the recommendations in the London Boroughs Association's report will be taken into consideration in drawing up our conclusions.

Water Authority Employees (Discussions)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been given to (a) senior management and (b) other employees of water authorities about the application of the terms of the Financial Services Act to their right to discuss matters relating to the industry.

Mr. Howard: Detailed guidelines on the implications of the Financial Services Act 1986 have been given to water authority chairmen. Guidance to their employees is a matter for them.

Mercury (River Yare)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide in the Official Report the most recent sampling data for medium, mean and maximum values of mercury in fish and eels downstream of the Whitlingham sewage treatment works in the River Yare, Norfolk.

Mr. Howard: The most recent analyses of mercury in fish flesh carried out by Anglian water authority were in 1985 and 1986. The results were:

	December 1985	December 1986
Sample Fish	Eels	Roach and Pike
Number of Samples	28	17
Mean	0·48	0·43
Maximum (mg/Kg wet flesh)	1·21	2·35

The amount of mercury entering the river has been reduced considerably in recent years, and the concentrations in the water column of the river are now regularly below the limit of detection.

The improvement can be illustrated by the decline in the concentration of mercury in sediment samples:

Year	Mean (mg/Kg)
1986	6·5
1987	3·2
1988	0·5

A further survey of eels and fish is planned for later this year.

Bathing Waters

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, contrary to the requirements of the EEC bathing water directive 76/160, no bathing waters in the United Kingdom are designated or monitored for directive compliance.

Mr. Howard: None of the United Kingdom's inland waters meet the criteria for identification set out in article 1(2)(a) of directive 76/464/EEC.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many United Kingdom bathing waters passed the EEC standards for enteroviruses and salmonella in 1988;

(2) how many bathing waters in the United Kingdom were monitored for salmonella in 1988; and how many failed the EEC standard for this parameter.

Mr. Howard: This information is contained in the reports on the 1988 survey of bathing water quality, which I placed in the Library. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given on 21 February 1989, column 572, and 14 April 1989, column 682.

Integrated Development Operation Programme

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much allocated aid South Yorkshire and Humberside will lose if funds currently available under the integrated development operation programme of the European Community are shared with other parts of Yorkshire and the north midlands.

Mr. Chope: Under new Community regulations the Government are shortly to submit to the European Commission the eastern England regional conversion plan and a decision on this plan is expected from the Commission in October 1989. In the plan, the United Kingdom will be seeking adequate provision for all existing and proposed programmes. I cannot anticipate what the outcome will be.

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of the eastern England plan by the European Commission; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which it will delay the projects already earmarked under the integrated development operation programme scheme and affect their financing.

Mr. Chope: The eastern England regional conversion plan is being finalised in consultation with the plan partners for submission to the Commission. This plan will propose provision for funding the Yorkshire and Humberside steel area IDO as well as all other existing and proposed programmes and other measures which are eligible for ERDF support.

I cannot anticipate what the Commission's decision on support will be.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research the Government are sponsoring into the effects of pesticide residues on British wildlife.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of Government grant-aided bodies are undertaking or have commissioned research projects on the effect of pesticide residues on British wildlife. For example, a joint Nature Conservancy Council (NCC)/Vincent Wildlife Trust project on the effects of pesticide residues in otters is being undertaken by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology (ITE); the sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC) is conducting similar research on the effects on seals, and the NCC has commissioned research from NERC on the effects of pollution on birds.

I am also advised that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is currently sponsoring a number of projects including:

- Methods of assessing the effects of pesticides on wildlife.
- Indirect effects of pesticides on wildlife.
- The economic and ecological effect of pest, disease and weed control in intensively produced cereals.
- The ecological and economic effects of pest, disease, weed control and fertiliser inputs in crop rotations.
- Deposition, activity and fate of agrochemicals applied to crops.
- Invertebrate fauna of cereal fields.
- Small mammal studies.
- Cereal pest—predator interactions.
- Spatial and temporal consequences of the effects of insecticides on the non-target invertebrate fauna of winter wheat.

In addition, pesticides residues in wildlife are monitored by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food working party on pesticide residues and all reported incidents suspected of involving pesticide poisoning in England and Wales are investigated under the wildlife incident scheme.

Community Charge

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of the delivery of the Government's information leaflet on the community charge; how many such leaflets were prepared for delivery; and what was the unit cost of production and delivery.

Mr. Gummer: The total cost of production and distribution of the information leaflet on the community charge delivered to households in England is some £950,000, including the cost of display in post offices. A total of 23 million leaflets were produced at a unit cost for production and delivery of 4·1p.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of storing the 21 million leaflets entitled "The Community Charge (The So-called Poll Tax): How It Will Work For You."

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 May 1989]: The Central Office of Information is currently in negotiation with the Post Office, on behalf of my Department, in relation to any additional costs which may have been incurred as a result of the temporary suspension of the household distribution of the community charge leaflet.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation (Housing)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Main Group, Warrington housing association, Manchester and District housing association and the Grosvenor housing association are being paid to manage the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation rented housing.

Mr. Trippier: The agency fee was negotiated between the development corporation and the housing associations. The size of the fee is commercially confidential information.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the rent increase imposed on Warrington and Runcorn development corporation tenants will go towards paying the management costs of the housing associations involved in managing the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation rented housing.

Mr. Trippier: The rents of tenants of all the English new town development corporations have recently increased. The percentage change of the average rent has been similar in each town. There is no connection between this general increase and the particular decision of the Warrington and Runcorn corporation to change its arrangements for managing its stock.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date Warrington and Runcorn development corporation tenants will be balloted about who their future landlords will be; and if Warrington and Runcorn development corporation will be one of the names on the ballot paper.

Mr. Trippier: I can assure tenants that they will be given the opportunity to choose their new landlord at the earliest appropriate time. The provisions in the Local Government and Housing Bill for the transfer of ownership of new town housing enable the local district council and approved landlords to be the new landlords. The development corporation, or its successor the Commission for the New Towns, will not be a choice available to tenants.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that between now and when the ballot is held the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation tenants will not be approached by the consortium of housing associations operating in Warrington under the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Kent Structure Plan

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish his proposed modifications to the second review of the structure plan for Kent.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend published his proposals today. Copies of his proposals and of the report of the panel which conducted an examination in public into selected matters arising from the review have been placed in the Library.

The review sets out the county council's policies for development in Kent up to the year 2001. My right hon. Friend supports its main objective, which is to stimulate economic developments in Kent without harming the environment; he also supports its proposals for the growth of Ashford and for increased development of Dartford. As recommended by the panel, he proposes to increase the housing provision for the county up to the year 2001 to more than 89,000 houses, including 57,000 in the 1990s.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he took the proposed high speed rail link from the Channel tunnel to London into his consideration of the second review of the structure plan for Kent.

Mr. Chope: No. As the review was submitted before British Rail put forward its proposals for a high-speed rail link from the Channel tunnel to London, the choice of route was not a matter for this review. It is for the county council to consider the strategic implications of any decision relating to the link and whether any further alterations to the structure plan to take account of this should be put forward in the future.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the capital structure of water plcs to be created at flotation.

Mr. Howard: Subject to the approval by Parliament of the Water Bill, the Government will put in place new capital structures appropriate for the nominated holding companies in the private sector. This will be done in the run up to flotation and implemented by extinguishing all the national loans fund debt and taking new securities which may consist of both equity and new debt. The assets of the NLF will be reduced accordingly, but the Government will have new assets in the form of securities in the holding companies for England and Wales. The capital structure of each of the holding companies will be determined in the light of the circumstances of that company. It is too soon to say what the market value of the Government's securities in each holding company will be at the time of flotation. The total value of these securities implied by the share price of the equity sold, will depend on market conditions at the time. It may or may not cover the book value of funds now invested in each business. The Government will, however, choose a capital structure calculated to ensure a proper return to the Exchequer and hence the taxpayer and that the industry is in a position fully to meet its obligations. In the meantime the Government will continue to meet the industry's requirements for capital from the national loans fund.

Rose Theatre

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 21 February to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), Official Report, column 572, if he will take steps to ensure that the Rose theatre is available for the public to see as an interpretable monument.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 May 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the House on Monday 16 May.

Leaflets

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what method his Department uses to destroy redundant leaflets; and at what cost.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Surplus copies of leaflets are sold to the paper industry for recycling.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Consultants

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to his Department of employing (a) computer consultants and (b) management consultants for each financial year from 1983 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimated total cost of employing computer and management consultants on social security matters since 1984-85 is as follows:

Year	Computer £ million	Management £ million
1984-85	6·589	0·959
1985-86	10·223	1·722
1986-87	11·971	0·976
1987-88	21·930	1·082
1988-89	42·099	1·203

Expenditure up to and including the 1988-89 financial year has been from a joint health and social security budget. Where appropriate the cost of projects has been apportioned when the work involved both social security and health aspects.

Expenditure by the DHSS on computer and management consultancy in 1983-84 amounted to £3·623 million, but it is not possible to apportion this between the two Departments with any accuracy, or to differentiate between computer and management consultancy.

Funeral Payments

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many funeral payments were made in 1988-89 and at what cost; how much of this amount has been repaid; and how much is regarded as recoverable.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of payments	Cost £	Amount recovered £
1988-89	[1]40,248	[1]19,744,925	[1]659,930

[1]Provisional figures.

Separate data are not held on the extent to which payments made are regarded as recoverable.

Income Support and Housing Benefit

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged 70 to 75 years receive (a) income support and (b) housing benefit; and if he will state these figures as a proportion of the total number of women aged 70 to 75 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd The latest estimate is that there are some 249,000 women aged 70 to 74 (inclusive) dependent on income support. This represents 20 per cent. of all women in this age group.

I regret that similar information is not available for housing benefit.

Tax Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply given to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) of 8 May, Official Report, column 309, he will give an estimate of the distribution of households facing marginal tax/benefit withdrawal rates of more than 40 per cent. in total and in each band stated by standard region.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates of those working heads of tax units facing combined marginal withdrawal rates of over 40 per cent. are available only at national level.

Transitional Payments

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is given to adjudication officers by his Department as to eligibility for transitional payments; and what steps have been taken to ensure that adjudication officers do not treat as an increase in income the restoration of full retirement pension to pensioners who were in receipt of reduced rate pensions during their attendance at hospital.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Part 35 of the "Adjudication Officers Guide," a copy of which is in the Library, gives extensive guidance on the legislation which applies to income support transitional protection. Adjudication officers who follow the guidance will have no difficulty in handling these cases correctly.

Transitional Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are (a) on the establishment and (b) in post, together with relevant gradings, at the transitional housing benefit unit, Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The staff in post on 15 May were as follows:

	Number
Grade 6	1
Grade 7	1
SEO	1
HEO	12
EO	59
AO	169
AA	155
Personal secretary	1
Typist	4
Messenger	4
Total	407

A detailed complement for the transitional protection unit—TPU—has not been laid down, but a budget of 160 man-years has been agreed for 1989-90 and reductions in staff during the year will ensure that the allocation is not exceeded.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been (a) received, (b) processed and (c) outstanding for each month of transitional housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table showing the cumulative position on the last working day of each month:

Month	Applications received	Applications processed	Applications outstanding
July 1988	135,433	8,434	126,999
August 1988	267,009	69,498	197,511
September 1988	316,473	117,638	198,835
October 1988	359,866	235,753	124,113
November 1988	390,942	296,931	94,011
December 1988	400,584	333,254	67,330
January 1989	415,065	372,844	42,221
February 1989	436,681	397,669	39,012
March 1989	463,751	416,194	47,557
April 1989	472,243	433,002	39,241

NOTE: The majority of cases outstanding are where the TPU is awaiting the return of inquiry forms about housing benefit details from local authorities.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases transitional housing benefit was sent to the wrong local authority by the transitional housing benefit payments unit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Family Income Supplement

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many decisions were made on new claims for family income supplement and family credit; and how many awards resulted in each month since April 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The available information for all claims is as follows:

DEFENCE

UDR and TA (Vetting)

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Ulster Constabulary will be revising vetting arrangements for recruits to the Ulster Defence Regiment and the Territorial Army in Northern Ireland to prevent infiltration by paramilitary members.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We seek to exclude members of paramilitary and extremist organisations from any form of service in the armed forces. The procedures for achieving this are well established and are kept under constant review.

Short Brothers

23. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to ensure that defence-related confidential information acquired in Short Bros., Belfast, is not transferred to foreign powers.

24. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to ensure that confidential information relating to defence is not transferred from Short Brothers, Belfast, to Armscor, South Africa.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is the responsibility of firms which receive classified defence contracts to meet the security requirements specified by the Ministry of Defence and to facilitate inspection of their security arrangements. Given his general responsibilities for security, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland also maintains close contacts with the firm.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the amount spent by the Ministry of Defence in each year since the start of the nuclear submarine programme on repairs as a result of fire aboard nuclear submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: While there have been occasional fires aboard nuclear-powered submarines, it is not possible to identify separately all the repair costs attributable to this cause. However, in the vast majority of cases the fires were so minor that the sums involved would have been minimal in relation to the overall expenditure on submarine repairs or refits.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the technical details on which his Department bases its evaluation of the consequences of a nuclear submarine accident in or near dock with regard to 550 m limits and radiation spread.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The predictions of consequences of accidents involving Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines are carried out by experts from both within and outside this Department, and are assessed by independent consultants. The technical information upon which the predictions are based cannot be released, since it would enable conclusions to be drawn about classified aspects of the design of submarine nuclear reactors.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report (a) all fires aboard nuclear submarines whilst in dock since the start of the nuclear submarine programme, (b) how these fires started, (c) the location of the fires within the submarine, (d) the time of day the fires started and how long they burned, (e) whether civilian police, fire services and ambulance services were informed, (f) under what conditions civil emergency personnel were allowed on board, (g) if there were any military or civilian casualties, (h) what inquiries were instigated into the cause and consequences of any fires, what subsequent recommendations were made, and which have been put into practice and (i) the guidelines governing the involvement of civilian fire personnel in fighting fires aboard nuclear submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The majority of the detailed information requested is not readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort and cost. I shall write to the hon. Member about the guidelines for the involvement of civil fire personnel in fighting fires aboard nuclear submarines.

Zirconium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been placed with United Kingdom universities for the research on zirconium for fuel cladding for submarine nuclear fuel by the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston in the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Arms Reduction

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the definition of (a) tanks and (b) artillery and (c) armoured personnel carriers adopted by the Western Alliance at the conventional force reduction talks in Vienna.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the document "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts" published by NATO in November 1988, a copy of which is in the Library. The NATO proposals tabled at the negotiation of conventional forces in Europe (CFE) deal with main battle tanks and artillery which fall within those categories in that document, and with armoured troop carriers. The latter include armoured personnel carriers and armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

NATO

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any recent communication from the British American Security Information Council over its report on the comprehensive concept of defence and disarmament for NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As far as I can ascertain, the Ministry of Defence has received no recent communication from the British American Security Information Council.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the proceedings of the Defence Export Services Organisation's annual symposia with industry can be made available to (a) hon. Members and (b) the public.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The proceedings of the DESO symposium are commercial in confidence and circulated only to those companies taking part.

Nuclear Bomber (Emergency Landing)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the emergency landing of a United States Air Force F111 nuclear bomber at Upper Heyford and the fireball caused by the jettisoning of fuel; and what implications this has for the safety of the local population.

Mr. Neubert: An F111E aircraft developed an engine problem shortly after take-off on a routine training mission from RAF Upper Heyford just after 7 pm on May. The pilot immediately decided to return to base. Shortly before landing he jettisoned excess fuel to reduce the weight of the aircraft and ensure a safe landing. the jettisoned fuel was ignited by the exhaust plume of the aircraft's engine, causing a brief flame. The pilot performed the routine operational procedures designed to cope with a problem of this sort exactly as he is trained to do and the aircraft landed without further incident. At no time was there any danger to local residents. The incident is being investigated by the USAF authorities at the base to determine the cause of the problem.

Victoria Barracks, Windsor

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions have been reached with regard to the rebuilding of Victoria barracks since the joint visit of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence for the Armed Forces and the hon. Member for Windsor and Maidenhead, on 1 September 1988; if he will give an indication of the dates when the rebuilding will commence and finish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Approval to proceed with the rebuilding of Victoria barracks on the site of the old barracks at Windsor has now been given. Formal tenders will be invited shortly and it is hoped to start work on site towards the latter part of 1989. Work is expected to take about three years.

Premature Voluntary Release

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Army premature voluntary release figures for the fourth quarter of each year from 1983 to 1988 and the first quarter of each year from 1983 to 1989; and if he will provide the information in the form as in his reply of 15 December 1988, Official Report, columns 685-86.

Mr. Neubert: The information that my hon. Friend has requested is set out in the table:

Army PVR figures for 1st and 4th quarters 1983-1st quarter 1989

ENERGY

Coal Reclamation Scheme (Garw Valley)

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated volume and value of coal to be extracted from the proposed reclamation scheme in the upper Garw valley.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Welsh Development Agency and Mid Glamorgan county council are jointly responsible for the proposed reclamation scheme in the upper Garw valley. However, I understand that the British Coal Corporation retained mineral rights to the coal and that the landscaping proposals involve about 3 million cu m of colliery tips containing about 0·5 million tonnes of recoverable coal. The value of the coal is a matter for commercial negotiation and will reflect future market conditions.

TRANSPORT

Air Transport (Belfast-Dublin)

25. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of passenger air transport between Belfast and Dublin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is a small amount of charter traffic between Belfast and Dublin. In addition, the Irish airline Iona National Airways operated scheduled services on the route during the period May-September 1988. A total of 1,007 passengers were carried in 1988. Our liberal air services arrangements with the Irish authorities apply to this route, but there are currently no scheduled services.

Airports

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire of 2 March, Official Report, column 291, what further steps he proposes to take to encourage local authorities to involve the private sector in the ownership, development, management and running of airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of authorities are now involving the private sector. Before considering further steps, the Government need to assess how far the objectives of their policy are being achieved.

A1 (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make an announcement about further improvements to the A1 in north Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Schemes to improve the A1 for the majority of the length in north Yorkshire are already included in the national trunk road programme. The following announcements about these are expected before the end of the summer:

(i) the joint decision by the Secretaries of State for Transport and the Environment on whether to make the published orders for the Wetherby to Dishforth section; and

(ii) the publication of draft orders for a new junction at Gatenby lane.

The remaining lengths were considered as part of the review of the trunk road programme. My right hon. Friend announced the results of that review earlier today.

Motor Accidents (Deaf Drivers)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor vehicle accidents resulting in (a) death, (b) injury and (c) other have taken place each year since 1980 where deaf drivers have been involved and deafness has been (i) the main cause or (ii) a contributory cause.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested cannot be obtained as the STATS19 road accident report form records neither cause of accident nor the incidence of deaf drivers involved in road accidents.

There is no reason to believe that a deaf person is more at risk of causing, or being involved in, a crash than any other driver.

Hazardous Materials (Transport)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the sealing off of part of the Corley service station area on the M6 motorway on Thursday 23 March in connection with a lorry carrying hazardous materials, and what information he has as to what consideration had been given to escort provision for this load.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A lorry carrying explosives broke down on the M6 and was towed to the nearest service area for replacement of an alternator before continuing its journey. It was isolated from other vehicles and a fire engine was called to stand by as a precautionary measure.

For the type and quantity of material involved an escort was not required. Pre-arranged routes have to be agreed with the police and followed where a vehicle carries large quantities of certain types of explosive material.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a decision and an announcement on the Leeds-Bradford airport's application for an extension of operating hours.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A joint decision by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment will be made as soon as possible.

Drivers (Eye Tests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of people required to take regular eyesight tests in order to retain their driving licences; and what proportion fail on average every year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no information about the number of people required to take regular eyesight tests. In 1988-89 the total number of people required to take a prescribed eyesight test to determine their fitness to drive was 2,981.

Eyesight problems account for around 8 per cent. of the medical declarations on applications and notifications (during the currency of the licence), and around 8 per cent. of referrals and revocations relate to eyesight. In 1987-88 there were 10,442 revocations/refusals in all and in 1988-89 there were 10,891 revocations/refusals in all, resulting in over 800 revocations/refusals on eysight grounds in each year.

Road Improvements (North-East)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will summarise the progress made by his Department in (a) improving the A1 link to the north-east and (b) other major road improvements in the north-east.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The trunk road and motorway plans announced earlier today in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" provide for the conversion to motorway of the Redhouse to Hook Moor section of the A1 in Yorkshire, and for a comprehensive review of the route, including investigation of the possibility of full motorway status from London to Tyneside.

The A1 between Newcastle and Morpeth and the A69 between Newcastle and Hexham are now dual carriageway throughout. The construction of the £88 million Newcastle western bypass is well advanced. Improvement schemes are in various stages of preparation for the A1 north of Morpeth, the A69 west of Hexham, the A66 west of Bowes and the A19 at Peterlee.

Coal Imports

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library details of the volume and value of (a) anthracite coal, (b) bituminous coal and (c) other coal, imported through the port of Cardiff for each month since January 1986, separately distinguishing the countries of origin.

Mr. Portillo: The data readily available are as follows:

Imports of coal through the port of Cardiff

	Tonnes 000s	Value £ million
1986
January to March	47·0	2·00
April to June	57·0	2·37
July to September	78·0	3·29
October to December	75·0	3·36
1987
January to June	96·0	3·85
July to December	125·6	4·81
1988
January to June	145·6	5·10
July to December	148·2	7·72
1989
January to March	99·0	3·85

For more detailed information the hon. Member should contact a marketing agent of Customs and Excise data. A list of these agents is given in Business Monitor MM20 "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" or in "The Integrated Tariff of the United Kingdom", copies of which are in the Library.

Special Constables

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form a list of those harbours, docks and piers which employ persons sworn as special constables in accordance with the provisions of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 together with the name of the undertakers who are the employers in each case and the number of specials employed in each location.

Mr. Portillo: The harbour undertakings in Great Britain where there are special constables sworn in under the provisions of the 1847 Act, incorporated into local legislation, are:

Harbour undertaking	Number employed
Port of Bristol Authority	45
Dover Harbour Board	86
A and P Appledore (Falmouth) Limited	9
Felixstowe Dock and Railway Company	34
Manchester Ship Canal Company	29
Milford Dock Company	5
Sealink Harbours Limited, Parkeston Quay[1]	27
Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority	21

[1] Employed by Protective Security Systems Limited on exclusive contract with Sealink.

There are also two in Northern Ireland:

Harbour undertaking	Number employed
Belfast Harbour Commissioners	37
Larne Harbour Limited	16

Two undertakings employ police under local legislation which is fuller than the 1847 Act provisions:

Harbour undertaking	Number employed
Port of London Authority	47
Mersey Docks and Harbour Company	102

Air Traffic Distribution Rules

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood on 8 May, Official Report, column 343, when, and in what form, he intends to publish the new air traffic distribution rules for Scotland, and under what statutory authority.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new rules ("Traffic Distribution Rules 1989 for Prestwick and Glasgow" and "Traffic Distribution Rules 1989 for Prestwick and Edinburgh") were made on 9 May under section 31 of the Airports Act 1986. Copies were sent to interested parties, and have been placed in the Library.

Lowland Airport Policy (Scotland)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those organisations he consulted representing (a) Scottish industry and commerce and (b) the airline and travel industries who were (i) for and (ii) against a review of Scottish lowland airport policy as requested by BAA plc.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend initiated no such consultations, but he received a variety of representations, both for and against a review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Road Schemes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the test discount rate for road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In reply to a question on 5 April from the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a new required rate of return for nationalised industries of 8 per cent. As a result, British Rail intends to adopt a test discount rate of 8 per cent. for investment projects. In order to ensure that road and rail projects continue to be appraised on a comparable basis, the test discount rate for road projects will be increased from 7 to 8 per cent.

Road and Rail Statistics

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give figures for investment in British Rail for 1978-79 and 1989-90; investment in national roads in 1978-79 and 1989-90 and the figures for road deaths in 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Channon: The information is:

	1978-79 outturn £ million	1989-90 plans £ million
Cash
Investment by British Rail in the railway	[1]208	740
Capital expenditure on national roads in England	327	1,190
Real terms (1987-88 prices)
Investment by British Rail in the railway	[1]425	654
Capital expenditure on national roads in England	668	1,052

[1] Calendar year 1978.

Road deaths in Great Britain totalled 6,831 in 1978. The provisional figure for 1988 is 5,041.

Cash Limits

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits on his votes.

Mr. Channon: Subject to parliamentary approval of a revised Estimate, the cash limit on class VIII, vote 2 is to be reduced by £800,000 from £235,013,000 to £234,213,000 to reflect the transfer to the Ministry of Defence of responsibility for the costs of royal flights in civil aircraft.

NORTHERN IRELAND

South Africa (Arms Embargo)

8. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps is he taking to prevent Northern Ireland firms contributing inadvertently to the circumvention of the arms embargo on South Africa.

Mr. Tom King: Security arrangements are a primary responsibility of every company in Northern Ireland. Since the theft in October last year from a Short's factory there has been a review of security at all Short's establishments and a number of additional measures have been, or are being, implemented. I maintain a close interest in such matters.

NHS Review

17. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations expressing support for the proposals contained in "Working For Patients" he has received from individuals or organisations in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I have had representations both orally and in writing. Many have supported aspects of the proposals. I welcome the constructive nature of most of the representations.

Fair Employment

19. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he is giving to a strengthening of the fair employment laws.

Mr. Viggers: The Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Bill, which was introduced in this House in December last year, has now completed its Committee stage and will be brought before the House for further consideration at any early date. The Bill will strengthen significantly the existing law in Northern Ireland relating to fair employment.

Women (Pressure Groups)

20. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent meetings he has held with women's groups.

Mr. Viggers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong).

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by his Department on advertisements on commercial television in each of the last five years, listed by each television company.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on television advertisements in the form requested is commercially confidential.

HEALTH

Pain

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision exists for research into the alleviation of pain for cancer sufferers as distinct from the research into the causes and cure.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. The council supports a considerable amount of basic research into pain, some of which is of relevance to cancer sufferers. In 1987-88, the last financial year for which figures are available, the council's expenditure for research into pain was £398,000. The council is also conducting clinical cancer trials to evaluate the efficacy of new treatments not only in curing disease but in relieving symptoms, including pain.

In addition, university departments and medical schools support a range of basic research from public funds, some of which may be relevant to the relief of pain of sufferers from cancer and other diseases.

Agency Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for 1987-88, for each district health authority, regional health authority, and special health authority the total expenditure on agency staff, expressed at current prices, 1986-87 prices, and as a percentage of each health authority's budget.

Mr. Mellor: Information directly derived and revalued to 1986-87 prices from the 1987-88 annual accounts of district and regional health authorities in England and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals has been placed in the Library.

Computer and Management Consultants

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to his Department of employing (a) computer consultants and (b) management consultants, for each financial year from 1983 to date.

Mr. Mellor: Expenditure by the Department of Health and Social Security on computer and management consultancy in 1983-84 was £3·623 million. We cannot apportion this accurately between the two Departments or between computer and management consultancy.

The estimated expenditure on health-related computer and management consultancy in 1984-85 was £0·613 million. It is not possible to separately identify the cost of computer consultancy.

The estimated expenditure from 1985-86 onwards on fees and expenses for computer and management consultants on health matters is as follows:

	Computer consultants £ million	Management consultants £ million
1985-86	0·880	0·479
1986-87	2·067	2·103
1987-88	1·950	1·244
1988·89	1·792	1·584

The figures are approximate since expenditure up to and including the 1988-89 year was from a joint health and social security budget. In some cases expenditure has been apportioned where consultants have been engaged on both health and social security matters. The figures for management consultancy include social services consultancy and some computer consultancy where these cannot be identified separately.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the percentage increases in pay of administrative and clerical staff in the National Health Service in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: Percentage settlements for administrative and clerical staff throughout Great Britain since 1984 are shown in the table. Pay increases have been effective from 1 April in each year.

Year	Percentage
1984	4·5
1985	4·7
1986	6·0
1987	5·0
1988	5·5

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the contribution made to community care by the voluntary sector.

Mr. Mellor: The voluntary sector makes a very valuable contribution to the provision of health and personal social services, including community care. The Department encourages the complementary role of volunteers and voluntary organisations and has given practical assistance through central funding, including the "Helping the Community to Care" and "Opportunities for Volunteering" initiatives.

Treatment Costs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the variations in cost of treatment between different health districts.

Mr. Freeman: There are often good reasons for variations in the cost of treatment between different health districts. It is for district and regional management to consider whether costs are reasonable and how performance could be improved.

The Department publishes Health Service indicators and other costing information each year to assist local management in that task, It is hoped to publish performance indicators for 1988-89 at the end of this year or early next year. The proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" are designed to increase efficiency and should therefore have an additional impact on unjustifiable cost variations.

Nurses

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the number of nurses employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: Provisional figures for September 1988 show the total number of nursing and midwifery staff (including agency) in the NHS in England as 404,000 whole-time equivalents, an increase of 45,000 (12·6 per cent.) since September 1979. The numbers of qualified nurses and midwives continue to increase and in 1988 the proportion was 60 per cent. of the total number of nursing and midwifery staff compared with 54 per cent. in 1979.

NHS Reform

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from general practitioners in favour of his proposals to reform the Health Service; and how many he has received against.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) on 5 May, at column 265.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters he has received from the general public about his National Health Service reform proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have received in excess of 4,000 letters from members of the public about the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the pay will be for a general practitioner with 2,000 patients who achieves all the targets contained in the new general practitioner contract.

Mr. Mellor: The levels of fees and allowances payable from April 1990 under the new GPs contract will be determined in the light of the recommendations to be made by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration in its next report. We have agreed with the general medical services committee's negotiators to submit joint evidence to the review body later this year.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any decision has yet been taken on the centralisation of the administration of the Mental Health Act Commission.

Mr. Mellor: No. We shall be giving further consideration to this in the light of the recommendations made in the report of the commission on its review of its functions, organisations, staffing and finance, which is expected shortly.

Pharmacists

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 19 April, what proportion of the amounts due to pharmacists from 1978 to 1988 was in respect of profits; and how much was in respect of reimbursement of costs.

Mr. Mellor: The total amounts due, and the amounts due for costs and profit for England and Wales as shown in the balance sheets prepared with representatives of the profession, are:

£ million

	Total amounts due	Amounts due for costs	Amounts due for profit
1978	142·0	121·8	20·2
1979	170·9	148·1	22·8
1980	215·2	177·9	37·3
1981	238·9	189·1	49·8
1982	280·2	225·9	54·1
1983	324·8	269·3	55·5
1984	350·3	291·2	59·1
1985[1]	96·6	78·3	18·3
1985-86	383·7	313·5	70·2
1986-87	415·0	342·3	72·7
1987-88	485·8	407·2	78·6

[1] 1 January 1985 to 31 March 1985.

Hospitals (Self-Government)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in the north-west have expressed interest in opting out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: RHAs are currently considering expressions of interest in individual hospitals becoming self governing. They have been asked to send the expressions of interest to the Department, together with their comments, by 31 May.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if community health councils will be accorded the same rights in relation to proposals for the self-governing status of particular hospitals as they currently enjoy in relation to closure proposals.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation rights Central Manchester community health council will have in any decision of the Central Manchester district health authority to seek self-governing status for its hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: Community health councils will be consulted on local applications for self-governing status and my right hon. and learned Friend will consider their views when deciding on applications.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health managers whose hospitals opt for self-governing status will qualify for incentive payments under the arrangements for performance-related pay.

Mr. Mellor: This will be for individual hospital trusts to decide.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to enable the local public to determine through secret ballots whether particular hospitals should have self-governing status.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by what means he expects regional health authorities to gauge the views of local communities on proposals for particular hospitals to have self-governing status;

(2) what advice he has given to regional health authorities in processing proposals for the self-governing status of particular hospitals when such proposals are strongly opposed by many of those deemed to have an interest in the hospitals concerned.

Mr. Mellor: Regional health authorities were given general advice in National Health Service review working paper No. 1—"Self-Governing Hospitals", published on 20 February 1989. Regional health authorities will determine precisely how they publicise applications and seek the views of those with an interest.

Private Patients (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue generated from private patients at hospitals in Bolton in 1988; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to pursue his inquiry with Mr. T. Taylor, chairman of Bolton health authority.

Immunisation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been immunised with the new measles, mumps and rubella vaccine since its introduction in October 1988.

Mr. Mellor: Immunisation uptake figures for 1988-89 will not be available until later this year. However, from the launch of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine last October to the end of March, 1·4 million doses were distributed to health authorities. The number of children in the recommended priority groups (aged 15 months and four to five years) who became eligible for the vaccine in that period was 600,000.

Harts Hospital (Sale)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the proceeds of the sale of Harts hospital; and how much has been directly returned to Waltham Forest health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The net proceeds of the sale of Harts hospital were £29·3 million. Capital allocations are a matter for the regional health authority concerned.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has conducted monitoring exercises in compliance with the code of the Commission of Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunity Commission, respectively, separate from the Department of Social Security; whether his Department plans to do so; whether his Department plans to maintain records of the ethnic origins of its staff and officers separate from the Department of Social Security; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The action taken by the then Department of Health and Social Security in support of its equal opportunities policy will continue in the Department of Health and will follow the guidance in the codes of practice of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunity Commission. This action includes the monitoring of personnel policies and procedures.

Work is in hand to ensure that the staff records, including ethnic origin data, of the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security can be separately identified. I shall write to the hon. and learned Member when this is completed.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of officers in each of grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have the information in the form requested because records are held on combined basis with the Department of Social Security. I refer the hon. and learned Member to the information in the reply to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 22 March 1989 at column 679.

Human Insulin

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the volume and value of human insulin imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1983; what proportion this represents of the total human insulin used in the United Kingdom each year since 1983; and whether any checks are made as to whether this human insulin was purchased or donated voluntarily.

Mr. Mellor: All "human insulin" is manufactured, either by modification of porcine insulin or using biotechnology to produce in the laboratory a product which has the same chemical characteristics as insulin occurring naturally in humans. For this reason it is commonly referred to as "human insulin", though it is not, as might be assumed, derived from human sources. All such human insulin sold in the United Kingdom is now imported, although there was some manufacture up to 1987. Information on amounts sold was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 21 December 1988, at column 325.

Weil's Disease

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the number of deaths, by occupational category, and by region, from Weil's disease in each of the past 20 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not wholly available: details of the deceased's occupation were not coded in some of the past 20 years.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects undertaken by the Health Education Authority on AIDS since its inception; what the budget for each project was; whether each project was approved by his Department; and what projects suggested by the authority have not received departmental approval.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in exactly the form requested because the HEA's work on AIDS is not funded on a project by project basis. The procedure followed is that the HEA draws up an operational programme which is discussed with Ministers in the authority's annual accountability review. Once the operational programme and budget for AIDS have been agreed the Health Education Authority discusses with the Department (and for United Kingdomwide mass media work, with the other Health Departments also) detailed proposals for implementing the operational programme. These arrangements are intended to ensure that material which is distributed is consistent with overall Government policy on HIV prevention. The work on HIV/AIDS carried out the the HEA is set out in "AIDS Programme Paper 4: The First Annual Report: October 1987 to September 1988", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the advice received from the Health Education Authority regarding policy towards AIDS; and what has been his response to the advice received.

Mr. Mellor: One of the functions of the Health Education Authority is to give advice to Government on health education issues, including those relating the HIV/AIDS. This can be given formally or informally, privately or publicly and at various levels and the Government take account of this in reaching decisions on aspects of policy on HIV infection and AIDS.

Kreutzfeldt-Jacob Dementia

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to announce his decision as to whether to introduce reporting procedures in respect of Kreutzfeldt-Jacob dementia.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to do so. Following the recommendation of the Southwood committee on bovine spongiform encephalopathy consideration is being given, however, to the most effective way of ensuring cases of this disease are monitored.

Drugs (Quality)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department monitors the percentage of generic pharmaceutical supplies to hospitals which are rejected on the grounds of failing to meet quality standards.

Mr. Mellor: The Department does not carry out such monitoring centrally. It is for individual health authorities, as purchasers of medicines, to satisfy themselves as to the quality of those pharmaceuticals.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that health authorities are handling and disposing of clinical waste safely.

Mr. Freeman: I have recently called for all health authorities to carry out a special review of their arrangements for handling and disposing of clinical waste. Their reports confirmed that the vast majority of health authorities conform to the guidance set out in the Health and Safety Commission document, "The Safe Disposal of Clinical Waste."

In the few exceptional cases where the guidance has not been fully implemented, the main principles of segregation in colour coded bags and incineration are followed. Where contractors are used, the contract is being closely monitored. The Department is taking action to ensure that the guidance is complied with in all respects.

Shropshire league of friends

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in view of the continuing widespread concern over health care in Shopshire, he will now see a delegation of the Shropshire league of friends following its correspondence with him on 17 March; and what response he has made to its claim that it is statutorily entitled to such consideration.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 17 May 1989]: I have told the Shropshire hospitals league of friends that I see little to be gained by discussion of the decisions taken last year, which are now settled and behind us. I have left open the possibility of receiving a delegation from the league of friends and other interested groups if any further proposals concerning health care in Shropshire came to me for decision. Decisions about the financing of health care in Shropshire are of course for the West Midlands regional health authority and day-to-day management decisions are the responsibility of the Shropshire district health authority.

I am aware of no claim by the leagues of friends that they are statutorily entitled to send a delegation to see me.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Brain Offal

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on steps being taken by his Department to ban brain offal from the food chain.

Mr. Ryder: Following publication of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy, I announced that I intend, as a precautionary measure, to introduce legislation prohibiting the sale of baby foods contaning brains or other specified offal. I hope to circulate draft regulations for public consultation shortly.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of the £155 million to be provided to United Kingdom farmers in consequence of the recent common agricultural policy price agreement will be provided by the EEC, Her Majesty's Government and the consumer respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: Approximately one half is expected to be financed by the Exchequer either directly, or indirectly from the European Community, with the remainder being borne by consumers. The total impact on the retail prices index (all items) is estimated to be very small, at most one twentieth of 1 per cent.

Product Labelling

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has had any discussions with food manufacturers regarding the labelling of products with full ingredients and additives; and what is the Government's policy on the use of additives in food.

Mr. Ryder: I and my colleagues frequently meet food manufacturing and other interests to discuss a wide range of topics, including food labelling. Government policy on food additives is to ensure that additives are approved only after rigorous examination for need and safety in use by independent committees. Ministers are advised on this by the Food Advisory Committee and the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment.

Milk

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on green top milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have nothing to add to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 23 February, at columns 712-13.

Salmonella

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 10 May, Official Report, column 459, whether he will make it his policy to ban the import of consignments of eggs which are found to be contaminated with salmonella.

Mr. Donald Thompson: For technical and legal reasons it is not feasible to detain consignments of imported eggs pending testing for salmonella, which takes a number of days. However, where any sample is found to be contaminated with invasive salmonella, the Commission is informed and follow-up action taken with the member state concerned, with a view to eradication of the problem at source.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the latest 12 months for which figures are available consignments of imported eggs have been (a) checked for salmonella infection and (b) found to be infected with salmonella.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1989, c. 459]: Two of the samples taken from consignments of eggs in the last month have now been shown to be positive for salmonella.

In one of these cases, salmonella enteritidis PT4 was identified on the shells of eggs packed in the Netherlands. I have drawn this result to the attention of the Dutch Minister, so that measures can be taken to eradicate the problem at source.

An invasive type of salmonella was not identified in the other sample.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many man-years he estimates will be spent on salmonellosis in each of the field and veterinary investigation services, and at the central veterinary laboratory, in the next year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

	Man years
Field service	28·5
Veterinary investigation service	85·0
Central veterinary laboratory	25·5

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure he has available for the number of cattle in Britain infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Up to 12 May, 4,570 cases of BSE had been confirmed in Great Britain.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many man-years have been spent by his Department on bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the last year, by grade, and by service;

(2) how many man-years he expects to be spent on bovine spongiform encephalopathy by his Department in the next year, by grade, and by service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows. Manpower forecasts are not subdivided by grade for 1989-90.

Service	1988-89 [1] Band A	Band B	Band C	Band D	Total	1989-90 Total

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy are being identified, on average, in each week by antemortem inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On average, 140 to 150 suspected cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy are being identified each week by antemortem inspection.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had in the European Council of Ministers on bovine spongiform encephalopathy and its transmission.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, 4 May, Official Report, columns 195-96, which animal species are involved in experiments on the transmission of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; what have been the results to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Transmission experiments are taking place in hamsters, mice, calves, sheep, goats, marmosets and pigs. So far, only mice have been affected.

Dutch Elm Disease

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the research programme into Dutch elm disease; and if there are any prospects for the elimination thereof.

Mr. Ryder: The Forestry Commission continues to commit significant resources to research on Dutch elm disease, which complements research being carried out in other countries. There is no prospect of eliminating the disease, and the commission's research programme is mainly aimed at finding ways of reducing its incidence. In addition, work is being conducted on the potential role of disease-resistant elms.

Farm Diversification Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications his Department has received under the farm diversification scheme for each six-month period since its inception; how many have been successful in each period; and what has been the cost involved.

Mr. Ryder: The information is as follows:

Period	Applications received	Applications approved	Grant commitment (£'000)
1 January 1988 to 30 June 1988	682	528	2,635
1 July 1988 to 31 December 1988	405	288	1,572
1 January 1989 to 30 April 1989	308	136	660

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown of the number of successful applications under the farm diversification scheme for each county in England and Wales.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that the information requested is only available by the divisional offices of Departments and not by counties. Approved applications for farm diversification capital grants for the period 1 January 1988 to 30 April 1989 were as follows:

Division	Number approved
Beverley	38
Carlisle	32
Newcastle	35

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown of the number of successful applicants under the farm diversification scheme for each type of project eligible under the scheme.

Mr. Ryder: The number of enterprises in approved applications for farm diversification capital grants in England and Wales for the period 1 January 1988 to 30 April 1989 were as follows:

	Number of enterprises
Manufacture of craft items	12
Food processing:

Meat and Bone Meal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of Friday 5 May, Official Report, column 279, what additional certification accompanying meat and bone meal exported from the United Kingdom is required by France, West Germany and Israel; what arangements have been agreed for use by exporters of meat and bone meal to France; what requirements have been stipulated by Israel; and what assurances have been sought by West Germany.

Mr. Donald Thompson: France and West Germany have requested confirmation of heat treatment in accordance with their requirements. This certification can be provided. Germany and Israel have asked for clearance from BSE which can be supplied. Israel has also asked for freedom from scrapie and we are entering into discussions with the Israeli authorities on a form of assurances which would be acceptable.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, of 5 May, Official Report, column 279, whether he knows of any plans by the European Commission to introduce rules applying to the production of meat and bone meal.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Commission proposals for a Council regulation laying down veterinary rules for the disposal and processing of animal waste are currently being discussed in Brussels.

State Veterinary Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many veterinary officers he has employed in the state veterinary service, by grade, in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many veterinary officers he has employed in the state veterinary investigation service, by grade, in each of the last 10 years;

(3) how many animal health officers he has employed in the state veterinary field service, by grade, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

Note.—Figures in brackets relate to the veterinary investigation service, which is part of the state veterinary service.

[1]The 1989 figures include staff of the professional unit of the veterinary medicines directorate, who prior to 3 April 1989 belonged to the state veterinary service.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional resources have been provided for the state veterinary service in order to accommodate the increased workload resulting from bovine spongiform encephalopathy and salmonella.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Seventy four additional posts have been approved to deal with salmonellosis; consideration is still being given to the additional requirements for dealing with BSE.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual budget of the state veterinary service for each of the last five years and for the financial year 1989-90, showing capital, pay and non-pay current cost votes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows, in terms of initial allocations under decentralised budgetary control:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90

Capital	[1]—	[1]—	605	1,086	775	966

[1] DBC not applied: no separate data available.

Note:

Figures ar not comparable year by year because of changes in the coverage in the service's decentralised budget.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are his estimates of the additional number of veterinary surgeons needed by his Department following the completion of the European Community internal market in 1992;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the state veterinary service is adequately staffed to deal with emergencies and, in particular, to cope with additional workloads leading up to and following completion of the European Community internal market in 1992;

(3) which areas of work in the state veterinary service are not being carried out as a result of the additional workload relating to bovine spongiform encephalopathy and salmonella.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Priorities within the state veterinary service are continually reassessed to ensure that adequate resources are devoted to all essential tasks. Staffing requirements are also kept under review and recruitment drives are held regularly. It would however be premature to attempt an estimate of the manpower required as a result of the establishment of the single market as negotiations on the arrangements are still in progress.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the average farm income in the United Kingdom for each of the last five years for which figures are available and adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Indices of net farm income per farm at current prices and in real terms by type of farm in the United Kingdom for the years 1983-84 to 1988-89 are published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom, 1988". A copy of this is available in the Library of the House.

County Council Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the sale of county council farms.

Mr. Ryder: It is the Government's policy to leave decisions on the sale of smallholdings to the smallholdings authorities concerned.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many county council farms there are in respect of each county of England and Wales.

Mr. Ryder: The 38th annual report to Parliament on smallholdings in England (1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988) is now available in the Library of the House. Table 3 gives details of the number of smallholdings provided by county councils. A similar report for Wales is also available.

Blowfly

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has issued any advice on the technique of using pour-on products for the control of blowfly infestation in sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Licences for such products require that the proper conditions of use are spelt out on the product labels and accompanying literature. My Department has not issued supplementary guidance.

Co-responsibility Levy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was paid by British dairy farmers last year as co-responsibility levy; and what is his estimate of their liability in the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: United Kingdom dairy farmers paid some £53 million in milk co-responsibility levy in 1988-89. Following the reductions in the levy agreed in this year's farm price negotiations, it is currently estimated that their liability will be reduced to about £32 million in 1989-90.

Beef Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he intends to take to ensure that the beef special premium is paid to producers as an addition to, and not incorporated within, the market price of finished animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Payment of the beef special premium in Great Britain is made direct to the producer presenting the animals for slaughter or for sale for slaughter.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement indicating in full the documentary evidence required to be produced by claimants of the beef special premium; and which of these will be mandatory prerequisites.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The mandatory prerequisites for those applying for the beef special premium in Great Britain are that they shall have registered, prior to application and on the form provided, details of all their production units and that they complete an application form for each claim made. In addition, they must keep records sufficient to verify the claims for premium and to substantiate the means of production. Applicants are also required to keep records of the purchases and sales of animals which have been marked for premium as follows:

(1) The date of transaction.
(2) Numbers and descriptions of animals, and the weight of each animal.
(3) In the case of a purchase or sale by auction at an auction market, the name and address of the auctioneer, and in any other case the name and address of the other party to the transaction.
(4) Where applicable the dates by which any marked animals bought or sold are to be slaughtered.
(5) Where applicable, the dates of slaughter of marked animals in their possession at the time of slaughter.

Most of these requirements are in fact met by the scheme documentation.

Applicants are required to retain such records for a period of three years from the end of the calender year to which they relate and to produce them for inspection if so required by an authorised officer.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to enforce the headage limit of 90 in respect of the beef special premium.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On each application form claimants for premium are required to declare that they have not exceeded the headage limit. Claims will be monitored by the computer program processing claims for payment and verification will be made on holding of claim details.

Encephalopathies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department was sponsoring prior to 1987 on transmissible encephalopathies in animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The main centre for research on transmissible encephalopathies in animals has been the neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh, funded jointly by the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Medical Research Council. My Department has been maintaining a scrapie resistant flock of sheep for study at Redesdale experimental husbandry farm for many years and began an investigation of scrapies-associated fibrils in sheep in 1985-86. The central veterinary laboratory of MAFF studies new and emerging diseases continuously and identified bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle in November 1986 and has studied the pathology of cases ever since. The laboratory's main studies of bovine spongiform encephalopathy began in 1987.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of the set-aside programme.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 4 April 1989, column 45.

Meat Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions exist for the inspection of imported meat products which originate outside the European Economic Community; and what is his estimate of the percentage of such imports which are so inspected.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Port health authorities are responsible for the inspection of meat products imported from all countries under the Imported Food Regulations 1984. The authorities are diligent in ensuring that all consignments have the proper health certification and are inspected.

Humber Estuary

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring is currently being undertaken in and around the Humber estuary on (a) the decline in marine life and (b) the effects of water pollution on fish for human consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 May 1989]: Concentrations of contaminants in fish and shellfish around the coasts of England and Wales including the Humber area are regularly monitored by scientists from my Department's directorate of fisheries research. Reports of this work are published and the latest such report, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report No. 16", is available in the Library of the House.

Agricultural Research

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what agricultural research resources are currently being devoted to (a) organic farming and (b) bio-dynamic farming techniques.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 16 May 1989]: This year my Department is spending £198,000 on research directly related to organic farming. Other research funded by my Department is also relevant to organic and so-called bio-dynamic farming techniques because it is directed at reducing the use of artificial fertilisers and pesticides or improving the use of organic wastes from animals and crops. Such work includes the integrated control of cereals pests using insect predators, parasitic fungi and behaviour-controlling chemicals and will cost £892,000 this year.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated date for publication of the Manpower Services Commission studies into the funding of training in Britain; whether he will consider publishing the interim results of the study; and whether the studies include a breakdown by economic region of private industry's expenditure on training.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The studies will be published by the autumn. Interim results of the study were published a year ago and a copy is in the House of Commons Library, ("The Funding of Vocational Education and Training: Some Early Research Findings, Background Note 2, Training Commission, 1988). The studies do not include a breakdown by economic region of private industry's expenditure on training but will provide some indication of levels of training in different parts of the country.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that employment training scheme management agencies and employers in England, Wales and Northern Ireland do not continue to receive an allowance from his Department after trainees have left the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Claims for training fees submitted by training managers are subject to checks both within Training Agency area offices and at the training manager's premises.

The checks include the comparison of claims with individual trainee records and information notified to unemployment benefit offices.

Responsibility for Government programmes in Northern Ireland lies with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the managing and training agents operating in the North Tyneside travel-to-work area and the numbers of ET and YTS placements in each.

Mr. Cope: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the age group 16 to 19 inclusive were (a) full-time employees in employment, (b) part-time employees in employment, (c) self employed, (d) not included above and on YOP, YTS, CP, or JTS or (e) not included in the above and undertaking full-time education or training, from spring 1984 for each year to spring 1988.

Mr. Cope: Available estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the following table:

Persons aged 16-19 either in employment or undertaking full-time education or training—Great Britain

Spring estimates, thousands

	1984	1985	1986	1987	[1]1988
Full-time[1] employees	1,261	1,230	1,189	1,187	1,190

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of fatal, major and minor accidents on YTS for the period January 1989 to March 1989; and how many YTS placements were closed or not accepted in the periods September to December 1988 and January 1989 to March 1989.

Mr. Cope: Table A provides YTS accident figures for the period 1 January—31 March 1989.

Table A

YTS accidents 1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989

Accident[1]	Period 1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989
Fatalities	1
Major Injuries[2]	150
Minor Injuries	716

[1] Training Agency accident figures include accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Table B provides the figures of YTS placements closed or not accepted for the quarters 1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988 and 1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989.

Table B

Closure and non acceptance of YTS placements 1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988 and 1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989

	1 October 1988 to 31 December 1988	1 January 1989 to 31 March 1989
Placements Closed	36	39
Placements not accepted	14	19

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS trainees had contracts of employment by Training Agency region, by male and female, at the most recent date, and at one year previously.

Mr. Cope: The numbers of young people in training on YTS who were notified to the Training Agency as having contracts of employment as at 31 December 1987 and 31 December 1988 by region were as follows:

Region	31 December 1987		31 December 1988
	Female	Male	Female	Male
Scotland	1,451	4,478	1,759	5,594
Northern	981	2,055	1,217	2,672
North West	2,966	6,690	3,402	8,822
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,503	3,936	3,543	6,437
West Midlands	1,509	3,696	2,488	6,261

East Midlands and East Anglia	2,280	5,955	3,189	8,087
TOTAL	15,428	41,147	21,524	61,689

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by male and female from the most recent YTS leavers survey those trainees leaving the scheme by destination classed as (a) full-time work with same employer, (b) full-time work with a different employer, (c) full-time education course, (d) another YTS, (e) other and (f) unemployment; and what is the percentage of early leavers.

Mr. Cope: The results of the YTS follow-up survey are available in the House of Commons Library.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to exempt from the poll tax seamen working and living on their vessels who have no other sole or main residence.

Mr. Lang: The question whether a person is solely or mainly resident in the area of a local authority and thus liable to pay the personal community charge is for community charge registration officers to decide in the light of the facts and circumstances relating to individual cases. There are no plans to make special arrangements for seafarers.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total percentages of the Scottish Development Department's road budget which were allocated to the following roads in each of the past five years: (a) A/M74, (b) A77, (c) A9, (d) A92 and (e) A96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The information is given in the following table:

Expenditure as Percentage of Total Spend on Trunk Roads

Financial Year/Route	A/M74	A77	A9	A92	A96
1984-85	12·6	2·2	17·9	11·5	1·6
1985-86	19·2	1·9	18·3	7·1	1·4
1986-87	13·6	1·7	18·0	4·4	2·4
1987-88	13·6	2·4	15·1	5·0	7·3
1988-87[1]	9·9	2·0	9·9	12·9	4·8

Family Law (Scotland) Act

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to amend section 8(1)(a) of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985 in order to allow the court to make orders in an action for divorce, for the payment of a capital sum and for the transfer of property.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any intention of bringing forward amending legislation in the light of Lord Morton's statement in the Court of Session in the case of Walker v. Walker that the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985 would require amendment to permit an award of both transfer of property and a capital sum.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A Court of Session judgment relating to this legislation was made on 9 May. The provision in question is in the terms suggested by the Scottish Law Commission. Until such time as the period during which an appeal may be made expires it would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Weil's Disease

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of deaths, by occupational category, and by region, from Weil's disease in each of the past 20 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seven deaths from Weil's disease since 1968 have been recorded in Scotland. The information requested about these deaths is as follows:

Year	Number of deaths	Occupation	County or region
1970	1	Not known	Argyll
1975	1	Not known	Highland
1979	1	Drawing office assistant	Tayside
1980	2	Farm worker	Grampian
		Farmer	Central
1983	2	University academic staff	Tayside
		Farm worker	Central

Lowland Airports Policy

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the survey of Scottish opinion which his office conducted in relation to the request by BAA plc for a review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such survey of Scottish opinion has been carried out by the Scottish Office. In reaching his decision on BAA's request for a review of the Scottish lowlands airports policy, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport took into account the support for maintaining the present status of Prestwick airport which had been expressed by representatives of all political parties, as well as other considerations.

Direct Labour (Competition)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has completed his consultations about the competition requirements relating to direct labour organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The overall response rate to the consultation paper issued in October 1988 was low with only half of local authorities submitting comment. My right hon. and learned Friend was grateful to all those who did respond and has carefully considered the comments received. He has now decided that all building and maintenance work, other than highways and water and sewage work, should be subject to competition and that authorities should be prohibited from renewing maintenance contracts without first going out to tender. Emergency work will continue to be exempt but further consideration is being given to the scope for restricting the kinds of emergency work which can be carried out by direct labour organisations without competition.

In the light of the responses received, my right hon. and learned Friend has also decided to defer the implementation date by six months to 1 April 1990 and to increase the exemption for direct labour organisations proposed in the consultation paper from five to 15 employees.

Trunk Road Programme

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will increase resources for the trunk road programme in Scotland; and what proposals he has to alter his current policies and plans.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer to the statement made today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, announcing major developments in his motorway and trunk road programme. I particularly welcome his decision to place the main immediate priority in England on widening the M6, M1 and M25 motorways. These roads are Scotland's essential links to the major markets in the south and Europe.

The road programme in Scotland will benefit substantially from the expanded programme announced today. As with England and Wales, of course detailed decisions about funding levels for particular years will be taken in the course of annual reviews of public expenditure. Under the normal formula arrangements the Scottish block will receive each year an equivalent share of the additional funds.

I place major emphasis on improving inter-urban roads in Scotland. I have already announced that I am making additional funds available for national trunk roads over the current year and some 25 per cent. more for new construction for the following two financial years. I now expect to be in a position to increase roads spending substantially further in future years reflecting the Government's commitment to improved roads infrastructure. Currently we have in preparation a formidable programme of schemes and studies.

The financing of roads is no longer a matter solely for the Government. There is also a role for private finance to play in road provision in the future in Scotland as in England, where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has said in his White Paper that he will be putting forward proposals on this question shortly.

My right hon. Friend's White Paper also announced today new road traffic forecasts which are relevant to the standard of roads needed and to the estimates of their economic return. These new traffic forecasts will be applied similarly to planned Scottish road improvements.

I shall outline how we are currently proposing to spend the available resources. Our largest single project is the planned M74 Glasgow to Carlisle motorway which will link with the M6, M1 and M25 routes. This project was announced in 1987: it alone expanded the trunk road programme by around 40 per cent. My Department has been working to a highly ambitious timetable to prepare this 100km of motorway and I now expect that advance works will start next year and, if progress continues will, even main works.

To this end I am announcing today the first two schemes, one at either end of the A74 in Scotland. The northernmost scheme runs from Millbank to just north of Abington. The second scheme is the section from Gretna to Kirkpatrick Fleming. Development of these "fast-track" schemes will run ahead of the general development of the rest of the route. The consultants are finalising their reports for the whole length to be upgraded. Once these reports have been studied, we propose in the late summer or autumn to consult on a proposed preferred route for the whole road.

A key issue is whether M74 schemes should be dual-two lane or dual-three lane standard. My Department has carefully assessed the two schemes that I have announced today in the light of the additional costs of dual-three lane over dual-two lane, the new higher traffic levels expected and the implications for disruption of traffic during the construction period. Following this full assessment, it is proposed that these two schemes will be built to dual-three lane standard. The standard to which subsequent schemes will be built will similarly be considered on their particular merits.

A further motorway priority is completion of the central Scotland network. Some eight major motorway schemes are now being progressed rapidly. One is the M8 from Newbridge to the Edinburgh bypass. This is urgently required and I hope that firm proposals can be published this summer with a view to construction starting about two years thereafter.

On the M80, advance works are well under way on the Stepps bypass, which will mark the start of three major schemes that will complete the motorway from Stirling to Glasgow. There are four other major motorway proposals at an advanced stage of preparation on the periphery of Glasgow. On the A77 several schemes are planned to complete the dual carriageway between Glasgow and Ayr.

Important though the motorway network is to the economy of Scotland, the Government will continue to place equal priority on improving the whole 2,000 miles of trunk road network throughout Scotland. In recent years this has meant, for example, the improvement of the A9 Perth-Inverness route, the Perth-Dundee-Aberdeen route, and the A75 Euro route to Stranraer.

The top priority now for trunk roads is to make significant enhancements on the A96 Aberdeen-Inverness route to reduce accidents and journey times and to improve driving conditions on the route generally. The Government announced a six-point plan in December which set out a programme of work, current and planned, which will cost at least £70 million.

One hundred miles of route cannot be re-engineered overnight. This programme therefore concentrates on addressing the priority problems first. It does so quickly and effectively. Where traffic flows are high, major schemes have been, are being or will be built. Where there are accidents occurring, remedial schemes are being implemented as a matter of urgency. Already, 30 sites for accident remedial treatment have been identified since the plan was announced and road markings are to be thoroughly overhauled. Where lack of overtaking opportunities are causing long queues of traffic, frustration and delays, we have instructed the regional council to plan to include regular safe overtaking stretches.

The precise extent of further new schemes to improve the A96 and the speed with which they can now be implemented will depend in part on the actual amounts of new money which will become available from year to year following today's statement. I am pleased today however to be able to announce that major and early progress can be achieved. A key part of the six-point plan was to accelerate preparation of the major schemes so that they could be built if money were to become available from slippage elsewhere in the programme. I can now say that funds will be available for these major A96 schemes as soon as they are prepared. Further, in the light of both the new resources likely to be available and of the new traffic forecasts announced today, I will now be considering further significant improvements to the A96 which might be appropriate.

The trunk road programme now contains major schemes to improve almost all roads in the trunk road network. Further schemes will be added as studies identifying requirements are completed. In particular, my Department is about to recdeive final assessments from the "Routes South of Edinburgh" study. Before I make a final decision on the way forward in the light of the study, it is my intention to issue a consultation paper detailing the options which have emerged and inviting comment from a wide range of interests. I hope to be able to issue the consultation paper during the summer.

I have also decided to instigate a further study to ensure that both trunk and other key principal roads, the vital links between major centres of Scotland, are in the best possible shape to meet the demands of the latter part of this century and into the next. No network wide general review of traffic flows, pressure points and potential to enhance development has been carried out for some time. If roads investment is to be substantially increased—and it is—it is critical to be sure that the money will be spent in the right places. It is particularly necessary, therefore, to review the situation now. The regional councils will have a role to play in this and my Department will be consulting them to discuss the way forward.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library details of each major publicity campaign mounted by his Department in 1985-86 and each successive year, including in each case the objectives of the campaign, the intended audience and the outcome of the monitoring of the achievement of the intended objectives, and national research conducted for him by the Central Office of Information together with a note of the intended objectives in the campaigns in 1989-90.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 May 1989]: Details have been placed in the Library today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Lingua Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the Government's policy towards the Lingua programme proposed by the European Commission;

(2) what is the budget contribution from the United Kingdom for five years from 1994, as part of the Lingua programme;

(3) what projects have been prepared for submission to the Lingua programme proposed by the European Community;

(4) how much has been spent on preparatory work on the Lingua programme proposed by the European Commission.

Mr. Jackson: Modern languages are a key part of the national curriculum and the Government attach great importance to improving our performance in this field. Provided an appropriate legal base can be agreed, the Government are prepared to support those parts of the proposed Lingua programme which relate to student mobility, in-service training for teachers, programmes of co-operation in language teaching between higher education institutions and language training for firms. It is not prepared to support proposals for Community action in areas of school education, which are matters for individual member states. Until the size and shape of the Lingua programme have been agreed, it is not possible to forecast the United Kingdom's budgetary contribution to it, or to invite the submission of projects within it. Preparatory work in this country has to date been limited to that required for negotiating the text of the decision establishing the programme.

Doctorates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many doctoral research students at the Open university have been awarded doctorates in each year since 1979; and what has been the comparable average success in other United Kingdom universities.

Mr. Jackson: Numbers of training doctorates at the Open university are as follows:

	Number
1979	14
1980	13
1981	22
1982	31
1983	31
1984	48
1985	41
1986	54
1987	55
1988	39
1989	[1]5

[1] To date.

A large proportion of Open university students research for their doctorates on a part-time basis. Information on average completion rates at the OU and at other United Kingdom universities is not readily available.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table on student grants updating his answer of 12 December 1988, Official Report, column 389, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The data requested are as follows:

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the scales of parental contribution to the student grant, specifying what contribution parents should be making according to their income in the current year.

Mr. Jackson: The scales for the current academic year are as follows:

Residual income[1]	[2]Scale 1	[3]Scale 2
9,900	50	37
10,000	64	48

[1] The starting point in calculating the residual income is the gross income of the parents as computed for tax purposes in the financial year immediately preceding the academic year for which the grant is being assessed. From this gross figure some deductions are allowed—notably those made in parallel with the tax reliefs based on interest payments, including mortgage interest, life insurance premiums (on policies taken out before March 1984) and superannuation payments.

[2] Scale 1 is applied to those students whose courses began before 1 April 1988 and who had attained the age of 18 by 16 March 1988, or to those who had within two years of starting their present course attended another designated course. Scale 2 is applied to all other dependent students.

[3] The contribution payable may be less than the amounts shown on the scale, particularly at its top end and where the contribution is in respect of one award holder only. This will depend on the amount of grant against which the contribution has to be set and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figures, for his best available estimate, for the numbers of parents paying the parental contribution towards the student grant, specifying how many parents and how much they are paying in respect of each different level of contribution; and if he will also estimate what proportion of parents pay the full parental contribution at each different level.

Mr. Jackson: Although the parents of two out of three mandatory award holders are assessed for a contribution towards the maintenance element of the award, they are under no legal obligation to pay it. Evidence of payment or non-payment is indirect, from surveys of students' income and expenditure, and needs to be treated with caution. Such evidence suggests that the average student receives financial help from parents in excess of their assessed contribution, but that one student in three of those whose parents are assessed for an award may receive less.

National Curriculum

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which modern foreign languages will be specified for inclusion in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today jointly published an order, which comes into effect on 1 August 1989, under section 3(2)(b) of the Education Reform Act 1988. This specifies two groups of modern foreign languages which will qualify for the purposes of the national curriculum. The terms of the order reflect consultations on the draft order which we initiated on 3 March. We are grateful for all the comments received during the consultation period.

Initially this order will apply to the requirement that pupils in key stage 3—normally those aged 11 to 14—should study a modern foreign language for a reasonable time from autumn 1989 for pupils in England, and from autumn 1990 for those in Wales.

The first group of languages consists of the eight working languages of the European Community (Danish, Dutch, French, German, Modern Greek, Italian, Portuguese, Spanish)—the schedule 1 languages. The second group contains 11 non-EC languages (Arabic, Bengali, Gujerati, Hindi, Japanese, Mandarin and Cantonese Chinese, Modern Hebrew, Panjabi, Russian, Turkish, Urdu)—the schedule 2 languages.

The order does not require all pupils to study a working language of the European Community. It requires schools to offer at least one such language as the first modern foreign language pupils study; but allows schools also to offer any of the other languages listed in schedule 2 so that pupils can choose to study one of these languages rather than the EC language offered. But the order does not give pupils a right to demand teaching of a non-EC language or an EC language other than that offered.

Circulars of guidance for England and Wales are also being published today. Copies of the order and circulars will be sent to all LEAs and schools and have been placed in the Library.

WALES

Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reconsider the exclusion of the Welsh Joint Education Committee from the recently reconstituted Wales advisory body for local authority higher education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The reconstituted Wales advisory body for local authority higher education consists of eight county councillors chaired by myself. The Welsh Joint Education committee nominates four of the eight councillors.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider appointing a representative of professional public sector higher education drawn from within the Principality to the newly constituted Wales advisory body for local authority higher education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The former board of the Wales advisory body for local authority higher education has been reconstituted as the standing working group for the new single-tier Wales advisory body. Members appointed to the standing working group by my right hon. Friend are drawn from a variety of institutions. The only representative members are those appointed by the Welsh Counties committee and the Welsh joint education committee.

TRANSPORT

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been received to date from British Rail on the progress of consultation on private sector involvement in the Settle-Carlisle railway line.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail is considering, with the relevant local authorities, the precise scope of private sector involvement.

European Community Infrastructure Grant

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give a breakdown by region of the monies received from the European Community for transport or infrastructure investment for each year since 1980;

(2) what monies have been or will be received from the European Community for infrastructure investment connected with the Channel tunnel; and if he will give a breakdown by standard region;

(3) what information he has about what moneys are available from the European Community for infrastructure investment connected with the Channel tunnel for which Her Majesty's Government do not intend to apply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: European Community transport infrastructure grant to the United Kingdom since 1985 by regions and year has been as follows:

	1985 £ million	1986 £ million	1987 £ million	1988 £ million
South East	11·2	6·6	2·1	7·0
Eastern	1·5	2·6	—	—
Wales	—	—	1·4	—
Northern Ireland	0·4	—	—	—

EC transport infrastructure grant so far awarded for investment connected with the Channel tunnel amounts to £15·6 million and a further £3·25 million is expected this year. All the projects concerned are in the south-east.

The United Kingdom has also received support for transport infrastructure from the European regional development fund. Since 1980 this has been by region:

	£ million
Northern	142·6
East Midland	8·5
North-West	128·1
South-West	49·9
West Midland	78·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	94·9

Figures for transport infrastructure grant earlier than 1985 or for a separation into years of the European regional development figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

We are therefore receiving funds from both available sources. We have no information of any other monies available from the EC for infrastructure investments connected with the Channel tunnel.

ENERGY

Standing Charges

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairmen of electricity boards, he will urge them to abolish standing charges on electricity bills for pensioner customers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Standing charges are a matter for the electricity industry. They cover the cost of providing a connection to the distribution network, as well as all aspects of customer services, including those of meter reading, accounting and billing. These costs arise no matter how much or how little electricity is used. They reflect the fixed costs which the electricity supply industry incurs in maintaining a constant and safe supply to each customer's home. Abolition of standing charges would increase the unit rate.

I do not, therefore, believe that the abolition of standing charges on electricity bills for pensioner customers would be in the interests of customers as a whole.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the Director-General of Gas Supply, he will seek the abolition of standing charges on gas bills for pensioner customers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. Standing charges for gas are subject to the conditions of British Gas's authorisation as a public gas supplier.

Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many tonnes of uranium have been imported into the United Kingdom annually since 1979; whether the safeguards designation for each consignment was N or P; which authorities made the safeguards designation; from which countries the uranium originated; and was any subsequently re-exported.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 11 May 1989]: The Euratom authorities assign appropriate safeguards coding, according to the conditions imposed by the government of the supplying country, at the time contracts are signed. Since 1979 over 10,000 tonnes of uranium as ore concentrate has been imported for use in the United Kingdom civil programme; all of it is subject to peaceful end-use restrictions imposed by the supplier country, with the exception of that from Namibia which was subject to obligation code "N". The ore concentrate was imported from Canada, United States of America and Namibia. No uranium ore concentrate has been imported from Namibia since 1984.

In addition to uranium imported for use in the United Kingdom, over 30,000 tonnes of uranium, as ore concentrate, has been processed by British Nuclear Fuels Limited since 1979, on behalf of overseas customers for subsequent re-export. The origin of such material is a matter for these customers to determine.

All uranium imported either for the United Kingdom civil programme or for re-export is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the United Kingdom-Euratom-International Atomic Energy Authority safeguards agreement and to any end use obligations imposed by the supplier country.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Polyester Silk Plants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by year for the last 10 years the value in current prices of polyester silk plants imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will show in his answer the country of origin.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available.

Knitted Goods

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list United Kingdom exports to Turkey of knitted goods in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Premium Savings Bond

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to review the premium savings bond either by replacing it, or supplementing it with another scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley The terms of premium bonds, like all National Savings products, are kept under constant review. There are no plans to replace or restructure the scheme.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total amount of capital expenditure by construction, distribution and financial industries at constant factor prices in each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales and for each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Major: Capital expenditure by the construction, distribution and financial industries is not estimated for Scotland, Wales or the regions of England at either current or constant prices.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total amount of capital expenditure by manufacturing industry at constant factor prices for each standard region, Scotland and Wales and for each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Major: Capital expenditure is not estimated at constant prices in the regional accounts for Scotland, Wales or the regions of England, because there are no regional price indices. Current price estimates for 1983-86 were published in Economic Trends No. 421, November 1988, on page 97. Estimates for 1987 will be published in Economic Trends No. 433.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the gross domestic product at constant factor prices for each standard region, Scotland and Wales and for each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Major: Gross domestic product (output-based) at constant prices for Scotland from 1963-1987 was published by the Scottish Office on 3 May; comparable estimates are not made for Wales or the regions of England. Current price estimates (income based) for Scotland, Wales and the English regions for 1977-87 were published in Economic Trends No. 421, November 1988, on page 90. Provisional estimates for 1988 will be published in Economic Trends No. 433. Constant price income based estimates are not made because there are no regional price indices.

HOME DEPARTMENT

London Underground (Equal Opportunities)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the managing director of London Underground Ltd. as to the proportion of its senior managers who are (a) black and (b) women; and what action he proposes to take to promote equal opportunities.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for London Underground Ltd. as employers.

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum in the United Kingdom were made at ports of entry when the applicant did not have prior entrance clearance to the United Kingdom; and how many such applicants were granted (i) asylum and (ii) exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom, in each of the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were refused entry to the United Kingdom at ports of entry; and how many of those refused entry subsequently applied for asylum in the United Kingdom, in the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Renton: The total number of passengers refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom in 1985, 1986 and 1987 is published in table 4.2 of the Home Office publication "Immigration Nationality and Passports, October 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. The total in 1988 was 20,871. Information on the numbers of these passengers who subsequently applied for refugee status in the United Kingdom is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average Home Office decision time for asylum applications made at ports of entry in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988 and at the current time.

Mr. Renton: The available information is given in the table. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Estimated average length of time[1] taken to reach a decision on an application[2] made at a port, for refugee status in the United Kingdom, for cases decided during the year.

	Average time in months
1985	[3]8
1986	16
1987	11

[1] Excluding the time accounted for by an appeal where practicable, although this cannot be done in all cases.
[2] Excluding dependants.
[3] The 1985 figure may be an underestimate.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with other EC Governments regarding harmonisation of asylum procedures in preparation for the implementation of the Single European Act in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Asylum procedures have been discussed in regular meetings of Ministers responsible for immigration, held on six occasions since December 1986. For details of the two most recent meetings, I refer the hon. Member to the replies my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 December 1988 at columns 576-7 and for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on 17 May 1989 at column 208.

My right hon. Friend and I have also discussed asylum matters in various bilaterial contacts with Ministers from other member states.

Broadcasting (Ownership)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the proposals in the White Paper on broadcasting ownership.

Mr. Hurd: The White Paper made clear our determination that ownership in the independent broadcasting sector should remain widely spread, and that unhealthy concentrations of ownership and excessive cross-media ownership should be prevented. We are grateful to those who responded to the invitation to comment on the scope and formulation of the rules needed to achieve this objective.

The White Paper envisaged (paragraph 6.51) that the same group would be permitted to hold two, but not more than two, regional Channel 3 licences. Many of those commenting thought it would be undesirable if the same group could control two large or contiguous Channel 3 regions. It has also been argued that some flexibility is needed to take account of the ways in which independent terrestrial television might develop.

In the light of these responses we propose to strengthen the rules envisaged in the White Paper in the following way. Power would be taken to prescribe in subordinate legislation limits on the number of Independent Television Commission or Radio Authority licences within each main licence category which any one body or group would be permitted to hold or control. In the case of regional Channel 3 licences the initial limit would be set at two, as envisaged in the White Paper. But these limits would be capable of further restriction by reference to audience share and contiguity of licence area. The Government do not envisage that the same group should be allowed to own two large franchises or two franchises for contiguous areas.

Paragraph 6.53 of the White Paper proposed clear reciprocal limits on broadcasting and newspaper cross-holdings. Taking account of comments on the White Paper, we propose that no proprietor of a national newspaper should be allowed to have an interest exceeding 20 per cent. in any DBS, UHF TV (including regional Channel 3) or national radio franchise. We also see a strong case for debarring national newspaper proprietors from having a significant financial interest in more than one such franchise. These limits also apply reciprocally to the holders of such franchises investing in groups controlling national newspapers. No regional or local newspaper would be allowed to have more than a 20 per cent. interest in any regional or local Independent Television Commission or Radio Authority licensee with whose area it substantially overlapped, and vice versa.

Paragraph 6.53 of the White Paper proposed, folowing a recommendation by the Home Affairs Committee, that ownership of satellite channels not using United Kingdom broadcasting frequencies but receivable in the United Kingdom (whether based here or abroad) should be capable of being taken into account by the Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority in operating their controls. We propose that no operator of such a service should be permitted to have more than a 20 per cent. interest in a DBS, UHF TV (including regional Channel 3) or national radio licensee, and that cross-interests exceeding 20 per cent. between DBS, UHF TV and national radio licensees should not be permitted. Similarly, cross-interests exceeding 20 per cent. would not be permitted between regional Channel 3, local delivery operator and local radio licensees whose areas substantially overlapped. These limits would be expressed in subordinate legislation and would be capable of variation. We envisage that legislation would also leave open the possibility of limiting other forms of cross-holding.

In line with paragraph 6.49 of the White Paper, local authorities and bodies whose objectives are wholly or mainly of a political or religious nature (and also bodies which are affiliated to or controlled by such bodies) would be disqualified from holding any ITC licence. Local authorities and political bodies would similarly be disqualified from holding any Radio Authority licence: as envisaged in paragraph 7.10 of the radio Green Paper, religious bodies would be allowed to have a financial interest in radio stations provided this did not lead to bias or editorialising on religious or controversial matters.

We propose that no ITC or Radio Authority licence may be held or controlled by a non-EC company or individual not ordinarily resident in the EC, with the exception of local delivery licences and any operators licensed under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. In the case of these exceptions, concerns about editorial and cultural influence, which are less applicable to local service delivery, are outweighed by the advantages for investment which the possibility of non-EC control would bring about.

While the Government do not envisage that the ITC or Radio Authority would have a wide discretion in dealing with ownership questions, they do propose that they should be given the enforcement powers needed to police the rules effectively. These would include the ability to include licence conditions requiring licensees to give advance notice of, and seek prior consent for, changes in shareholdings. The ITC and Radio Authority would also be able, for the purposes of enforcing the ownership rules, to require changes in a company or group as a condition of its being awarded, or retaining, a licence, and to withdraw licences if declarations to them proved false.

Transitional account will be taken, in framing the rules, of the position of shareholders in franchises awarded under existing legislation.

Magistrates Clerks

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many magistrates courts' days have been lost or shortened because of the inadequacy in numbers of available clerks.

Mr. John Patten: This information, not available at present, is now being obtained from magistrates courts committees on a quarterly basis. I shall write to the right hon. Member as soon as the first set of returns has been collated.

Drugs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total value of goods seized under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Mr. John Patten: The best available information relates to confiscation orders. For the value of such orders to date, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) on 11 May at column 986.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department has with regard to the proportion of burglaries committed by drug addicts (a) in the Wirral, (b) in Merseyside and (c) nationally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available nationally. However, a Home Office research study "opioid use and burglary", published in 1986 estimated that in 1983, 1 per cent. of adult males convicted of burglary in a dwelling at Liverpool magistrates court, and 15 per cent. convicted at Wirral magistrates court were drug addicts notified to the Home Office. Other research has suggested that in 1985 at least half of the adult males convicted of burglary in the Wirral may have been drug misusers.

Lone Occupants (Names and Addresses)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to limit publication of names and addresses of lone occupants of houses.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so. The only published official source in England and Wales from which such information might be inferred, so far as I am aware, is the electoral register. It is not, however, a comprehensive guide as to who lives at a particular address or whether a person on it is a lone occupant. We have no evidence of widespread misuse of the register for criminal or other illegitimate purposes. If my hon. Friend is aware of a particular problem, perhaps he would write to me about it.

Segregated Prisoners

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners on the most recent convenient date were segregated under rule 43 of the prison rules (i) for their own protection and (ii) for reasons of good order and discipline.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers of prisoners (sentenced and unsentenced) so segregated on 31 March 1989 was as follows:

	Own protection	Good order or discipline
Male	2,193	227
Female	21	8

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 20 December 1988, Official Report, column 178, what representation he has received about the legal validity of the powers used by immigration officers to sign notices of intention to deport under the Immigration Act 1971; what response he has made; if he will review these powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 May 1989]: This issue has been raised in a number of appeals before the independent appellate authorities. The immigration appeal tribunal has now endorsed the view that the service of notices of intention to deport authorised by members of the immigration service not below the rank of inspector is valid.

We have also received two other letters about the delegation of the powers of the Secretary of State. A reply was sent to the first letter in November 1988 in similar terms to the answer given to the hon. Member on 20 December 1988 at column 178. The second letter was received recently and a reply will be sent shortly.

Motor Vehicle Keys

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek power to prohibit the sale to the public by open mail order of skeleton key sets suitable to open the locked doors of motor vehicles without the knowledge or permission of the owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 May 1989]: There is no existing legislation prohibiting the sale of skeleton key sets, but it is an offence to carry such an article for use in the course of or in connection with theft. There are legitimate uses of skeleton key sets—eg by locksmiths—and any proposals for controls on sales would need to take this into account. Inquiries made of the police by the Home Office crime prevention centre at Stafford have not revealed evidence of significant use of skeleton key sets in criminal offences.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General how many appeals against refusal of asylum in the United Kingdom were heard by the immigration appellate authorities in each of the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

The Attorney-General: In 1987, 407 such appeals were heard before adjudicators and 42 before the immmigration appeal tribunal. In 1988, 525 appeals were heard before adjudicators and 80 before the tribunal. Figures for 1985 and 1986 are not available.

Police Computers (Disclosure of Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General, what is his policy towards the prosecution of perpetrators of unauthorised disclosures of information from police computers under the Official Secrets Act; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The institution or continuance of criminal proceedings in these cases, as with all other cases, is considered in accordance with the guidelines set out in the code for crown prosecutors issued under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. Proceedings will be instituted or continued only where the evidence is sufficient to conclude that there is a realistic prospect of conviction and a prosecution is required by the public interest.

ENVIRONMENT

Seal Products

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government will support an indefinite extension of European Community Directive 83/129/EEC which bans the importation of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products; and if he will make a statement on the health of seals in United Kingdom waters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The killing of harp and hooded seals for trade has aroused strong public concern in many countries. We have considered carefully the conservation case for trade controls on these species and have consulted the sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council, which is internationally acknowledged for its expertise in this area.

Our view is that a permanent extension of the current temporary European Community directive (83/129 EEC) controlling this trade, which is due to expire on 1 October 1989, is required to ensure the conservation of the seal populations in question.

The Government have also taken additional conservation measures to help reduce the threat to the United Kingdom seal population. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department announced last October the introduction of new orders under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 which extend throughout the year the general protection given under the Act. These measures apply to common and grey seals in England and common seals in Scotland.

The seal population in the North sea and Irish sea have been affected by a virus. Research is continuing into the epidemic at the sea mammal research unit as part of this Department's North sea research programme. A total of around 2,750 seals were reported dead from a population of 95,000 grey seals and 25,000 common seals.

Community Charge

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the factual errors in his Department's leaflet "The Community Charge—How It Will Work for You".

Mr. Gummer: There is none.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain the provisions for exemption of prisoners as set out in his Department's leaflet "The Community Charge—How It Will Work for You."

Mr. Gummer: The Department's leaflet gives an accurate summary of the circumstances in which persons in detention are exempt from liability to the community charge, the full provisions of which are set out in paragraph 1 of schedule 1 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the cost of (a) production and (b) distribution of his Department's leaflet "The Community Charge—How It Will Work for You."

Mr. Gummer: My Department has produced 23 million copies of the leaflet "The Community Charge—How It Will Work for You" at a total cost of £367,887.

The estimated cost for distributing this leaflet to all households in England is under £600,000.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of widows he estimates will gain under the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: I have no estimate of the proportion of widows who would pay less under the community charge than with rates. I would expect many to be gainers since 83 per cent. of single pensioner households and 75 per cent. of other single adult households are expected to gain.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet able to publish the community charge payable this year (a) on average in England and Wales and (b) in Derbyshire.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published once data needed from local authorities has been received and analysed.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to publish illustrative poll tax figures for English local authorities based on 1989-90 budgets.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published once data needed from local authorities has been received and analysed.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of single-parent families he estimates will gain under the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: I expect nearly 80 per cent. of single families to pay less with the community charge than they would with rates.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the wealth distribution effects on lower income groups of the changeover from domestic rates to community charge.

Mr. Gummer: Figures placed in the Library on 15 December 1988 confirm that many of the poorest households would be better off under the community charge than under the rates. Community charges on average would be less than domestic rates for all income bands up to £200 per week; and households with a net weekly income of under £50 would, on average, pay over 20 per cent. less with community charge than with domestic rates.

Sea Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions Her Majesty's Government have held during this Parliament with representatives of the Irish Government concerning pollution levels in the Irish sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Regular formal and informal contact takes place between representatives of the United Kingdom and Irish Governments on particular aspects of the marine environment such as the falling discharge of radioactive substances or factors relevant to the management of fisheries. More wide-ranging discussions on the marine environment take place from time to time. The next such meeting of officials is scheduled for 24-25 May.

Local Authority Estates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds on the estate management board partnership arrangements between local authority tenants and some local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's consultants, the Priority Estates Project (PEP) Ltd., are currently working with local authorities and tenants on eight council estates to set up estate management boards (EMBs). They are:

Local authority	Estate
Birmingham	Bloomsbury
Blackburn	Shadsworth
Bristol	Halston Drive
Burnley	Stoops/Hargher Clough
Rochdale	Freehold
Rossendale	Bacup
Stoke	Chell Heath
West Lancashire	Digmoor

Tenants on the Belle Isle North estate in Leeds are also developing an EMB with the support of the city council.

My Department welcomes the development of EMBs as an important new way of giving council tenants much more say in how their estates are managed.

I am placing in the Library copies of the Priority Estates Project's guide to setting up EMBs.

I hope that other local authorities will want to consider EMBs as one possible way of improving delivery of housing services for their tenants.

Leasehold Reform Act 1967

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire, on 17 January, Official Report, column 148, if he is yet in a position to announce his conclusions to the consultation paper on disputes between valuations under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967.

Mr. Trippier: We are still considering the responses to our consultation paper in conjunction with the Welsh Office and hope to announce our joint conclusions later this summer.

Rose Theatre

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider scheduling the recently discovered site of the Rose theatre in Southwark in view of the imminent threat from developers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 May 1989]: The question of scheduling will be kept under review. Given the developers' strong commitment to preserve the remains the priority is for all parties concerned urgently to explore the best means of safeguarding them physically and the scope for providing public access in the future.

HEALTH

Health Service Income

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority and for England as a total, the amount of income to the National Health Service from (a) charitable appeals, (b) subscriptions, (c) donations and grants, (d) legacies, (e) dividends and interest and (f) the total trust fund income for the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: Information for 1987-88 (the latest year available) as shown in the annual accounts of health authorities and special trustees in England has been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Pollution (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will seek to reduce the pollution of the Bristol channel by co-ordinating those departments which authorise or control dumping of sewerage, chemical, agricultural, nuclear and industrial waste into the Bristol channel, together with control of dumping ships' refuse or the pumping out of tanks by ships in passage.

The Prime Minister: Departments with responsibilities in this field already co-ordinate their activities, and at national level policies to protect the marine environment are co-ordinated by the Department of the Environment. The Bristol channel, and all other United Kingdom coastal waters will benefit from the range of new initiatives adopted at the second North sea conference hosted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in November 1987. These are set out in the guidance note on the ministerial declaration published in February 1988, a copy of which is in the Library.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister whether the answer to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on Tuesday 16 May, Official Report, column 165, concerning EC funds includes bids made by local authorities for the European regional development fund; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes, all bids from local authorities and from other bodies are put forward in the name of the member state, and grants paid to local authorities count as part of the member state's receipts.

DEFENCE

Clyde Submarine Base

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many workers at the Clyde submarine base have been retired on medical grounds in each of the years since 1974.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is as follows:

Retirements on medical grounds

Year	Numbers
[1]1975	8
[1]1976	8
[1]1977	4
[1]1978	13
[1]1979	12
1980	9
1981	6
1982	11
1983	9
1984	15
1985	16
1986	37
1987	20
1988	17

[1] Figures for these years relate to industrial staff only.

Absent Without Leave

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers in the Queen's Own Hussars went absent without leave in 1987.

Mr. Neubert: Six.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will request the National Radiological Protection Board to produce an update of its report on the mortality of nuclear test veterans;

(2) if he will detail the nature of the work that is proceeding with the study by the National Radiological Protection Board of the mortality of nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Details of deaths of nuclear test veterans are currently flagged at the National Health Service central register and are passed to the NRPB. This information is then added to NRPB's database which maintains a record of all deaths and personnel present during the test programme together with the control group. The NRPB is examining the position this year (five years from the previous cut off date) and will advise whether the major effort of a full scale statistical analysis would be justified.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of officers in each of grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively, in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the form requested because records are held on a combined basis with the Department of Health. I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 22 March at column 679.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has conducted monitoring exercises in compliance with the code for the Commission on Racial Equality and Equal Opportunity Commission, respectively, separate from the Department of Health; whether his Department plans to do so; whether his Department plans to maintain records of the ethnic origins of its staff and officers separate from the Department of Health; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department will continue to pursue the equal opportunities policies and practices of the former Department of Health and Social Security. These follow the guidance in the codes of practice of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission and include the monitoring of personnel policies and procedures as set out in the codes of practice. Work is in hand to enable staff records, including ethnic origin data, to be separately identified from those for staff of the Department of Health.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many full-time workers are not in occupational or personal pension schemes; and what was the equivalent number in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1979, 11·8 million employees were not members of occupational pension schemes. Of these, 7·65 million were full-time employees.

Provisional figures for 1987 show that 11·4 million employees were not members of occupational pension schemes. This was of course before the Government's pension reforms took effect; since the introduction of personal pensions in July 1988, over 2 million people have opted to join a personal pension scheme. The number of full-time employees is not yet known.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage payments were made in 1985; and if he will categorise these according to the age of the child when the vaccination took place, the year of vaccination, and the nature of the vaccination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twenty-six payments were awarded in 1985 under the provisions of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Details are in the table.

Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme

Claims Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the Greenock and Port Glasgow offices of his Department the statistical information he has to date regarding the different reasons given by social fund officers for refusals to claimants for (i) budgeting loans, (ii) crisis loans and (iii) community care grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Provisional figures for the period 11 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 are set out in the table.

The table gives the number of times that a reason for decision is used by social fund officers for determining a nil award for community care grants, budgeting, and crisis loans.

An application can be refused for more than one reason. The total number of reasons for decision used will be equal to or greater than the number of applications refused. Information on the numbers of applications processed and awarded is available in the Library.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by each charging authority in England and Wales the income level at which (a) a single person aged under 25 years, (b) a single person aged over 25 years, (c) a single pensioner, (d) a pensioner couple and (e) a couple with two children all with no savings would lose entitlement to a community charge rebate, assuming the Department of the Environment's latest community charge figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 April 1989]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to amend the rule whereby the retirement pension is paid not from the day of retirement but from the first day of the week following retirement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so. The majority of new claims for retirement pension are paid from the Monday following retirement.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the composition of (a) the pensioners prices index and (b) the retail prices index.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply.

The price indices for one—and two—person pensioner households whose incomes are mainly comprised of state benefits are based on the expenditure patterns of such households and changes in prices across the full range of goods and services, with the exception of housing.

The general index of retail prices is based on expenditure patterns of all households, excluding the pensioner households above and the 3-4 per cent. of households with the highest income, and changes in prices across the full range of goods and services including housing.

More details can be found in "A short guide to the Retail Price Index", Employment Gazette, August 1987, pp 393-406.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEATH AFFAIRS

CSCE Human Rights Conference

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming CSCE human rights conference in Paris.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Paris meeting of the Conference on the Human Dimension (CDH) opens on 30 May and will last four weeks. Its main tasks will be to review human rights cases and situations in CSCE participating states as well as the working of the human rights monitoring mechanism agreed at the Vienna CSCE meeting.

CSCE Information Forum

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent CSCE information forum in London.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Information Forum, held at the Government's invitation in London from 18 April to 12 May 1989, was the first of the series of regular meetings in the Helsinki process following the third main CSCE follow-up meeting held in Vienna from November 1986 to January 1989. The forum was opened by the Prime Minister, and was attended by some 650 delegates from the 35 CSCE participating states. For the first time in CSCE meetings, all working sessions were open to the press and public.

Many personalities in the field of information participated in the forum. The British delegation was led by Lord Rees-Mogg, and included journalists, telecommunications experts, cultural personalities and academics, as well as a small number of Government officials. The forum was a success: it stimulated numerous direct personal contacts between media experts from East and West; generated worthwhile ideas for future contact and co-operation; and welcomed the progress made towards greater freedom of expression in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe whilst exposing the Governments of those countries to demands for closer compliance with their commitments in the information field. Some 67 proposals for follow-up action (largely on improving working conditions for journalists) were tabled: they will go forward to the CSCE follow-up conference at Helsinki in 1992, and will meanwhile be studied by Governments.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Nasim Ahmed, who was born on 2 July 1965, and whose reference is IMM/84536 and A.421238, first applied to the British post in Islambad to enter the United Kingdom; when Mr. Ahmed successfully appealed against refusal to grant him entry; and when the British post in Islambad was instructed to issue Mr. Ahmed with a visa to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to the reply, 16 May 1989, col. 135]: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people on work-related Government employment and training programmes by sex, in each of the standard regions and Wales, for each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Lee: The estimates of participants in work-related Government training programmes as included in the work force in employment statistics published in the monthly labour market press notice and Employment Gazette are given in the following table. They include those participants who in the course of their participation receive training in the context of a workplace but are not employees, self-employed or in Her Majesty's forces. The latest available figures are for December 1988.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the total number of registered vacancies as a percentage of the unemployment figure in each standard region and Wales for each of the years 1979 to April 1989, inclusive;

(2) what is the average number of vacancies in each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive, and for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Lee: The following is available from the Library. The tables show for each year from 1980 to 1988 and for each English region and for Wales and Scotland separately the average number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres, and the average level of unemployment. Also given are the corresponding figures for April 1989. Data for 1979 have not been given because vacancy figures for that year are not available on a comparable basis. All figures are seasonally adjusted, and the unemployment figures allow for changes in coverage.

It is not valid to compare ratios of unfilled vacancies to unemployment, since roughly only a third of vacancies in the economy are reported to jobcentres, and this proportion will tend to vary over time and between regions.

[1] Figures are based on follow-up reports to advanced notifications of redundancies under Section 100 of the Employment Protection Act 1975 and are not comprehensive as employers are required to make advance notifications only where 10 or more redundancies are expected. Comparisons of trends over a long period of time should be treated with care.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list any reports commissioned by his Department which estimate (i) the projected size of the civilian work force in the 1990s, (ii) the projected size of the working population in the 1990s and (iii) the level of skills shortages in the 1990s.

Mr. Lee: The following publications are relevant:

(i) and (ii): "Labour force outlook to the year 2000", in Employment Gazette, April 1989.

(iii) "Review of the Economy and Employment 1988-89 —Volume 1: Occupational Assessment" and "Review of the Economy and Employment 1988-89—volume 2: Occupational studies", both produced by Institute for Employment Research, February 1989.

Skill Shortages

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give a detailed breakdown of skill shortages for each of the economic regions, Scotland and Wales for the years June 1979 to June 1988, inclusive;

(2) if he will identify by standard economic region and for Scotland and Wales, areas of skill shortages with reference to an occupational analysis of people in employment.

Mr. Cope: The detailed information is not available as requested.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of reports commissioned by his Department on (i) skill shortages and (ii) skill shortages and the anticipated impact of 1992 on sections of British industry.

Mr. Cope: My Department has commissioned the following surveys on skill shortages:

A survey on skill shortages in manufacturing conducted by the Confederation of British Industry to give information on skill shortages by industry category and occupation (annually 1984-1988, 1988 report due June 1989);

A study to be conducted by the Institute of Manpower Studies to monitor supply and demand for professional information technology skills (final report due summer 1989);

A survey of local government conducted by the Local Government Training Board to identify skill shortages in local government (report January 1988);

A survey of Bus and Coach industry conducted by Bus and Coach Training Ltd to identify training activity, skill shortages and training needs.

My Department has commissioned the following survey on skill shortages and the anticipated impact of 1992:

A study of employers conducted by IMS to look at employers' recruitment practices, skill shortages and the impact of 1992 (report due summer 1989).

In view of the importance of addressing local skill needs, as well as national ones my Department has also commissioned several pieces of research into skills issues and the impact of 1992 in areas such as Kettering, Tayside and Cambridgeshire.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

National Sheep Association

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the National Sheep Association; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I last met the National Sheep Association on 20 July last year to discuss the review of the sheepmeat regime. My officials keep in regular touch with the National Sheep Association on matters relating to the sheep sector.

Departmental Restructuring

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to restructure his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: I have already announced that the central veterinary laboratory and the veterinary medicines directorate are candidates for agency status. We are continuing to consider the application of the "Next Steps" report to other areas of the Ministry's work.

Public Houses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made recently on the question of the tennants' rights of public house landlords.

Mr. Ryder: The National Licensed Victualler's Association has discussed with me the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer, and I have ensured that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is aware of their views.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area has been removed from agricultural production under set-aside arrangements within each grade of agricultural land.

Mr. Ryder: Information is not collected on the breakdown of set-aside areas by grade of land.

SCOTLAND

Clyde River Purification Board

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the Clyde River purification board, the duration of appointment, and the body by which nominated.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State is responsible for appointing only one-third of the members of each river purification board, which he does, after consulting such bodies as he thinks fit, to represent the interests of agriculture, fisheries, industry etc. in the board's area. Of the rest, one-third are appointed by the regional councils wholly or partly within the board's area from among their own members, and the remaining third similarly by the district councils. Those appointed by the Secretary of State generally serve for a term of four years, but may be reappointed.

A list of the members of the Clyde River purification board appointed by the Secretary of State, showing the expiry date for each member's term of office and the body or bodies responsible for each nomination, is inserted in the table. The names and appointing authorities of the regional and district council members will be found on page 4 of the Clyde River purification board's annual report for 1988, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

Police (Death on Duty)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers in Scotland have lost their lives in the course of their duty during each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 1 January 1984 and 31 December 1988 four police officers died in the execution of their duty—two in 1985 and two in 1987. One of the deaths resulted from an accident during a mountain rescue and the other three from road accidents.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any items have been accepted in lieu of tax since he last made an announcement to Parliament.

Mr. Rifkind: Further to my statement of 20 April at column 254, I am pleased to announce that the following items have been accepted in lieu of tax:

Sir William Beechey, RA—Portrait of Rear Admiral Sir George Campbell.
Francis Cotes, RA—Portrait of Pryse Campbell.
Francis Cotes, RA—Portrait of Sarah Campbell.
Francis Cotes, RA—Portrait of Elizabeth Adams.
Francis Cots, RA—Portrait of John Campbell Hooke.
Francis Cotes, RA—Portrait of Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Campbell.
Sir Thomas Lawrence, PRA—Portrait of John Frederick, 1st Earl of Cawdor.
Sir Thomas Lawrence, PRA—Portrait of Elizabeth Cawdor.
Sir William Beechey, RA—Portrait of Lady Caroline Cawdor.

The portraits have been formally allocated to the national galleries of Scotland but, in accordance with the condition upon which they were offered, the paintings will remain on public display in situ at Cawdor castle, near Nairn.

Total amount of tax satisfied—£260,717.

Locate in Scotland

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of enquiries dealt with by Locate in Scotland, and the number of companies which subsequently located in Scotland for each of the years since its inception.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive information is not available in the form requested.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency to each of the parliamentary constituencies between 1979 and 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The information, which is available only from 1983-84, is as follows:

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency at constant factor prices for each of the years 1979 to 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Lang: The information at 1988-89 prices is set out in the table:

	£ million
1979-80	151·6
1980-81	154·8
1981-82	140·9
1982-83	165·4

1986-87	147·4
1987-88	145·2
1988-89	[1]142·7

[1] Provisional.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure at constant factor prices on each of the functional divisions of the Scottish Development Agency in each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Lang: Because of changes in agency structure over the years, it is not possible to provide information on expenditure by each functional division of the agency on a consistent basis.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the total amount of industrial factory space owned by the Scottish Development Agency on the latest date for which the information is available.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that at 31 March 1989 the Scottish Development Agency owned 1·62 million square metres of property.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the total amount of industrial space owned by the Scottish Development Agency which is occupied on the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that at 31 March 1989, 1·313 million square metres of property owned by the Scottish Development Agency was occupied.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Henry McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure of the Highlands and Islands Development Board in each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 9 May at column 408.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his official engagements on Sunday 14 May.

Mr. Rifkind: I had no official engagements on 14 May.

Rent/Mortgage Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans to introduce a rent/mortgage scheme to certain tenants in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes, and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 11 May at column 496.

Drinking in Public Places

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to state his intentions in regard to possible amendments to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976, including any steps he may contemplate in relation to drinking in inappropriate public places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The recent review of the 1976 Act has revealed a large measure of support for a number of the reforms canvassed in the consultation paper issued in 1986. Some of these are designed to enhance the more civilised regime which has developed since enactment of the 1976 Act, for instance to assist families—particularly in tourist and holiday areas—by introducing special children's certificates which will enable families to enjoy a pub lunch in suitable premises. We propose to legislate accordingly. Other provisions in the proposed legislation will be aimed at reducing unnecessary bureaucracy in the processing of licence applications, for example by enabling applicants to cover the issue of afternoon and Sunday opening in their initial applications. This again will be subject to suitable safeguards against abuse; and, in particular, we accept the clear majority view against any increase in Sunday hours for public houses.

Other provisions in this package will, however, remove the present prohibition on the operation of off-sales licences in Scotland on Sundays and will allow "tastings" on off-sales premises. We have also received many representations about the proliferation of regular late night extensions; and we propose a much tighter control in that regard, for example, by requiring that applicants shall show good reason why the particular locality needs or would benefit from such extension. We also propose a stricter regime by banning repeated applications within two years of any unsuccessful application; and there will be a number of amendments of a clarificatory or procedural nature. These provisions will be introduced when an appropriate legislative opportunity presents; and we shall, meantime, be very happy to consider any further representations about them.

Another area of concern has been the problem of drinking in public places. Following consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and chief constables, the Government have decided to allow an experiment by up to three local authorities in the use of byelaws to prohibit drinking in certain designated localities. The aim of the experiment, which will be carefully monitored by Scottish Office researchers over a two year period, is to see whether such a byelaw can usefully add to the powers already available to the police to deal with the nuisance and distress which can be caused by the anti-social and loutish behaviour of groups of people who over indulge in alcohol in certain public places. Consultation about the appropriate locations, are well advanced and a further announcement in that regard will be made in early course. We expect to be able to confirm bye-laws for the selected areas by the autumn of this year.

Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board (a) the square footage of unused properties and (b) the square footage or acreage of unused land and the estimated value of each category as a percentage of total land and property and as a percentage of the total land and property value of each board; and if he will make a statement as to his Department's policy on the sale of unused land and property.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 February 1989]: The information requested is not collected routinely and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. There were some 1,497 acres of surplus National Health Service property in Scotland—about 15 per cent. of the National Health Service estate. The information by health board is listed in the following table. My Department's policy is that surplus land should be sold as expeditiously as possible having regard to the state of the market and good market practice and normally on the open market for the best price or consideration obtainable. To encourage boards to identify and dispose of their unused property, I have arranged for them to retain all the income from such disposals between now and 31 March 1991 for use within their own area.

Lowland Airports Policy

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what analysis he has made of the consequences for the Scottish economy of (a) continuation of the present Scottish lowland airports policy and (b) a policy of allowing airlines to choose airports for use for long haul flights.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 May 1989]: In commenting to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on BAA's request for a review of the Scottish lowland airports policy, my right hon. and learned Friend took into account the effects on the economy as well as the environmental effects and other factors.

Female Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by year, for the last 10 years (a) in how many operations firearms were issued to female police officers and (b) in how many of these operations shots were fired by female police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 May 1989]: This information is not held centrally.

WALES

National Museum of Wales

51. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the National Museum of Wales to discuss its maintenance budget and acquisition budget.

52. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the director of the National Museum of Wales to discuss its staffing costs and acquisition budget.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales last met the president of the National Museum of Wales on 14 November 1988, when a range of issues including budgetary and financial matters was discussed. The director of the National Museum of Wales also attended this meeting.

Cottage Hospital (Caernarfon)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each of 1986, 1987 and 1988 (a) the percentage occupancy of beds and (b) the total number of casualty cases treated at the Cottage hospital, Caernarfon.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

	1986	1987	1988
Percentage occupancy of beds in all specialties	67	66	79
New minor casualty patients	1,262	1,047	1,526
Total attendances by minor casualty patients	1,869	1,824	2,738

Naval Nuclear Weapons (Accidents)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contingency plans his Department has for dealing with an accident involving any naval nuclear weapon in the course of non-operational activities including courtesy calls; and what specific arrangements apply to the port of Cardiff.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 10 May, at column 476.

Schools (Shotton)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Shotton county infants school to meet the parents and staff to receive a petition concerning the need for additional capitation allowances to enable the school to purchase essential materials for classroom activities.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no present intention of visiting Shotton county infants school. It would be more appropriate for the parents and staff of that school to express their views to the local education authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Venerable Edward Morgan VP School, Shotton, to meet the parents and staff to discuss the impact of local management of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Our officials have received copies of the local education authority's draft scheme for local management of schools and have discussed it with the authority's officials. I expect the authority's formal scheme to be submitted for my right hon. Friend's consideration in the next few months.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit St. Ethelwolds VP School, Shotton, to meet the parents and staff concerning the need for St. Ethelwolds to have a school hall and other extensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit St. Ethelwold's Church in Wales school, Shotton in the near future. A proposal for an extension of the schools, including a hall, is included in Clwyd education authority's bids for expenditure on building works at voluntary-aided schools in 1989-90. A decision on the voluntary-aided schools' building programme for 1989-90 will be made shortly.

Clwyd Local Education Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will make additional moneys available to Clwyd local education authority to enable the local eduation authority to increase its capitation allowances in its primary and infants schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The setting of capitation allowances for Clwyd schools is a matter for the education authority within its perceived assessment of the requirements of the different elements of the education service.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new moneys he will allocate to the Clwyd local education authority to enable the local education authority to increase the number of its full-time staff in high schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for the number of staff employed in secondary schools in Clwyd lies entirely with the education authority which sets staffing levels in line with its assessment of priorities within the education service.

Health Authorities (Building Programmes)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he proposes to meet the chairman of the health authorities of Wales to discuss their authorities need for more cash to meet their building programme deadlines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make additional allocations to the health authorities of Wales to enable them to begin their hospital building programmes on schedule;

(3) if he proposes to make additional payments to health authorities to enable them to meet the increased costs in building projects as a result of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met chairmen of district health authorities on 15 May when a range of matters concerning the White Paper "Working for Patients" was discussed. A date for the next meeting has yet to be agreed. My right hon. Friend has no plans to increase DHAs' capital allocations, other than for specific purposes to be announced in the course of the year. Welsh health authorities' discretionary capital allocations this year total £39 million, an increase of nearly 32 per cent. over last year; and we expect them to plan flexibly within the resources available for contingencies such as fluctuations in construction costs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the hospital building projects to be started in this financial year in Wales in each of the health authority areas, with likely starting dates and estimated costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The details requested, which are drawn from capital programmes produced by health authorities, are set out in the following table. They demonstrate a continuing commitment on the part of health authorities in Wales to enhancing and improving health care provision within their respective districts. They do not take into account capital investments on maintenance and upgrading work. Therefore, they represent only a small proportion of the overall capital developments planned by authorities in the coming 10 years.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 501, whether the woodland grant scheme applications at Maesllymystyn and Gesail Ddu are in respect of adjoining land.

Mr. Peter Walker: The proposed planting schemes at Maesllymystyn and Gesail Ddu are on the same hillside but, following the withdrawal of part of one of the schemes, are now approximately three quarters of a mile apart.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Department's spending on television advertising during the past five financial years is £20,000. This spending was in the financial year 1988-89 on the Welsh element of the misuse of drugs campaign.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the terms of reference of the current review of the bathing water compliance programme of the Welsh water authority, together with its timetable.

Mr. Grist: Water authorities have been asked to assess the feasibility and implications for investment and operating costs of bringing all identified waters up to standard.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Czechoslovakia (Human Rights)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the human rights record of Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We regularly receive letters from hon. Members and from members of the public on Czechoslovakia's human rights record, which gives considerable grounds for concern.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the imprisonment by the Czechoslovakian authorities of Mr. Ivan Jirous.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received a series of letters from hon. Members and from members of the public on the imprisonment by the Czechoslovak authorities of Mr. Ivan Jirous.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made by his Department to the Czechoslovakian authorities concerning the imprisonment of Mr. Ivan Jirous.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State stressed our deep concern at the imprisonment of Mr. Ivan Jirous to a member of the Czechoslovak leadership, Mr. Miroslav Stepan, when he called on 15 May.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining his Department's assessment of human rights in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We would like to see a substantial improvement in Czechoslovakia's unsatisfactory record on human rights. The Czechoslovak authorities have said they propose to bring their domestic legislation into line with their CSCE commitments. We urge them to do this without delay, and in the meantime to act in the spirit of those commitments.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he proposes to take to encourage the Government of Czechoslovakia to improve its record on human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall continue to raise abuses of human rights in Czechoslovakia with their authorities whenever necessary, and urge the Czechoslovak Government to fulfil their commitments and improve its record in this sphere.

European Community

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many proposals from the European Commission since the signing of the Single European Act have been as a result of requests from member states for action; how many proposals came from within the Commission itself; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Since the Single European Act, the Commission has brought forward 1,255 legislative proposals. There has been no major change in the number of annual proposals made since the SEA. The Commission does not, however, produce statistics distinguishing between those originating in the Commission and those on which proposals have been requested by member states.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress made towards achieving the objectives set out in the solemn declaration on European union made by Heads of Government at the Stuttgart summit.

Mrs. Chalker: The Community has agreed the Single European Act which, in accordance with the solemn declaration of Stuttgart, contains measures to complete the internal market, improve decision-making and make foreign policy co-operation more effective.

Philippines (Military Aid)

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total military aid to the Philippines in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not our practive to disclose the cost of assistance to individual countries.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total cost of military training provided for the Philippine Government; and in what form it is provided.

Mr. Waldegrave: Filipino students have attended a small number of British military training courses subsidised by Her Majesty's Government, including vehicle maintenance and security courses. It is not our practice to disclose the cost of assistance to individual countries.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the age group 16 to 24 inclusive, 25 to 34, 35 to 44, 45 to 54, and 55 and over were (a) full-time employees in employment, (b) part-time employees in employment, (c) self employed, (d) not included above and on YOP, YTS, CP, STEP, CEP or JTS or (e) not included in the above and undertaking full-time education or training, from spring 1979 for each year to spring 1988.

Mr. Lee: Available estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the following table:

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were unemployment rates by ethnic origin and sex for each standard region and Wales, for each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Unemployment rates by ethnic origin are available from the labour force survey for single years from 1983 to 1988 for Great Britain as shown in table 1. They are available for standard regions, Wales and Scotland averaged over three years as shown in tables 2-5; these averages produce more reliable estimates for ethnic groups than do data for a single year. Further, estimates are not shown in the tables where they are based on small samples.

Unemployment Insurance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "Insurance for Unemployment" by Michael Beenstock and Valerie Brasse of the City university.

Mr. Lee: A copy of "Insurance for Unemployment" by Michael Beenstock and Valerie Brasse is held in the Employment Department library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the London School of Economics discussion paper, "The Mirage of Private Unemployment Insurance" by Nicholas Barr; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A copy of "The Mirage of Private Unemployment Insurance" by Nicholas Barr is held in the Employment Department library. It has always been a policy of the library to obtain any material relevant to my Department's areas of interest.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 28 April, Official Report, column 690, what countries in the Council of Ministers favoured deferring implementation of the European Economic Community directive giving part-time workers the same legal rights as full-time workers.

Mr. Cope: The Council of Ministers last considered the draft directive on voluntary part-time work in 1987. The draft directive was not adopted. Proceedings in the Council of Ministers are confidential.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has yet received any advice from the Health and Safety Executive concerning safety measures for workers in the slaughtering and butchery trade who may come into contact with bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected products.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's field staff is available to give advice to employers and employees when necessary on any health risks associated with cattle, their carcases and their products which may be infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE). I understand that, in the light of the report of the Southwood working party on BSE, the executive has established a task force on occupational zoonoses (ie diseases which may be transmissable from animals to man). As part of its remit, the task force is considering what further action may be necessary in respect of occupational health and safety aspects of BSE.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance currently exists to occupational groups involved with handling of cattle or cattle products in the light of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Nicholls: Advice on safety precautions to be taken has been issued to the Health and Safety Executive's inspectors for dissemination either on request or during the course of their visits to those dealing with cattle and animal products. It covers basic hygiene principles which are considered appropriate for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Cope: The total amount spent by my Department on commercial television advertising for each of the past five financial years is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	[1]3·7
1987-88	3·0
1986-87	9·3
1985-86	nil
1984-85	nil

[1] Estimated out-turn. Includes employment service expenditure.

Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total amount of money spent on work-related Government training schemes in each of the years 1983-88 inclusive.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The expenditure by the Government on work-related training programmes in Great Britain in the relevant financial years is as follows:

Year to 31 March	£ million
1983-84	837
1984-85	999
1985-86	1,042
1986-87	1,135
1987-88	1,300

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive (Grants)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's grants offices the date of which approval for a grant would be issued for (a) an improvements grant and (b) a repair grant on an application received on 2 May.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I am advised by the chief executive of the executive that the information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. To prepare such detail would require a major exercise in each of the grants offices.

Taxi Service (Castlereagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the new taxi service operating from the vicinity of 231 Saintfields road, Castlereagh, has planning permission; how many taxis are based at this location; and whether there are adequate parking places for these taxis.

Mr. Needham: The taxi service is operating without planning approval. Enforcement action has commenced to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. Should this result in the receipt of a planning application, an assessment will then be made of the scale of operations intended.

Wild Birds (Conservation)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to meet his obligations with respect to the designation of special protection areas under article 4 of the EC Directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds; and if he intends to include sites at Upper Lough Erne and Lough Neagh.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is giving priority to the designation of Areas of Special Scientific Interest under the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. Where ASSIs are also potential special protection areas under EC directive 79/409, the Department will proceed towards SPA declarations as soon as is practicable after ASSI confirmations.

It is expected that a small number of SPAs will be declared during the next two years, and Lough Neagh and parts of Upper and Lower Lough Erne will be among the areas considered for early designation.

Health Board Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by each health board for each year since 1979 the numbers of staff expressed as a whole-time equivalent and as actual full-time and part-time members in the categories (a) ancillary, (b) administration and clerical, (c) nurses and midwives and (d) professional and technical.

Mr. Needham: The information is set out in the table.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for each year since 1979 (a) each hospital closed completely and (b) each hospital closed partially; and if he will break that list down by each health board.

Mr. Needham: (a) The information is set out in the table:

Year	Eastern	Northern	Southern	Western

(b) There are no records of partial closures in Northern Ireland until last year, when a partial closure of Dalriada hospital in the northern board area was affected.

Capital Projects (Health Boards)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of each capital project costing more than £1 million (a) actually under construction and (b) at the proposal or planning stage; if he will give the estimated date of completion for each project; and if he will break this list down by each health board.

Mr. Needham: The answer is as follows:

(a) Schemes under construction

	Planned Completion date
Northern Board
Holywell Hospital, Antrim—refurbishment of fire safety systems	November 1990
New 313-bed Acute Hospital, Antrim	January 1993
Southern Board
Provision of a new 72-bed Geriatric Unit and 30-place Day Centre, Armagh	June 1989
Eastern Board
Mater Infirmorum Hospital, Belfast—new block	October 1989
Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children—refurbishment of wards	June 1989
Musgrave Park Hospital, Belfast—provision of a new 72-bed Geriatric Unit	January 1990
Western Board
Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, Omagh—upgrading of mechanical and engineering services	December 1990

(b) Schemes in planning:

Southern Board
St. Lukes Hospital, Armagh—provision of new Psychogeriatric Unit
105 place Adult Training Centre for the mentally handicapped, Armagh
105 place Adult Training Centre for the mentally handicapped, Newry

Eastern Board
Area Store
Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast—extension of cardiac surgery facilities
Royal Maternity Hospital, Belfast—Neonatal Intensive Care Unit
Ulster Hospital, Dundonald—extension of out-patients department; provision of laboratory facilities; X-ray facilities
Mater Infirmorum Hospital, Belfast—upgrading of engineering services
Belfast City Hospital—external works
Edgcumbe Adult Training Centre, Belfast

Western Board
Gransha Hospital, Londonderry—provision of 120-bed Geriatric unit

(c) Other schemes proposed and being considered:

Northern Board
Whiteabbey Hospital—72-bed ward unit
New Antrim Hospital—Laboratory facilities

Southern Board
Area Store

Eastern Board
Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service—replacement accommodation
Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast—new laboratories accommodation
Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children —replacement theatres and intensive care unit
—refurbishment of Out-Patients and A and E Department

The priority of all major schemes not under construction is currently under review and it is not possible at this stage to give planned completion dates for these schemes.

Health and Social Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each year since 1979 the total health and personal social sevices (a) current expenditure (gross) and (b) capital expenditure (net); and if he will give those totals adjusted by the HCHS pay and price deflator.

Mr. Needham: The table sets out gross current and net capital expenditure on health and personal social services in cash terms for the period from 1978-79 to 1988-89. The HCHS pay and prices deflator is an index of inflationary pressures on current expenditure in the hospital and community health services alone. It would be inappropriate, therefore, to apply the index to the total health and personal social services expenditure.

Year	Current[1] Expenditure (Gross) million	Capital[1] Expenditure (Net) million
1978-79	304	22
1979-80	369	26
1980-81	477	25
1981-82	540	26
1982-83	588	25
1983-84	634	26
1984-85	667	26
1985-86	701	24
1986-87	750	28
1987-88	810	30
1988-89[1]	892	32

[1] Estimated Outturn.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much advertising air time his office purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney (holding answer 15 May 1989): Information on television advertisements in the form requested is commercially confidential.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Numbers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many higher education students are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time study at (i) universities; (ii) polytechnics and (iii) other higher education institutions; what were the comparable numbers five, 10, 15 and 20 years ago; what is his estimate of parallel future numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Information is shown on the following table. Long-term projections were published in November 1986 in "Projections of Demand for Higher Education in Great Britain 1986-2000". The projections are regularly updated and the most recently published ones are given in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 612.

n/a = Not applicable. The OU first admitted students in 1970.

National Curriculum

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has plans to increase the numbers of schools inspectors in connection with the establishment and operation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no plans to increase the number of Her Majesty's inspectors, but education support grant, made available by the Department, will support an increase in local education authority inspectors. Grant will support the appointment of one additional inspector by each LEA, except ILEA, in 1989-90. It is intended to make further support available up to 1993-94, resulting in a 10 per cent. increase on present numbers.

Higher Education

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were in higher education in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the comparative figure in 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: There were 968,000 students in higher education in Great Britain in 1987-88, compared with 766,000 in 1978-79.

Higher Education (Principals' Salaries)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the gross salaries of the principals of each of the public sector higher education institutions (i) on 1 January and (ii) on 1 May.

Mr. Jackson: By public sector higher education institutions I assume that the hon. Member is referring to institutions funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

The Department collects information each autumn on the salaries of individual directors and principals of PCFC institutions as part of the administration of the teachers superannuation scheme and for statistical purposes. However, publication of the information, which is collected purely for pensions and statistical purposes, would be incompatible with the terms on which it is registered under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Teachers' Pay Award

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects local education authorities to begin paying the 1989-90 teachers' pay award to teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: Many teachers are likely to receive their salary increases by the end of May.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to sign the necessary orders to bring the 1989-90 teachers' pay award into operation.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes to make the order by the end of May.

Geological Survey

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to reduce or withdraw direct funding to the British geological survey in relation to its core programme of long-term projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Funding of the British geological survey is the responsibility of the Natural Environment Research Council from the council's allocation from the science budget. In my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 7 November 1988 at columns 2-3, he announced that he had made available in 1989-90 an additional £3 million for the NERC for the BGS core programme, with planning additions of £4 million and £5 million for the following two years. He also said that further work was needed to define the survey's core programme, having regard to the priority needs of users and to examine the financial funding arrangements, including the charges for goods and services. This further work will be taken into account in this year's public expenditure survey.

Animal Encephalopathies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is aware of any research, past or current into the transmissibility of animal encephalopathies to man; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Research relevant to the possible transmissibility of animal encephalopathies to man has been reviewed in the report of the working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy, chaired by Sir Richard Southwood, and published in February 1989. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Bushloe High School

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the staff and governors of Bushloe high school, Wigston Magna, Leicester, on the key issues in the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will ensure that there is no delay in the publication dates of certain key information packs, particularly those related to the science curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 19 May, I received a letter forwarded by my hon. Friend from the head teacher of Bushloe high school, supporting the 1988 Act and seeking early delivery of certain National Curriculum Council publications. I will be replying to him shortly. Our aim is to equip schools with the necessary material as far as possible in advance of implementation of the national curriculum requirements. The statutory documents for science were laid before Parliament in March and then distributed to schools. The council's complementary non-statutory guidance for teachers is being printed and should be sent direct to all schools around the end of May.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a provisional esimate of common agricultural policy market support expenditure in 1988-89.

Mr. MacGregor: Provisional outturn for class IV, vote 1, is £180 million, which is a saving of £379 million against the supply estimate provision. Excess appropriations in aid of £507 million are being surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. The total expenditure provision, which is expressed net of receipts for intervention sales and levies etc. in the supply estimate was £1,552 million, while estimated outturn was £1,173 million. The outturn figures on a commodity basis are:

£ million

	Supply-estimate	Outturn	Difference
Cereals	350	195	−15
Milk	295	124	−171
Beef	244	190	−54
Oilseeds	176	178	+2
Sheep	228	265	+37
Sugar	148	117	−31
Others	112	105	−7
Total	[1]1,552	[1]1,173	−379

[1] Total figures do not equate because of roundings.

A number of external factors, such as market prices, levels of production, exchange rates and trade volumes affect expenditure on this vote. The more significant factors affecting expenditure in 1988-89 were the drought in the United States, the increasing strength of sterling and lower than expected cereals yields in the United Kingdom in 1987 and 1988.

The largest savings were on purchases into intervention of cereals (£147 million), following two successive relatively low United Kingdom cereals harvests, and butter (£107 million). The reduction in butter purchases can be attributed to additional savings to those forecast as a result of the policy changes made to the milk regime in December 1986, which had a greater impact on intervention than had been anticipated. The other major saving in total expenditure arose from £98 million additional receipts for sales out of intervention of cereals, butter and beef. The excess appropriations in aid largely consisted of receipts from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund for depreciation of new stocks on entry to intervention and for depreciation of old intervention stocks which took effect from 1 October 1988.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Goodman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to re-introduce a scheme of de-commissioning of fishing vessels under EEC regulation No. 4028/86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The reintroduction of a decommissioning grants scheme is one of a number of options which could contribute towards a reduction in the size of our fishing fleet, but before we would be prepared to consider such a step we would need to be satisfied that it would provide value for taxpayers' money and that there were no better alternatives.

Hedgerows

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how may farmers have sought his Department's advice on hedgerow management in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is not available.

Business Initiatives

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what future initiatives he is planning to implement the policies outlined in, "Lifting the Burden" and "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department's current work programme on these policies is set out in paragraphs 6.11.1 to 6.11.7 of the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise". In addition, MAFF is actively participating in the wider initiatives described in "Releasing Enterprise", notably the programme for improving understanding between Government and business and the deregulation rolling review programmes, the first of which was announced by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs in his written reply of 31 January. More generally, my Department aims to promote efficient and competitive agriculture, sea fisheries and food and drink manufacturing and distribution industries by encouraging enterprise and better regulation, better relationships and better service.

Deregulation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the initiatives he has taken to implement the policies outlined in "Lifting the Burden" and "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The contribution of my Department to the Government's deregulation policy since the publication of "Lifting the Burden" and "Building Businesses . . . not Barriers" is set out in the progress report on deregulation "Encouraging Enterprise" published in May 1987 and in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" published in November 1988.

Tobacco (EC)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the amount spent by the EEC in subsidising the production of tobacco and in storing and disposing of surplus production; what were the comparable totals in each of the past five years; and if he has received any proposal from the EEC Commission designed to reduce the expenditure in the tobacco industry.

Mr. Ryder: Expenditure on the CAP tobacco regime as requested is as follows:

Year	Total Cost (mecu)	Premia (mecu)	per cent.	Export Refunds (mecu)	per cent.	Intervention (mecu)	per cent
1984	776	712	92	36	4	28	4

[1] estimate

The Council of Ministers has approved the Commission's proposal for an agricultural stabiliser system for tobacco, which will reduce prices and premiums for the 1989 and 1990 harvests by up to 15 per cent. If prescribed levels of production are exceeded. We have keenly supported this development, which is in line with our policy of seeking to reduce expenditure on this regime through reorientation of production away from the less-marketable and higher tar varieties.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department was first notified of the existence of a scrapie-like disease occurring in cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Through the animal health surveillance activities and the vigilance and expertise of veterinary scientists at MAFF veterinary investigation centres and the Central Veterinary Laboratory, bovine spongiform encephalopathy was first identified as an entity in November 1986 Research carried out between CVL and the neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh has confirmed that bovine spongiform encephalopathy is similar to a group of spongiform encephalopathies, including scrapie in sheep.

Tyrrell Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the work currently being undertaken under the auspices of the Tyrrell committee.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Committee was set up to advise on the research work now in progress and on the future priorities for research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. The Government will be considering the committee's conclusions in due course.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence to suggest that spongiform encephalopathies in animals can be identified by post-mortem histological examination prior to the onset of clinical signs in the live animal.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The research consultative committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. David Tyrrell, is currently considering various research projects including a proposal to investigate the relationship between the onset of clinical symptoms of bovine spongiform encephalopathy and the occurrence of lesions in the brain.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the incidence of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each county of England and Wales for the four week period ended 19 May.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is given in the table.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the existence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the United States of America.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not aware that any cases of BSE have been recorded in the United States of America.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations or procedures are currently in force in the United Kingdom to ensure that meat and bone meal contaminated with the agent responsible for the outbreak of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the United Kingdom is not exported to other countries for inclusion in cattle rations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 8 March, at column 533.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received concerning the level of infectiousness of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle prior to the onset of clinical symptoms of the disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 March, at column 513-4.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he, or any of his Ministers, were advised prior to the publication of the Southwood report, by any member of the Southwood committee that 75 per cent. was the appropriate level of compensation in respect of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tests his Department has conducted during the last 12 months on samples of animal protein for use in cattle rations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry conducts a wide range of analyses on animal protein to assess nutritional values or levels of contamination. Those carried out on protein for use in cattle feeds cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring or testing for bovine spongiform encephalopathy is now being conducted on the progeny of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle; and whether he has any intention of introducing controls on the movement of such progeny.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry has taken powers to control the movement of progeny, though I have no plans to use these powers at present. The identities of the progeny of affected animals are being recorded, which will enable further investigations to be made if any of these are subsequently notified as suspect cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy. The Ministry has also accepted the recommendation of the Southwood working party that a study be carried out to determine whether maternal transmission can take place.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of bovine spongiform encephalopathy cases confirmed to date in each of his Departments veterinary investigation centres.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Before bovine spongiform encephalopathy became a notifiable disease on 21 June last year, histopathological examinations of brains from suspected animals were carried out at the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge, and at other Ministry establishments. Since 21 June last year, diagnoses have been carried out at nine veterinary investigation centres. The number of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy confirmed by each centre is as follows:

	Number
Cambridge	466
Carmarthen	487
Newcastle	132
Polwhele	663
Reading	491
Shrewsbury	654
Starcross	497
Thirsk	552
Wye	66

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether bovine spongiform encephalopathy has yet been reported in any European Economic Community member state other than the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Animal Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those products sold to the general public during the past 20 years derived from animals being treated with pharmaceutical products under an animal test certificate granted under the Medicines Act but prior to the granting of a product licence.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since animal test certificates were introduced in 1971, trials have been authorised in all major animal species. Products from such animals will have been marketed except when it was a condition of the ATC that they should not be.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the recommendations of the Preston report on conditions in slaughterhouses and the action taken by his Department in respect of each.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Copies of the report and of the Government's response, which was announced on 15 October 1987, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Of the recommendations which the Government accepted, meat inspection procedures in non-exporting and exporting plants were broadly aligned by the Meat Inspection Regulations 1987 and the Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1987. We have already announced that ante-mortem inspection of animals in non-exporting premises is to be introduced from 1 January 1991. The system of regional liaison meetings envisaged in the report has been established and is proving to be of value.

In accordance with Community measures which have been adopted since the publication of the Government's response to the report, new arrangements for meat inspection charges are to be introduced from 1 January 1991. The Community has also agreed on arrangements for collecting information on diseases found at slaughterhouses which should be passed back to those resonsible for production. Detailed rules for the implementation of these arrangements throughout the EC have yet to be determined. The Commission is developing proposals on the duties and qualifications of inspection personnel in slaughterhouses. Further measures to align standards in all plants will be developed, having regard to decisions in Brussels on the arrangements to be adoped for the completion of the single market.

Ruminant Feedstuffs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to enforce his ban on the inclusion of ruminant derived protein in cattle rations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 9 March, column 620.

Icelandic Fish

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to monitor the quality of containered and fresh Icelandic fish imported into the United Kingdom; and to what European Community standards of grading it is subject.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Fresh and chilled fish imported into the United Kingdom is required to be graded in accordance with Council regulation (EEC) No. 103/76 as amended, which lays down common standards covering size and freshness grades for the main species marketed in the Community.

Our sea fisheries inspectorate checks that fresh and chilled Icelandic fish displayed for sale by auction at ports is in accordance with the Community's grading requirements. Also, the local port health authorities separately monitor the quality of fish for public health purposes.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of fish landed and sold at Lowestoft, Hull, Grimsby, Peterhead and Aberdeen for February, March and April has come from Icelandic container vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompson: While sales of Icelandic container fresh and chilled fish are recorded at Hull and Grimsby, where the bulk of such fish is marketed, the percentage figure requested cannot be derived from available information.

Porcine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he authorised the sale for public consumption of animal products produced with the aid of porcine somatotropin under an experimental licence.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 18 May 1989]: No. It was a condition of the animal test certificate that no treated animals were to be offered for slaughter for human consumption.

Veterinary Staff

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vacancies there have been at the veterinary officer grade in each service in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 18 May 1989]: The number of vacancies at veterinary officer grade in the Ministry's state veterinary service in each of the last 10 years is:

	Number
1980	50	(9)
1981	40	(7)
1982	37	(2)
1983	42	(–)
1984	47	(1)
1985	61	(1)
1986	58	(3)
[1]1987	21	(5)
1988	21½	(3)
1989	27½	(7)

Notes:
(a) Figures in brackets relate to the veterinary investigation service, which is part of the state veterinary service.
[1] Agricultural Development and Advisory Service economies and improvements in efficiency announced in 1986 included a reduction of posts in the state veterinary service.

ENVIRONMENT

Sea Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has issued any guidelines to local authorities in England which border onto the Irish sea concerning the reduction of pollution levels in that sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The control of most land-based discharges of pollutants entering the sea is the primary responsibility of water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to ban all dumping at sea of raw sewage and dangerous chemical wastes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The disposal of waste at sea from ships, other than operational discharges, is licensed by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to take place only where he is satisfied that disposal will not put at risk the marine environment. Similar responsibilities are exercised by the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

In the case of industrial waste, following the second North sea conference in London in November 1987, hosted by my right hon. Friend. the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Government's guidance note on implementation of the declaration announced a review of all outstanding licences. Ths review is being carried out jointly by the Fisheries Departments and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to examine whether there are practicable disposal options for the waste on land. So far, 20 approvals for dumping of liquid industrial waste have been reviewed in detail and either withdrawn or the company has indicated a firm intention to terminate. In the case of the remaining 10 approvals, further discussions are now under way into the practicability of disposal on land without causing harm.

In the case of sewage, licences are granted only for the dumping of sewage sludge, and only in cases where, having considered land-based alternatives, it has been assessed as representing the best practicable environmental option. In line with the ministerial declaration of the second North sea conference, the United Kingdom is implementing restrictions on the loads of persistent toxic substances in sludge to ensure that their total quantities do not exceed the levels discharged in 1987.

Child Abuse

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for each local authority in England functioning as a social services authority, the amount by which its rate support grant for the year 1989-90 was increased to take account of its need for resources to cope with the increase in child abuse referrals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Rate support grant is unhypothecated and provides support for local authority spending on all services. It is not possible to show how much RSG is paid in support of a particular aspect of social services provision. RSG is, however, distributed in accordance with the Government's assessment of individual local authorities' need to spend, including their need to spend on all aspects of social services. Provision for local authority current expenditure on social services for children aged 0 to 17 for 1989-90 is £1,201 million, an increase of £120 million, 11·1 per cent., over provision for 1988-89. In addition, this year the aggregate of Exchequer grant paid to local authorities includes a specific grant of £7 million to support the costs of training social services staff working with children and their families.

Playing Fields

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to safeguard playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities are generally best placed to make judgments on land use and are primarily responsible for making such decisions in their own area. In exceptional circumstances the Secretary of State for the Environment may choose to intervene but only where issues of more than local importance are involved. Nevertheless, the Government have urged local authorities to take into account the needs of the wider community and to consult local sport and recreation interests before allowing recreational land to be developed.

Community Charge

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the notional community charge for the London borough of Ealing; what was the notional community charge for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative community charges have been published for 1985-86 to 1988-89. The figures for Ealing (disregarding the transitional safety net) are

1985-86	172
1986-87	164
1987-88	278
1988-89	234

The figure for 1988-89 is, of course, affected by rate capping.

UN Environment Convention

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to implement in his Department the United Nations environment programme global convention.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 10 May at columns 433-4.

Air Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the resources requirement of local authorities for the new controls over air pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The consultation paper issued in December 1986 estimated that the new local authority system would add £0·5 million to current expenditure. This recognised that the system would involve a reallocation of resources within environmental health departments. These departments are already responsible for control of air pollution from most of the processes involved, but have to use the less satisfactory combination of clear air and statutory nuisance controls. In April this year the Department issued a consultation paper on cost revovery charging for integrated polluton control (IPC). This paper proposed introducing a charging system for local authority control of air pollution compatible with the charges to be made by HMIP for exercising IPC. The volume of local authority resouces needed will be reviewed further in the light of responses received.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preparations are in hand to ensure effective implementation of the new controls over air pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The national air pollution inspectorates are already well equipped to implement their part of the proposed new system. As for the local authority part, a committee representing local authority associations and national pollution inspectorates (IPLA) has been set up to provide guidance to local authorities on the proposed new air pollution controls and to ensure consistency of enforcement both among local authorities and between them and the national inspectorates. It will also advise on related matters, such as training. A local authority unit has been set up within HMIP to service IPLA and to prepare authoritative guidance on the control of particular processes.

Pollution Inspectorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the resource needs of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution for integrated pollution control.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Preliminary assessment of the resources necessary for integrated pollution control suggested that the net increase solely attributable to integration would be in the order of three additional inspectors and two support staff. We expect there to be a temporary increase in the workload on the inspectorate whilst the new system is introduced. We will continue to keep under review the objectives of the inspectorate and the level of resources required to fulfil its functions.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an up to date list of the present offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, together with the addresses and telephone numbers of the new regional offices and outstations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The present offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are as follows:

We are currently reorganising the fieldforce of HMIP on an integrated basis to produce a much more effective deployment of resources. A three region structure is being developed covering the north, south west and south east, in each of which there will be a regional headquarters' office. The existing air district offices will initially be retained as outstations of the regional offices.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an update of the current staffing list of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution including administrative support.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 31 March 1989, 194 staff were in post in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Their grades are as follows:

Water Privatisation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals there are for informing local authorities of their responsibilities for monitoring water quality after privatisation.

Mr. Howard: We propose to issue a circular to local authorities in due course.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from manufacturing industries regarding possible effects of privatisation of the water industry on manufacturing industry; what matters of concern they have expressed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Organisations representing manufacturing industry, including the Confederation of British Industry, have commented on a wide range of water privatisation matters, which are being considered in the context of the Water Bill currently before Parliament.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the subject of water charges following privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Howard: Most of the letters that the Department has received about charges after privatisation have sought clarification about the arrangements that will apply.

Standing Charges (Water)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when he next meets the chairmen of the water authorities, he will urge them to abolish standing charges on water bills for pensioner customers.

Mr. Howard: No. It is for the water authorities themselves to determine how they structure their charges.

Pensioners on low incomes are more appropriately assisted through income support.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following (a) the publication of the Select Committee on the Environment report on toxic waste and (b) the publication of the Government's response to that report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None, apart from requests as to the publication date of the response.

Football Spectators (Identity Cards)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters or other communications he has now received from the general public about the football spectators identity card scheme proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: By 16 May I had received 1,522 letters from hon. and right hon. Members, most of which included letters from their constituents, and 4,020 representations directly from members of the general public, about the national membership scheme.

Methyl Chloroform and Carbon Tetrachloride

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department has for controls on the production and use of the compounds methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Although methyl chloroform is significantly less damaging to ozone than the chorofluorocarbons (CFCs), its world-wide production is greater than for any single CFC. Production of carbon tetrachloride is lower, but its potential to deplete ozone is greater than that of the CFCs. Review panels on the science and effects of ozone depletion and on the technical and economic implications of controls are due to report later this year to the parties to the Montreal protocol, who will decide at their meeting in London next year on measures to strengthen the protocol, including the possible inclusion of additional substances.

Methanes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has commissioned any studies on the effects of methane on humans.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department plans to commence a two-year study this year on health risks associated with landfill practices, which will include the effects of methane.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will visit the Barky Thorpe road site in Leicester to discuss proposals to excavate methane generating rubbish.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to visit this site. Such matters are the responsibility of the local planning and waste disposal authorities.

Bridge Street (Subway)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's responsibilities for the subway under Bridge street.

Mr. Chope: The subway is leased by the Department to Westminster city council, which is responsible for its care and maintenance. I understand that the council is considering what works may be needed to stop water seeping into the subway. I will ensure that the hon. Member's concerns about the lack of cleanliness are drawn to the city council's attention.

Water Authorities (Land)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what area and proportion of the land owned by regional water authorities was compulsorily purchased.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available centrally.

Sea Mammals

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has assessed the risk of the bottle-nosed dolphin and the harbour porpoise disappearing as breeding species in British coastal waters; and whether the level of harmful chemicals existing in the bodies of those remaining is the major cause of this decline.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Available evidence based on sightings and strandings of these species, including that compiled by the United Kingdom cetacean group, indicates that there has been a decline in these species in United Kingdom coastal waters. It is not possible to say how far pollutants or other factors such as changes in fish stocks may have contributed to this. The Department of the Environment, together with other interested Departments and agencies, is considering further research to improve our knowledge of the questions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Recruiting Policies

78. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies his Department has made into the effectiveness of the recruiting policies adopted by (a) national savings and (b) other similar agencies.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend keeps Civil Service recruitment policy under continuous review.

Privatisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state in current prices the total proceeds to the Exchequer from privatisation since 1979; and if he will estimate the likely proceeds from the privatisation of the water and electricity industries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The net proceeds for privatisation since May 1979 amount to some £24½ billion. This is £25·7 billion in 1987-88 prices (using the GDP deflator, which is not yet available for 1988-89 prices).

The proceeds and costs relating to the privatisation of the water and electricity industries will be announced in due course in the usual way.

Passenger Ferries (Safety)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what balancing charges he expects to recover from the seven passenger ferries which do not comply with the enhanced safety standards, and which their owners have declared to be uneconomic to repair.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I cannot comment on the tax affairs of particular individuals or companies.

Balancing charges are made to recover tax relief given for depreciation of a business asset which turns out to be greater than the depreciation actually experienced. The need to make such a charge depends on the precise circumstances of each case and, in particular, on whether the disposal value exceeds any expenditure on the ship which remains unrelieved for tax purposes.

Lloyd's Underwriters

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of indexed securities which fall within the provision of schedule 11 of the Finance Bill was purchased by Lloyd's Underwriters in 1986 and 1987 respectively.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Schedule 11 of the Finance Bill does not apply to securities disposed of or redeemed before 14 March 1989 or to gilts issued before that date. On the information and advice currently available, the Inland Revenue are not aware of any indexed securities purchased by Lloyd's underwriters in 1986 and 1987 which are chargeable to income tax under the provisions of schedule 11.

ENERGY

Fluid Burning

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what investigations or studies have been carried out by his Department into the Swedish fluid burning systems.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is aware of the main technical features of the Swedish fluidised bed combustion systems. It keeps in touch with the retrofit projects at small older power stations in Spain and the United States of America, and with progress with the Vartan plant in Stockholm, which combines power generation and district heating.

Amazonian Rain Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his replies, Official Report, 10 April, columns 563-64, if he will make a statement on the results of his meetings with the President of Electrobras on positive British co-operation with Brazil on problems of power station transmission, construction of nuclear power stations between Sao Paolo and Rio, and measures to protect the ecology of the Brazilian Amazonian rain forest.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At my meeting with the President of Electrobras, I explained the United Kingdom's plans for electricity privatisation and experiences in energy efficiency and offered further discussions with officials in my Department. Electrobras has not yet had an opportunity to take up this offer.

Potassium Iodate Stocks

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the total cost to the Central Electricity Generating Board of its current replacement programme of potassium iodate stocks at power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the CEGB and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Bold Power Station

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy to what extent cannisters containing radioactive waste are stored at Bold power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board that no canisters containing radioactive waste are stored at Bold coal-fired power station. However, on occasions new uncontaminated transport flasks are stored on the site prior to their transportation to nuclear power stations sites.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercal confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Parkinson: Expenditure by my Department on television advertising over the last five years has been as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	nil
1987-88	nil
1986-87	[1]16·3
1985-86	2·2
1984-85	1·3

[1] This includes expenditure of £13·5 million on the flotation of British Gas. All other expenditure in this and prior years is in connection with the energy efficiency campaign.

Director General of Electricity Supply

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Department of Energy if he will make a statement about the appointment of the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Parkinson: Subject to Parliament approving the Electricity Bill, I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland intend to appoint Professor Stephen Littlechild, currently head of the department of industrial economics and business studies at the University of Birmingham, to be the Director General of Electricity Supply. His formal appointment will be made as soon as possible after Royal Assent and will run initially for a period of five years.

The Director General will have a key role in making the privatised industry function in a competitive, customer sensitive way. He will be responsible for the price control formulae which will govern the supply and transmission of electricity. He will have a particular duty to promote the efficient use of electricity, reflected in a specific condition in the public electricity supply companies' licences. He will have a duty to foster competition and prevent discrimination. He must ensure that the relevant provisions of the Electricity Bill and various licences are observed and, if necessary, modified. He will be responsible for the consumer protection and representation arrangements, and for the electricity meter examining service which will be transferred to the Office of Electricity Regulation from my Department. He will also monitor the non-fossil fuel obligation and the operation of the fossil fuel levy in England and Wales.

Professor Littlechild has extensive experience of regulatory issues both in the United Kingdom and abroad. He has worked on the regulatory regime for British Telecom, has been a member of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for six years, and has a wide knowledge of regulatory systems both here and in the United States of America. He is admirably qualified for the post and my right hon. and learned Friend and I are very happy that he has accepted the job.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cyprus

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), Official Report, 9 May 1989, column 361, he will take steps to ensure that in future information is collected as to the destination and purpose of assistance given by the United Nations and its agencies to the different communities in Cyprus.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Nations agencies generally work through the Government of the Republic of Cyprus. It would not be realistic to seek a breakdown of the benefit of United Nations programmes to the Turkish Cypriot community. However, some programmes specifically directed toward this community are listed on page 121 of the "Register of Development Activities of the United Nations System, 1987," a copy of which is in the Library.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to respond positively to calls for Her Majesty's Government to increase financial support for the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government regard the Commonwealth Development Corporation's operations as an important part of Britain's overall development effort overseas, particularly in relation to the private sector. I propose to increase the level of aid loan support for the CDC by £21 million from £49 million in 1988-89 to £70 million this financial year; £20 million of this will be additional to the existing agreed aid provision.

PRIME MINISTER

General Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Prime Minister if the Jarman index is to be applied to Wales in the proposed general practitioners' contract.

The Prime Minister: This is currently being discussed between the Welsh Office and representatives of the medical profession.

Government Information Officers (Code of Ethics)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons she will not publish in the Official Report the text of Mr. Ingham's letter to Ms. Elizabeth Jenkins on a code of ethics for Government information officers.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to publish the official correspondence of members of my staff.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear Imports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what representations he has received from the British footwear manufacturers on proposals for action by the EEC Commission on imports from the far east; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has on the conclusions of the European Commission on the effects on Britain's footwear industry of the imports from the far east;

(3) what steps he has taken through the Common Market to reduce imports from the far east into Britain.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list in the Official Report the steps he has taken in the last 12 months to reduce imports from far eastern sources that are causing damage to the United Kingdom footwear industry;

(2) what steps he is proposing to take to encourage EEC officials to come to a conclusion and take action in relation to cheap imports of footwear to the United Kingdom, particularly from the far east, which were investigated in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission has conducted a Community-wide investigation into imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea. I have pressed the Commission to report its findings at the earliest possible date and we will consider what action to take immediately the Commission's recommendations are known.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the level of imports of shoes from Korea to Britain for each year from 1984 to 1988 and for each month in 1989;

(2) what was the level of imports of shoes from Taiwan to Britain for each year from 1984 to 1988 and for each month in 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the following table:

United Kingdom imports of footwear

£ million

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	January 1989	February 1989	March 1989
South Korea	28·3	28·0	33·0	50·9	76·2	6·8	6·8	6·8
Taiwan	51·2	49·2	47·1	69·9	74·6	7·7	7·2	6·5

Notes:
Footwear defined as Division 85 of Standard Internation Trade Classification Revisions 2 and 3.
1988 and 1989 data provisional.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list as a percentage, for each of the last 10 available years, imports of footwear into the United Kingdom as a proportion of all supplies to the home market.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports of footwear into the United Kingdom as a percentage of all supplies to the home market over the last 10 available years were as follows:

	Percentage
1978	30
1979	34
1980	35
1981	39
1982	42
1983	44
1984	47
1985	46
1986	45
1987	47

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the total level of imports of footwear from Taiwan (a) five years ago and (b) at the latest available date;

(2) what was the total imports of footwear from Korea (a) five years ago and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports of footwear from South Korea in 1984 were valued at £28·3 million; in the period January to March 1989, the latest information available, imports of footwear were valued at £20·4 million. For the same periods, imports of footwear from Taiwan were valued at: 1984, £51·2 million; January to March 1989, £21·4 million.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, as part of his consideration of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer, he will make it his policy to consider the introduction of a discount on the market price to encourage licensees and tenants to purchase their pubs.

Mr. Maude: We are currently considering a wide range of representations being made on this report and will announce as soon as possible the action we propose to take.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the balance of payments; current, visible and in manufactures, between the United Kingdom and (a) the whole world and (b) the total European Community, for the year 1988; and what was the balance of trade in manufactured goods between the United Kingdom and (i) the whole world, (ii) the total European Community, (iii) each member country of the European Community, and (iv) Japan, for the year 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates on a balance of payments basis for the United Kingdom current account, visible trade, and trade in manufactures, for 1988 are as follows:

Balance of Payments £ billion

	Current account	Balances Visible trade	Manufactures
World	−14·7	−20·6	−14·4
European Community	Not yet available	−13·5	−12·6

The balances of trade in manufactured goods for 1988 were:

European Mortgage Services

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received any complaints from the public concerning the collapse of European mortgage services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 May 1989]: The Department did not itself receive any complaints from the public concerning European mortgage services before the company was wound up in the public interest on 10 May. Since the winding-up order was made, some 80 claims for the repayment of deposits required by the company have been received by the Official Receiver.

Building Societies

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he remains satisfied that building societies should remain outside the ambit of the Financial Services Act's investor protection provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Any building society which carries on investment business in the United Kingdom must be either an authorised person or an exempted person under the Financial Services Act. In this respect their position under the Act is identical to that of any other person carrying on investment business. Certain requirements imposed by the SIB and the self-regulating organisations recognised under the Act do not apply to building societies—for instance, those relating to financial supervision and the coverage of the compensation scheme. The application of such provisions is a matter for the board or the organisation concerned.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to extend the Financial Services Act's investor protection provisions to cover building societies which become plcs under the Building Societies Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 May 1989]: A building society which becomes a plce and which carries on investment business is subject to the requirement to be authorised or exempted under the Financial Services Act in the same way as any other person carrying on investment business. The application to such societies of particular requirements of the SIB or a relevant self-regulating organisation recognised under the Act is a matter for the SIB or the organisation concerned.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Human Rights

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to incorporate into British law article 10 of the European convention on human rights, which guarantees freedom of expression and information.

Mr. Renton: No. I am satisfied that compliance with the provisions of article 10 of the European convention on human rights presents no difficulty under existing British law.

Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total (a) design capacity and (b) occupancy of all prisons in England and Wales; and if he will estimate to what length of sentence it would be necessary to go in order to reduce the number at (b) to that at (a), assuming that prisoners were released starting at those serving the shortest sentence and working towards those serving longer sentences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: ON 12 May, the total population of all prison service establishments in England and Wales was 49,100 and the total certified normal accommodation was 44,700—a difference of 4,400. On 31 March 1989, 3,900 sentenced inmates (10 per cent. of the total sentenced population) were serving sentences of six months or less.

Entry Visas

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from the Indian sub-continent have been refused entry to the United Kingdom because they did not have an entry visa since the change in the rules regarding visas in 1986.

Mr. Renton: Between November 1986 and March 1989 (the latest month for which figures are available) about 2,400 citizens of countries within the Indian sub-continent were refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom where the main or only reason for refusal was the absence of a visa.

Private Prisons

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has received on the possible effect that private prisons might have on the speed of new prison construction, efficiency, humane conditions and hygiene; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of the submissions made in response to the Green Paper "Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System" (Cm. 434) contained evidence about claimed benefits from such involvement. In the course of their study, which led to their report to the Home Office, made public on 1 March, the management consultants Deloitte, Haskins and Sells carried out extensive research to determine whether private sector involvement on the lines envisaged would be viable and beneficial. They concluded that, on certain assumptions and subject to further examination of certain issues, private sector involvement in the operation of new remand centres would be feasible and could provide scope for the cost-effective provision of a better standard of service than that now obtained. As my right hon. Friend announced on 1 March at columns 277-8, further work is now in hand to test those findings.

Magistrates' Clerks

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to alter the pay scales of magistrates' clerks.

Mr. John Patten: The national pay scales for court clerks are a matter for the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been convicted under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available centrally, which may be incomplete, indicates that one person was convicted in 1987 under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. In addition, in 1987 3,160 persons were convicted of drug trafficking offences under section 4(3) and 5(3) of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Cosmetics (Tests on Animals)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the total number of (a) guinea pigs, (b) mice, (c) rabbits, (d) hamsters and (e) dogs used in cosmetic testing in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is contained in table 2 (cosmetics and toiletries) of the annual "Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals, Great Britain" for the years 1983-86 inclusive (Cm. 9311, 9574, 9839 and Cm. 187), and in table 3 (cosmetics and toiletries) of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1987" (Cm. 515). Before 1987, hamsters were included in the classification "other rodents". Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Passports

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will provide extra staff for the Liverpool passport office to clear the current backlog of applications;

(2) if he will provide extra staff to ensure that people telephoning the Liverpool passport office have their calls answered.

Mr. Renton: Yes. Additional staff have been employed to help deal with the backlog, and the telephone system has been improved to increase the number of incoming calls that can be handled. A system of free two-year extensions to the life of expired passports is being introduced to help relieve the immediate problem.

Police Numbers

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police there were per 1,000 members of the population in 1959 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information, based on establishments of forces in England and Wales on 31 December 1988, is as follows:

Year	Police officers per 1,000 of population
1959	1·73
1988	2·46

Albany Prison

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long Mr. Dean Miles (2672) has been held in the segregation unit at Albany prison; whether there is any intention of charging him with any criminal offence; and for what reason he is held there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Miles was removed from the segregation unit at Albany prison on 3 May, when he was transferred to Wandsworth prison. It is for the prosecuting authorities to decide whether Mr. Miles will be charged with any criminal offence.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been held in the segregation unit at Albany prison for (a) three months or more, (b) four months or more, (c) five months or more and (d) six months or more.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the past 12 months, the following numbers of prisoners at Albany have been removed from association with other prisoners in their own interests or in the interests of good order and discipline:

Period	Number
(a) for three to four months	8
(b) for four to five months	2
(c) for five to six months	2
(d) for six months or more	Nil

Of these, one prisoner at present in the segregation unit has been held there for just over three months.

Police (Exchange of Information)

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what general guidance has been given to chief officers of police by the Chief Inspector of Constabulary, on the subject of the exchange of information on criminal cases on a police-to-police basis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Home Office circular 17/1989, issued in February, provides guidance to the police on communication with police forces abroad. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

INFORM

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy, when reviewing grant-aid for INFORM, to refuse further funds if there is evidence of material supporting cults and material produced by cults being supplied to inquiriers without the source being disclosed;

(2) if he will make it his policy, when reviewing grant-aid to INFORM, to refuse further funds if there is evidence of active support of cults by its members;

(3) if he will make it his policy, when reviewing grant-aid for INFORM, to refuse further funds if there is evidence of its members accepting hospitality from cults;

(4) what restrictions regarding involvement with cults were placed on its members when agreeing to grant-aid INFORM.

Mr. Hurd: The grant paid to INFORM (Information Network Focus on Religious Movements) is to assist it in its work of providing impartial information about cults. No formal conditions relating to INFORM's operational methods have been attached to the payment of the grant. INFORM tells me that it has such contact with cults as is necessary to enable it to carry out its functions as a research and information network; such contacts may include accepting hospitality, but INFORM will accept no money from the cults and no members of the Governors or staff may be members of a cult. I do not therefore propose to introduce any formal conditions at this stage, but I shall continue to keep INFORM's performance under review.

Computers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the functions of the Home Office large major enquiry system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office large major enquiry system is a computer system which was developed to assist the police service in the investigation of major crimes. A typical system consists of three modules: an index of names, addresses, telephones, vehicles categories and sequences of events; a document and action management system; a free text retrieval and typing system.

Information can be exchanged between systems in different forces by means of tape transfer. The Home Office has set up a central facility which forces can use if an investigation outgrows the capacity of a force system.

DEFENCE

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the staff of the Defence Export Services Organisation are seconded from industry; and what their functions in the organisation are.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are four members of staff within the Defence Export Services Organisation who have been seconded from industry.

(a) The Head of Defence Export Services is responsible for undertaking all necessary actions within Whitehall and in our relations with other governments to encourage and promote the sale of British defence equipment overseas where these offer the prospect of benefits commensurate with the risks involved.

(b) The strategic planning officer is directly responsible to the Head of Defence Export Services for developing, co-ordinating and monitoring the Defence Export Services Organisation's planning activity and for providing aid, advice and assistance to British industry on strategic planning and on the long-term geographic opportunities in the world defence market.

(c) The post of international finance adviser exists to enhance the expertise of the Defence Export Services Organisation in the field of international credit arrangements for defence exports and thus contributes to the range of support provided by the Defence Export Services Organisation to overseas sales by the British defence industry.

(d) The business development adviser's central task is to advise the Defence Export Services Organisation on the methods of identifying and exploiting new opportunities for defence export business.

Women Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the two women in grades 1 to 4 are in grades 1, 2 and 3 respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is one woman in the Ministry of Defence at grade 3.

Teachers

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to introduce formal union recognition arrangements for locally entered teachers employed on British bases in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Any claim that a union or staff association might make for formal recognition would be considered in the light of the Ministry of Defence's normal policy and criteria.

Junior Leaders

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on junior leaders who seek a discharge from the armed forces (a) during their period of service and (b) upon attaining their 18th birthday; and if he has any plans to review this policy.

Mr. Neubert: Junior leaders have the right to claim their discharge free of cost at any time after 28 days and before the end of six months after joining for duty at their training units. If discharge is not claimed during this period, junior leaders are required to serve for a minimum of six years after their 18th birthdays. However, on reaching the age of 18, they are given the option to reduce their engagements to three years.

Former junior leaders can apply for premature voluntary release on payment after completing three years service with their adult units. However, those who reduce their commitment to three years will not normally be released until they have honoured their reduced commitment in full.

There are no plans at present to review this policy, which reflects both the requirement for stability in manning the Army and the need to ensure a return on the high costs of initial training.

HMS Cardiff

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the weapons carried on HMS Cardiff on her forthcoming courtesy visit to Cardiff.

Mr. Hamilton: It is not our practice to disclose the weapons carried on individual HM ships at specific times and locations.

Naval Accidents

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans his Department has for dealing with an accident involving any naval nuclear weapons in the course of non-operational activities including courtesy calls; and what specific arrangements apply to the port of Cardiff.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 10 May at column 476.

University Students

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many students at UMIST and University college London are on courses sponsored by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD does not sponsor courses at either university, although it does fund the chair of naval architecture at University college, London, and provides the professor and his supporting academic staff.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Neubert: Annual expenditure on television advertising over the past five years is as follows:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	Nil	0·044	0·005	0·0005	0·0005

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Divorce Notifications

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General if he intends to take any action to prevent divorce notifications in newspapers containing the reasons for a divorce; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: To provide protection against divorces being granted where the facts required by law do not exist, Parliament provided in section 9 of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973 that any person may show why a decree nisi of divorce should not be made absolute. To that end, the evidence and facts pleaded in support of a divorce petition are available to the public either through a hearing in open court or by allowing them to examine the certificate of the decree nisi and the filed evidence. Although the press are restricted in what they may report by the Judicial Proceedings (Regulation of Reports) Act 1926, they may among other things, report the names and addresses of the parties and the statutory facts on which the petition relies. Given the policy underlying section 9, it would not be appropriate to impose any greater restriction upon what the press may publish. The Law Commission is, however, reviewing the law relating to the grant of divorce and the Lord Chancellor has made arrangements for this matter to be drawn to its attention.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff have joined the Crown prosecution service in the last six months who were formerly magistrates' clerks.

The Attorney-General: During the latest available six month period, from 1 November 1988 to 30 April 1989, 38 staff commenced employment with the Crown prosecution service having previously been magistrates' clerks.

THE ARTS

National Museums and Galleries

60. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the state of repair of the buildings of the national museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: The national museums and galleries which I sponsor provide information on the state of their buildings in their corporate plans which are updated each year and which I and my officials discuss with them.

61. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on staffing costs as a percentage of total running costs in the national galleries and museums.

Mr. Luce: As an average, staffing costs for national museums and galleries represented 73 per cent. of total running costs for the year 1988-89.

65. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the education budgets of the national galleries and museums.

Mr. Luce: Education is very much a part of the function of the national museums and galleries and one to which they attach great importance. Details of their activities are contained in their trustees' reports, which are publicly available.

69. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission to discuss the acquisition, maintenance and staffing budgets of the national museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission quite frequently and on a wide range of subjects which have included matters raised in the commission's May 1988 report on the national museums.

70. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to ensure that museums and galleries have adequate resources for structural maintenance to ensure adequate safeguarding of their collections.

Mr. Luce: I recognise this as a priority area and have made substantial increases in the provision for building and maintenance work at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor. The current year's provision of £48 million represents a 50 per cent. increase in real terms since 1979-80. Further increases will bring the figure to £55 million by 1991-92.

British Theatre Association Library

59. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a further statement on the rehousing of the British Theatre Association library.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to say that the British Theatre Association has accepted the generous offer of Mr. Robert Holmes a'Court to provide both premises for the association in central London and financial backing to enable it to continue its operation on a firm basis. I was pleased to have been able to provide the association, through the British Library, with professional advice on its library operations, and I have contributed £25,000 towards its transitional costs.

Museums (Building and Maintenance Costs)

62. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what increase in provision has been made in the last four years for the building and maintenance costs of museums.

Mr. Luce: A number of changes have been made in the method of funding the building and maintenance programmes of the national museums and galleries in the last four years but, comparing like with like, there has been a 23 per cent. increase in cash terms in provision over this period.

Government Contribution

63. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the Government contribution to the arts in 1989, and what it was in 1979, in real terms.

Mr. Luce: In the financial year 1989-90, the central Government programme for the arts will be £439 million. The corresponding figure for 1979-80, at 1989-90 prices, is £316 million.

Tate Gallery

64. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the Chairman of the Tate gallery to discuss its staffing cost and maintenance budget.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest. I look forward to meeting the chairman and director shortly to discuss the Tate gallery's future plans.

Museums (Private Income)

66. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will estimate the private income generated by museums in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The national museums and galleries estimate that they will generate over £26 million in private income in 1989-90.

Tate Gallery of the North

67. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on staffing and on the acquisition budget available to the Tate gallery of the north in Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: There are 55 staff at the Tate gallery, Liverpool, 33 of whom are warders. The gallery does not operate a separate acquisition budget from that of the main Tate collection.

Northern Ballet

68. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the latest information he has on the funding of the Northern Ballet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend for Stockport (Mr. Favell) earlier today.

Incentive Funding

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister for the Arts what return from the private sector has been achieved as a result of his incentive funding scheme.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) earlier today.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ministers' Private Secretaries

75. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service, pursuant to his oral answer of 24 April to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, column 654, what representations he has received from the First Division Association concerning pressures on Ministers' private secretaries (a) to sanction the release of official information other than by conventional means and (b) to seek means to avoid parliamentary scrutiny of ministerial actions.

Mr. Luce: None, Sir.

Morale

76. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will meet the general secretary of the NUCPS to discuss Civil Service morale.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans at present to meet the NUCPS.

Agency Employees

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many civil servants are employed in the Civil Service agencies announced so far.

Mr. Luce: There are just over 6,000 staff working in the five agencies which we have already established. A further 36 activities, including three in the Northern Ireland Civil Service, have been announced as candidates. These cover nearly 200,000 civil servants or about a third of the Civil Service.

SCOTLAND

"Assessment of Achievement—Twists in the Numbers Game"

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department's library has a copy of "Assessment of Achievement—Twists in the Numbers Game" published in the Times Educational Supplement Scotland on 21 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Yes.

The assessment of achievement programme's central support unit at the Scottish Council for Research in Education, which is responsible for the sampling design and analysis of results for the 1988 assessment of achievement programme methematics project, responded in a letter to the Times Educational Supplement Scotland of 28 April 1989 rejecting the claims of bias made in the article on 21 April and emphasising, contrary to what the article suggests, that the definition of the population tested was identical for 1983 and 1988. Moreover, in The Scotsman of 25 April 1989, the director of the Scottish Council for Research in Education stated:

"It would be nonsense in our view to say that there has been no drop in performance".

The article to which the hon. Member refers is an unwarranted attack on the independence and integrity of reputable research organisations with proven expertise in assessment and testing. The author appears to misunderstand entirely the objectives and functions of the assessment of achievement programme.

The hon. Member, as reported in The Scotsman and the Times Educational Supplement Scotland casts aspersions on the work, reputation and uprightness of The Northern college of education and The Scottish Council for Research in Education. The facts of the situation are that the whole of the research process in the assessment of achievement programme—the design and conduct of the survey, the sampling of pupils, the administration of the tests, the marking of the tests and the analysis of the results contained in the published report—was carried out by the Northern college and the Scottish Council for Research in Education. The published report is the work of these independent institutions; it was right to alert both parents and the education community to the interim findings and to make them publicly available as soon as was practicable.

Central Institutions and Colleges of Education

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give at constant prices the Department's grant towards recurrent expenditure paid to each central institution and college of education for each of the years 1978-79 to 1988-89, inclusive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for the central institutions and colleges of education funded by the Scottish Education Department is set out in the tables:

Figures for colleges of education for 1980-81 to 1986-87 include overseas students, but exclude students enrolled for non-teacher training courses as this is not available on a consistent basis (there were 788 students on these courses in 1988-89).
Hamilton College amalgamated with Jordanhill, Calendar Park and Dunfermline with Moray House, Craiglockhart and Notre Dame to become St. Andrews and Aberdeen and Dundee to become Northern.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of part-time students enrolled at each central institution and college of education for each of the years 1978-79 to 1988-89 inclusive, excluding those on in-service courses at colleges of education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table. Consistent information is not available for colleges of education, or for the years 1978-79 and 1979-80 for central institutions.

Central institutions	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89

The figures cover vocational and non-vocational courses. Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh and Glasgow College of Technology entered the central institution sector in 1985-86, and Leith Nautical College left the sector in 1986-87.

Employment Training

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of staff involved in monitoring fraud by employment training scheme management agencies and employers in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Employment training is delivered through Training Agency area offices each of which has a team, backed up by a professional adviser in the office for Scotland, responsible for the monitoring of monies paid out against contracts. Adequate staff resources are deployed to investigate irregularities and allegations of fraud as necessary.

Radioactivity (Venison)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list results for the radioactive monitoring of (a) deer, and (b) goats for each year since April 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 May 1989]: There is regular monitoring of venison in dealers' stores on an all-Scotland basis. Goatmeat is not consumed in significant quantities and we have accordingly not thought it necessary to institute a programme of monitoring of this meat.

The results of the monitoring of samples of venison are set out in the table:

Venison (Becquerels per Kilo Cs 134 + Cs 137)

	0-500	500-1,000	1,000-2,000	Over 2,000
1986	50	9	5	1
1987	113	28	13	2
1988	100	4	1	—

These results do not give cause for concern since a person would require to eat more than 40 kg of venison at a level of radiation of 2,000 Bq/kg to come near to the levels at which, under international recommendation, action to restrict consumption should be considered.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he is issuing concerning the safety of eating venison contaminated with radioactivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 May 1989]: The levels of radioactivity in venison, coupled with the relatively low consumption of this meat by the general public, do not warrant advice against eating venison being given to the public at large.

It is conceivable that a small number of forestry, estate and other workers, might eat large amounts of venison at the top end of the radiation levels identified. Even at that level the risk would be very small indeed. An individual would have to eat about 40 kg of venison a year at a level of 2,000 Bq/kg to come near to the levels of dose at which, under international recommendation, action to restrict consumption should be considered.

Advice was issued in 1987 and 1988 to forestry, estate workers and others eating venison in quantities considerably higher than average on a regular basis that they might wish to consider eating less venison as a precautionary measure.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what measures he is taking to ensure that radioactive (a) goatmeat, and (b) venison are not entering the food chain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Not much goatmeat is eaten in Scotland, the goat population mainly being kept to supply milk and fibre. Most goats are kept on low ground and inbye land where radioactive caesium from Chernobyl fallout is not readily available for ingestion by grazing animals. Accordingly no specific measures relating to the consumption of goatmeat are considered necessary.

Regular samples are taken of venison in dealers' stores on an all-Scotland basis so that the levels of radioactivity in venison destined for human consumption may be monitored. No unacceptably high levels of radioactivity have been detected in this continuing monitoring programme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Short Money

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much Short money has been paid to the Opposition parties in the last five years.

Mr. Wakeham: The total amount of Short money paid to Opposition parties in the past five years is £3,518,503·75p. A breakdown for each year is as follows:

1984	454,749·76
1985	631,091·00
1986	631,598·75
1987	597,741·27
1988	1,203,322·97

HEALTH

Homeless People

77. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to hold any discussions with the Salvation Army and other similar organisations on social service aids for homeless people in Greater London and other major cities who are not temporarily resident in officially designated homeless accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans at present for discussions, but if the Salvation Army's recent survey has produced information which would help to direct social services more effectively to homeless people in the category described I—and the authorities immediately responsible —would be pleased to have it.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics his Department keeps regarding patient waiting time to see a hospital consultant on referral by a general practitioner.

Mr. Mellor: None. Information on waiting times of out-patient referrals is not available centrally.

Hospital Treatment (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received in-patient treatment at Bolton hospitals in 1988; and what were the comparable figures during each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table.

In-patient cases treated, Bolton District Health Authority, 1982 to 1987-88

Year	In-patient cases treated
1982	32,598

West Lancashire District Health Authority

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in 1988-89 and 1978-79 by the West Lancashire district health authority as in-patients, out-patients and day patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The latest year for which data are currently available is the financial year 1987-88. The available information is given in the table.

Patients treated in NHS hospitals, West Lancashire District Health Authority 1978 and 1987-88

	1978	1987-88	Percentage change 1978-1987-88

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he is making for the early provision of soluble CD4 for patients with HIV once the outcome of trials taking place in the United States is known.

Mr. Mellor: No medicinal produce may be marketed in the United Kingdom until licensed. Where this is justified on public health grounds a licence application may be fast tracked to ensure that the product can be marketed with minimum delay if it meets licensing requirements.

Drug Prices

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the purchase price paid by the National Health Service for (i) Acupan Tabs, 90 and 30, (ii) Adalat 5mg Caps, 100 and 40, (iii) Adalat 10mg Caps, 100 and 50, (iv) Adalate 10mg Caps, 90, (v) Adalat AR 20mg Tabs, 100 and 50, (vi) Adalat LP 20mg Tabs, 30, (vii) Adalat Retard, 50, (viii) Aldactone 100mg Tabs, 100 and 20, (ix) Aldomet 250mg Tabs, 100, (x) Aldomet 500mg Tabs, 100, (xi) Allegron 10mg Tabs, 100 and (xii) Allegron 25mg Tabs, 100; and how much in cash terms of each drug was dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what is the purchase price paid by the National Health Service for (i) Alrhumat 50 mg Caps, 100, (ii) Amoxil 500 mg, 100, (iii) Androcur 50 mg Tabs, 100 and 50, (iv) Artiflam 200 mg Tabs, 60, (v) Avlocardyl Ret Caps, 28, (vi) Azantac 150 mg Tabs, 60 and 30, (vii) Becotide, 1, (viii) Benortan Suspension, 300 ml, (ix) Blocadfren 10 mg Tabs, 100, (x) Brufen 400 mg Tabs, 100, (xi) Canestan Cream (Blue Pack), 30 g and (xii) Canestan Cream (Red Pack), 20 g; and how much in cash terms of each drug was dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors in the last year for which figures are available;

(10) what is the purchase price paid by the National Health Service for (i) Trasicor 80mg Tabs, 100 and 40, (ii) Trasicor Ret 160mg Tabs, 28, (iii) Triludan Suspension, 200ml, 120ml, (iv) Ventolin Inhaler (boxed), 1, (v) Ventolin Pouch, 1, (vi) Vermox 100mg Tabs, 6 and 10, (vii) Vermox Suspension, 30ml, (viii) Viskaldix Tabs, 28, (ix) Voltarene 25mg Tabs, 100 and 30, (x) Voltarene 50mg Tabs, 100 and 30, (xi) Voltarene LP 100mg Tabs, 28 and 15, and (xii) Voltlen Ret 100mg Tabs, 28 and 10; and how much in cash terms of each drug was dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors in the last year for which figures are available;

(11) what is the purchase price paid by the National Health Service for (i) Zaditen 1mg Caps, 60, (ii) Zantac Tablets 150mg 60 and 20, (iii) Zarontin 250mg Caps, 50, (iv) Zovirax 200mg Tabs, 25, (v) Zyloric 100mg Tabs, 100 and 50, (vi) Zyloric 300mg Tabs, 30 and 28 and (vii) Zyloric 100mg Tabs, 25; and how much in cash terms of each drug was dispensed by retail pharmacy contractors in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The price paid for medicines prescribed by their proprietary name and dispensed by pharmacy contractors is the manufacturer's list price. These prices are published from time to time in the British National Formulary, a copy of which is in the Library. Where no list price is available the price paid is the price which the pharmacist has had to pay.

The net ingredient cost of prescriptions written using the names of the products in respect of which information is requested and dispensed by pharmacy contractors in 1987 is contained in a list which has been placed in the Library.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decisions have been taken as to whether speech therapy services will be classed as core services; and whether such decisions will be made centrally.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply on 7 February to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) at column 640.

GPs (Home Visits)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many home visits he estimates are made by the average general practitioner; to what extent he expects that number to increase as a result of revision of the general practitioners' contract; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested, based on the small sample used for the general household survey, is estimated as follows:

England

	Average list size	Number of Home Visits
1979	2,286	1,320
1987	2,020	1,290

Although under the new contract for GPs we expect patients aged 75 and over to be visited annually as part of their general health assessment, this requirement need not be carried out by the GP personally.

Prescribing Budgets

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds he intends to make available in 1990-91 to the regional health authorities to cover the administrative and computer technology costs of introducing indicative prescribing budgets.

Mr. Mellor: We have made quite clear that we will meet the necessary additional costs of implementing the indicative prescribing budget scheme.

It is premature to state what funding will be made available to regional health authorities since we are engaged in discussions with various interested parties about how the scheme should be implemented.

Snapethorpe Hospital, Wakefield

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department instructed the Wakefield district health authority to draw up plans for the building of houses on the site of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Freeman: I know of no such plans. If permanent closure of Snapethorpe is agreed by Ministers it will be for the district health authority in consultation with the regional health authority, to decide upon its disposal or future use.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the site value of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Freeman: The district and regional health authorities, in consultation with the district valuer, and taking account of future use potential, are responsible for assessing the site value.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations and individuals have objected to the proposed closure of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Freeman: Details are given in the document "Responses to the Consultation Document, Officer Comments and Recommendations" put to the 30 September meeting of Wakefield health authority. This is available from the health authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of patients treated in Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Snapethorpe Hospital—Deaths and Discharges

	Chest Diseases	Geriatrics	Mental Illness	General Medicine	Pre-Convalescent	Total
1979	288	—	22	13	26	349
1980	245	33	16	—	—	294

[1] to 31 March 1984

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department instructed the Wakefield district health authority to withdraw from discussions with the Wakefield metropolitan district council regarding the possibility of a scheme of joint use of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to discuss with Wakefield district council its proposals for the future use of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield, before any decision is made by his Department regarding its closure.

Mr. Freeman: I am aware that the district health authority has had meetings with the district council and will have taken the council's views into account in putting forward closure proposals. I have however, already agreed to meet the hon. Member to discuss the matter.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to visit Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield, before any decision is made by his Department regarding its closure.

Mr. Freeman: The hon. Member's suggestion is noted. I shall consider it on its merits before any final decision is taken.

National Health Service Capital Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide figures for National Health Service capital expenditure in each year since 1975 in 1988 prices, excluding the effect of asset disposal and realisation.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is shown in the table:

NHS capital expenditure (England)—Net of Capital Receipts at 1988 prices

£ million

Year	Net of capital receipts at 1988-89 prices[1]
1974-75	967
1975-76	1,039

Infant Care Programme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to district and regional health authorities about the provision of breathing monitors and scales for mothers involved in the care of the next infant programme.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has not issued specific guidance to regional and district health authorities about the provision of breathing monitors and weighing scales for mothers involved in the care of the next infant (CONI) programme, which is run by the Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths. However, the third report of the maternity services advisory committee on the care of the mother and baby, which we have commended to health authorities, advises that, in regard to babies considered to be at risk of unexpected death, detailed attention should be paid to weight gain and to early symptoms of illness or signs that something may be amiss.

North Devon District Hospital

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration has been given to the impact on continuity of patient care of the proposed closure of 25 acute psychiatric beds at weekends within the North Devon district hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the projected savings resulting from the proposed closure of 25 acute psychiatric beds at weekends with the North Devon district hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No decision on this management option has been taken by the North Devon health authority.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to introduce five-day-a-week wards similar to those proposed at the North Devon district hospital in other parts of the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the possibility of converting one or two wards in the North Devon district hospital to a five-day week is an option that is being examined, but on which no management view has yet been taken. Local bed management is a matter for individual health authorities.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received concerning the legality of charges imposed on patients since 1 May 1989 by North Devoon health authority for hospital transportation to take patients to hospital for treatment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the legality of car parking charges to be imposed at the North Devon district hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. It is for health authorities to take appropriate legal and other professional advice on local management decisions. However, no charge is made for the transportation of patients to hospital if it has been prescribed by a doctor as clinically necessary.

Bexley Health Authority

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Bexley health authority worked with Bexley London borough in ensuring that the contract to provide accountancy services to Social Policy Management Services Limited, awarded to Auckland Goddard Hampson and Swain (Chartered Accountants), was put out to tender.

Mr. Freeman: Decision on accountancy services is entirely a matter for Social Policy Management Services Ltd.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have been recorded annually in recent years of women under the age of 20 years from cervical cancer.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

[1] Assigned to the International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 8th and 9th revision code 180.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford on 4 May, Official Report, column 230, what estimates he makes of the reduction of deaths from cervical cancer if the frequency of cervical smears was reduced from five years to (a) three years and (b) two years; what are the cost implications of this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Estimates made by the Department of Health cancer screening evaluation unit would suggest that, in comparison with screening every five years, cervical smears taken every three years between the ages of 20 and 64 could reduce by some further 7 per cent. the number of deaths which would otherwise occur from cancer of the cervix at an additional cost of somewhat over £22 million per annum. Screening every two years would reduce the number of deaths by an additional 1 or 2 per cent. at a further additional cost of some £28 million. These estimates are based on a hypothetical 100 per cent. acceptance of screening. Since we know that the majority of women who die from cervical cancer have never been screened, we have recommended to health authorities that increasing the proportion of women being screened regularly should take precedence over increasing the frequency of screening.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies are being undertaken to monitor the incidence of the retrovirus human T cell lymphotropic virus-1 in blood supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a rare infection in this country. The national blood transfusion service is preparing for a study to monitor the prevalence of this infection in blood donations. As part of these preparations, an investigation of the methods available for identifying the infection is underway.

Drug Supplies

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the total number of complaints registered against representatives of pharmaceutical companies in each of the last five years in relation to financial and other incentives offered to general practitioners for the prescribing of specific products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None. Pharmaceutical industry sales promotion conduct is regulated by the industry's code of practice. Complaints alleging unacceptable conduct are considered by the code of practice committee of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI). The Royal College of Physicians has issued advice on "The Relationship between Physicians and the Pharmaceutical Industry".

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is yet in a position to announce the composition of the NHS policy board and the NHS management executive proposed on the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am announcing today that the members of the board, which I shall chair, will be:

Sir Roy Griffiths (Deputy Chairman).
The Minister of State for Health.
The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Health.
Sir Donald Acheson Chief Medical Officer, Department of Health.
Sir James Ackers, Chairman of West Midlands Health Regional Authority.
Professor Cyril Chantler, Professor of Paediatric Nephrology at Guys Hospital.
Mrs. Julia Cumberlege, CBE, Chairman of South West Thames Regional Health Authority.

Sir Graham Day, Chairman of the Rover Group and Cadbury Schweppes.
Sir Kenneth Durham, Chairman of Woolworth holdings and Deputy Chairman of British Aerospace.
Sir Christopher France, CB, Permanent Secretary at the Department of Health.
Mr. Duncan Nichol, CBE, Chief Executive of the NHS Management Executive.
Sir Robert Scholey, CBE, Chairman of British Steel.

The policy board will determine the strategy, objectives and finances of the NHS in the light of Government policy, and will set objectives for the management executive and monitor whether they are achieved.

The NHS management executive members will be:

Mr. Duncan Nichol, CBE, Chief Executive
Mr. Graham Hart, CB, Director of Operations
Mr. Michael Fairey, Director of Information and Review
Ms. Sheila Masters, Director of Finance
Mr. Peter Wormald, Director of Personnel
Dr. Ron Oliver, CB, Medical Director
Miss Patsy Wright-Warren, Nursing Director
Mr. Bryan Rayner, CB, Director, Family Practitioner Services
Mr. Idris Pearce, CBE, Estates Adviser

The executive will deal with all operational matters relating to both the hospital and community health service and the family practitioner service, within the strategy and objectives set by the policy board.

"Working for Patients" emphasised the need to distinguish in our central management of the NHS between strategy—making clear the direction the Government want the service to follow—and the operational tasks involved in putting that strategy into practice. In other words, it is Ministers' job to set a framework of policies, priorities and resources and, within that, to leave managers to manage and to answer for their performance.

This is reflected in the different roles of the policy board and the management executive. I am delighted that, as chairman of the policy board, I shall be able to draw on such a wide range of experience and achievement and that the chief executive of the management executive will lead an equally strong team.

Syringe Exchange Schemes

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implications of the final report of the evaluation of 14 experimental syringe-exchange schemes.

Mr. Mellor: The evaluation points to some encouraging features of schemes, in particular the ability of some to attract significant numbers of injectors—many of whom have not been in contact with services before—and to help regular attenders make or sustain changes in risky behaviour. However, the research also shows that schemes have a high turnover of clients and are less good at attracting women, younger injectors and those with a short history of injecting drug misuse. They tend to attract those injectors who have already made, or are motivated to make changes in their behaviour.

We have concluded that exchange schemes and other measures to make sterile injecting equipment more readily available—such as, where appropriate, sales by pharmacists and provision by general practitioners in the context of treatment of drug misusers—can be potentially valuable components of the wider-ranging strategy we need to prevent the spread of HIV-infection amount and from drug misusers. This strategy must also include the development of readily accessible advice and treatment services where drug misusers can get help with drug problems, and with reducing their risk of acquiring or transmitting HIV-infection through drug using or sexual behaviour. At the same time, we continue to attach the utmost importance to tackling the misuse of drugs itself, both by the interdiction of supplies and through effective education and information to discourage young people from starting to take drugs.

We have increased to over £14 million the funds available to health authorities from 1989-90 for services for drug misusers, including measures to prevent the spread of HIV-infection, in order that such a strategy may be implemented. In Scotland and in Wales £2 million and £1·6 million respectively are being provided for this purpose. We will circulate the key findings of this recent research in order that they may be taken into account in planning and developing services.

Health Education Council

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the budget of the Health Education Council for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87, expressed as actual expenditure and as a percentage of total National Health Service spending for England.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 26 April 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

Health Education Council budget

Financial year	Actual expenditure £ million	[1]As percentage of total NHS spending for England Per cent.
1978-79	3·7	0·06
1979-80	4·5	0·06
1980-81	5·0	0·05
1981-82	6·6	0·06
1982-83	8·6	0·08
1983-84	9·3	0·08
1984-85	9·6	0·07
1985-86	10·1	0·07
1986-87	10·15	0·07

[1] Total NHS spending for England has been taken as the total revenue and capital expenditure of regional and district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals plus the expenses of the Dental Estimates board and the Prescription Pricing authority. The administrative expenses of family practitioner committees and their total expenditure on family practitioner services (net of patients' charges) have also been included. Figures used represent annual outturn figures, not adjusted for inflation.

Desiccated Liver Powder

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether desiccated liver powder is categorised as a food supplement or a pharmaceutical product; and whether he will make a statement about the importing of desiccated liver powder in relation to the Imported Food Regulations 1984.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 2 May 1989]: The decision whether desiccated liver powder is regarded as a food supplement or a pharmaceutical product for purposes of the imported food regulations rests with the port health authority responsible for the application of the regulations at the port of entry. It is for the authority to make this decision on the basis of the facts which are available to it at the time of import, relating to the end use of the powder.

Assistance

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state by rate of population per 1,000 by age group, for years 1980 to 1989, the number of cases of assistance to persons during the year provided by (i) Calderdale, (ii) Bradford, (iii) Kirklees, (iv) Leeds, (v) Wakefield, (vi) Oldham and (vii) Rochdale for (a) installation of telephone and attachments, (b) payment of telephone rentals, *(c)*installation of other communications equipment, (d) installation of television, (e) payment of television licence or rental, (f) supply of radio, (g) supply of personal aids, (h) adaptation to non-local authority property and (i) holidays.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 11 May 1989]: Tables showing available information in respect of year ended 31 March 1980 to 31 March 1987 have been placed in the Library. Information in respect of subsequent years has not been collected centrally.

Gynaecologists

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Trent regional health authority on the wording used in the advertisement for two consultant gynaecologists placed by the authority in the Lancet of 8 April.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 May 1989]: No. but officials have drawn to the attention of the regional health authority the guidance issued in 1975 and 1979 by the then Chief Medical Officer concerning advertisements for consultant posts in obstetrics and gynaecology.

NHS Review

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to the chairman of the Wakefield family practitioner committee on requests made to the chairman of the family practitioner committee to discuss the White Paper, "Working for Patients;" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 May 1989]: None, although the chairman did send me copies of a recent exchange of correspondence with the hon. Member. I note that the chairman offered to arrange a meeting between representatives of the committee and hon. Members representing local constituencies to discuss the future implementation of the White Paper, which is the task assigned to the committee. I hope that hon. Members will take up that offer and I am writing to the chairman to encourage him to pursue it.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department received a request for copies of the White Paper, "Working for Patients," to be supplied to members of the Wakefield family practitioner committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 May 1989]: Copies of the White Paper were sent to all family practitioner committees at the time of publication. It was for each committee to arrange its own internal distribution and to obtain any additional copies it might need.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received from the Wakefield family practitioner committee any proposals for a health profile giving details of demands on services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 May 1989]: No. We have recommended that all family practitioner committees should prepare a health profile of the area in collaboration with the district health authority as part of their own planning process. I understand that such a document in respect of Wakefield is in the course of preparation. We do not ask that the document should be sent to the Department except at the time of a performance review.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that treatment for IVF in the South West regional health authority area is available free of charge for patients living in north Devon as it is for patients living in Bristol.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 15 May 1989 c. 80-81]: I now understand that the infertility treatment available for a limited number of patients in north Devon is gamete intra fallopian transfer (GIFT) and not in vitro fertilisation (IVF) as previously stated. I am sorry we did not get this right.

TRANSPORT

Sir Keith Bright

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the terms on which Sir Keith Bright resigned from London Transport.

Mr. Portillo: The terms are still under discussion.

Roads Provision

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish his plans to involve the private sector in roads provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have today published, with the agreement of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, a consultation paper entitled "New Roads by New Means—Bringing in Private Finance". It covers England, Scotland and Wales. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Government are committed to providing a transport infrastructure suited to the needs of a modern economy. We showed that commitment in the plans contained in the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity", published on 18 May, which dealt with roads in England. The White Paper was largely concerned with publicly-financed road schemes, but the private sector is playing an important and growing role in providing transport infrastructure. I see great potential opportunities for the private sector to finance and build more of our roads and bridges, complementing our greatly expanded road programme. My aim is to make full use of the innovation, enterprise and management efficiency of the private sector in improving the road network and in providing better value for money for taxpayers and road users. Our consultation paper proposes a way forward.

We have already started. From the international partnership on the Channel tunnel to local partnerships with councils on road schemes, the initiative and flair of the private sector have been making their impact. We already have an example of the successful involvement of private finance in a major national road scheme. The Dartford-Thurrock bridge, the first privately financed road scheme this century, is our starting point. The private sector is also tendering for the second Severn bridge.

This is a new field. There have been uncertainties for potential promoters. The consultation paper addresses these issues. For example, it describes a new approach by the Government to the question of additionality—the possible effect of private financing on the Government's total roads expenditure, which has been of considerable concern to the private sector. We give the assurance that we will not subtract the cost of privately financed roads from public sector provision on a scheme-by-scheme basis. This decision on additionality reinforces our belief that private sector schemes will provide the opportunity for more roads than would otherwise have been built.

The Government are concerned to achieve the most cost-effective provision of roads. Where appropriate, this will involve comparing privately financed schemes with their public sector alternatives. In future, however, no such comparison will be required unless the road scheme concerned is already in the programme or enjoys a high degree of monopoly.

The consultation paper proposes measures to make it easier for roads financed by contributions from developers to be built. It also concludes that new procedures are needed to authorise privately financed tolled roads. It makes detailed proposals for those new procedures, which would require primary legislation.

Privately-financed tolled roads will take the form of concessions, broadly similar to those for the Channel tunnel and the Dartford-Thurrock bridge. I would usually grant a concession after a competition. Competitions will help to ensure the best value for road users. In addition, EC law will require that concessions should be the subject of competitions. For these reasons, exclusive rights will not usually be conferred on promoters; but commercially confidential innovations will be protected, and originators of ideas will be given a place on the short list for the competition.

There will be an order-making procedure to authorise the roads and the tolls to be charged. The promoter would ask me to make the necessary orders. Where there are objections, there would be public inquiries to ensure that full regard is paid to the environment, and to protect the rights of affected individuals. The promoter would consult widely before applying for the required orders. All relevant orders would be considered at the same inquiry.

The Government will keep up the momentum of the private finance initiative. "New Roads by New Means" announces our intention to establish an early competition for a privately financed scheme to increase road capacity in the Birmingham-Manchester corridor.

I can also announce today that I intend to hold a competition for the Birmingham northern relief road.

"New Roads by new Means" is a consultation document. We are asking for comments by 14 July. I want to encourage people with ideas to come forward and help me to take this exciting initiative forward, and so to improve the road network still more for industry and motorists.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport's planned expenditure on commercial television advertising airtime in 1989-90 is £1·7 million. This relates to our campaign against drinking and driving.

Our objective in buying airtime is to obtain equivalent "reach" in respect of our target audience in each of the television areas. Expenditure is proportionately higher in the south (the areas covered by Television South, London Weekend Television, Thames Television and Television South West) because the cost of airtime is higher.

I have already provided information on the Department's expenditure over the past five years, during which time the same principle of equivalent "reach" has applied.

Tankers (Kilbrannan Sound)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions his officials have made for allowing stricken tankers into Kilbrannan sound; what consultations were conducted concerning this matter with locally based commercial fishermen who fish the sound, before his officials took their decision; which other interested parties were consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In answer to the first part of the hon. Gentleman's question, no particular areas around United Kingdom are designated by the Department to be safe havens for stricken tankers and if a tanker is seriously damaged and needs shelter it will seek the nearest available. The Department holds general navigation details of the United Kingdom coast and such environmental details as is available. In the event of an incident it will advise and consult to the extent that time will allow all relevant local authorities before agreeing to or taking action to prevent, the tanker's intended movements.

Street Works (Horne Report)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to introduce legislation regarding street works arising from the Horne report and related initiatives.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As soon as there is suitable opportunity. Detailed proposals have been prepared and an opportunity is currently being given to interested parties to comment on them.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Transitional Payments

3. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider giving the full uprating to those still receiving transitional additions to their benefits.

4. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider giving the full uprating to those still receiving transitional additions to their benefits.

7. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider giving the full uprating to those still receiving transitional additions to their benefits.

19. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider giving the full uprating to those still receiving transitional additions to their benefits.

44. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will consider giving the full uprating to those still receiving transitional additions to their benefits.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans to do so. However, the House will know that when the additional help that we are giving to pensioners is introduced this autumn it will not affect the amount of transitional protection they are receiving.

40. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Leeds and (b) Wakefield lost transitional payment benefit from April 1989 for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March at column 445.

31. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people last month experienced the termination of transitional payment which they had previously received.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information will not be available for housing benefit transitional payments until the final closing date of 30 June 1989 has been reached and all applications have been received, assessed and payments made which are backdated to April 1988. To date, 184 people are no longer receiving transitional payments because their capital has increased to over £8,000 and payments have ceased for 72,234 people whose transitional payments were £2·00 per week or less, although their overall benefit income will have increased at April 1989.

An estimated 610,000 income support claimants ceased to need transitional protection following this year's benefit uprating. These people now receive more benefit income by way of income support than they got through supplementary benefit.

Benefits

6. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans for introducing new technology wall-mounted cash dispensers for benefit claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such plans but the Department will continue to examine whether such methods offer advantages over existing methods of payment.

26. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will meet benefit claimants in Nottingham, North to discuss the operation of the benefits system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

30. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what resources have been committed by his Department over the past year to ensuring that those eligible for benefits are aware of their entitlement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In financial year 1988-89, a total of £12·7 million was spent in promoting awareness of the Department's benefits. This sum includes advertising and publicity leaflets. In addition freeline social security offers a free general advice and information service on social security matters and is now receiving more than 900,000 calls yearly. The Department is currently running an advertising campaign, including television, to make people aware of their entitlement to family credit and to encourage them to claim. This campaign is costing £4·8 million.

Pensioners

13. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Fylde will benefit from the new benefits package announced last November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The new package will benefit some 2·6 million pensioners across the country. I regret that I am unable to provide separate figures for my hon. Friend's constituency.

36. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve the financial position of the retired and others dependent upon fixed incomes no longer entitled to benefit entitlements following the recent changes in the arrangements for social security payments and housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We undertook to monitor the effects of the reforms and as a result have already acted to improve the benefit position of certain vulnerable groups. Last April we acted quickly to raise the capital limit for housing benefit to £8,000 bringing 100,000 people (nearly all pensioners) back into benefit. Recently we announced further help for two particular groups. From October there will be improvements in income support and housing benefit for older and disabled pensioners; including husbands and wives some 2·6 million people will be better off as a result. From July certain 16 and 17-year-olds will benefit from changes to the income support rules and all 16 and 17-year-olds receiving housing benefit only will see an improvement in their benefit position.

46. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average level of Government financial support for pensioners in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Community.

49. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average level of Government support for pensioners (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social security spending in the United Kingdom on the elderly is currently approximately 5 per cent. of gross domestic product. Comparable figures for the other member states of the European Community are not available.

50. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men and women who will reach retirement age on or after 1 October will benefit from the abolition of the retirement pensions earnings rule.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are three main catetgories of people who will benefit from the abolition of the retirement pension earnings rule. Individuals who reach pension age on or after 1 October will be able to choose to receive their retirement pension and earn as much as they can, with no reduction in their state retirement pension. There are 200,000 individuals currently deferring receipt of their retirement pension and a further 2,500 individuals whose retirement pension is currently reduced because of earnings over £75 a week who will benefit. In addition, there are about 200,000 individuals who currently earn less than £75 a week who may choose from 1 October to earn more, plus a large number of people who are not earning at present who may now choose to start earning.

Claimants (Medical Examination)

14. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the circumstances under which long-term invalidity benefit claimants are referred for independent medical examination by his Department's divisional medical officers.

Mr. Scott: We are satisfied that the present arrangements, using independent doctors employed by the Department of Health, strike the right balance between the interests of the claimant and the need to ensure that benefit rules are fulfilled. In 1988, 55 per cent. of claimants referred to the regional medical service were found incapable of work without the need for them to undergo a further medical examination. I have no plans for a review.

Leaflets

15. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for social security leaflets have been met in the 48-hour turnabout period; and how many requests are still outstanding.

32. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for social security leaflets have been met in the 48-hour turnabout period; and how many requests are still waiting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the introduction this month of the additional distribution arrangements for leaflets and forms there have been seven items requested making a total order of 5,615 pieces sent within the 48-hour turnabout. There is one part of one order outstanding awaiting the supply of re-printed leaflets. The remainder of this order is expected to be fulfilled this week.

Disabled People

17. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department has done to help disabled sportsmen and women.

21. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to help disabled sportsmen and women.

Mr. Scott: On 26 April, I announced that the Government had awarded £500,000 to set up a fund to help sportsmen and women with disabilities to practice their chosen sport. The fund will be administered by the British Paralympic Association, and will help disabled people and voluntary organisations with the costs of equipment, training or organising events. It will be of considerable assistance to disabled people wishing to take part in sport at any level.

Although of course the responsibility for sporting issues lies with the Department of the Environment, officials in both Departments work closely together on matters affecting sportsmen and women with disabilities. For example, the Department has participated in the major review of sporting needs and opportunities for people with disabilities, which has been led by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment and Minister for Sport. [The review group's report is due to be published in July.]

28. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the financing of local services for disabled people for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Scott: The Department of Social Security does not finance any services for disabled people through local authorities but, through its network of local offices, provides benefits to disabled people at nationally determined rates.

35. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he proposes formally to consult disabled people, and their organisations, on the review of disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: Organisations representing disabled people are already commenting on the published findings of the surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. We welcome those comments, which contribute to the process of reviewing disability benefits in the light of the OPCS data. As I said in my reply to the right hon. Member on 17 April at column 10, I hope to announce a timetable for further action after all the survey results have been published in July.

38. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the United Kingdom has been involved in any European programmes for the disabled.

43. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the United Kingdom has participated in any European programmes for the disabled.

Mr. Scott: The United Kingdom participated in the European Commission's first action programme for the disabled (1983-1987), and is currently participating in the second follow on action programme called Handicapped people in Europe Living Independently in an Open Society (HELIOS). This programme involves setting up local model activities to represent good practice in vocational and economic integration, social integration and independent living, and educational integration.

In addition in 1988 the United Kingdom allocated £27·8 million from the European social fund towards vocational training projects for the disabled re-entering the open labour market. This represents the largest allocation to any EC member state for 1988 and accounts for just under 8 per cent. of the allocation to the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the increase in real terms in spending on social security benefits for the sick and disabled since 1978-79; and what proportion of this increase has been due to (a) the increase in the number of people receiving benefit, (b) increases in the actual benefit rates and (c) increases in the total real value of payments for reasons other than (b).

Mr. Scott: Spending on the long-term sick and disabled increased by £3·5 billion in real terms between 1978-79 and 1988-89, a real increase of 90 per cent. Increases in the numbers of beneficiaries account for about 90 per cent. of the real increase and the balance of 10 per cent. represents a real increase in the average amount of benefit paid. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of the increase in the amount of benefit paid as requested in (b) and (c). A full comparison of benefit rates in 1978-79 and 1988-89 cannot be made because of the changes to the income-related benefits over this period.

Expectant Mothers

18. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make a statement on benefit allowances for expectant mothers.

Mr. Scott: A pregnant woman who has worked during her pregnancy will generally get 18 weeks statutory maternity pay (SMP) from her employer. The rate payable depends on her length of service and earnings, but if she has worked for the same employer for at least two years she will get 90 per cent. of her earnings for the first six weeks of payment. A pregnant woman with a recent employment record who does not qualify for SMP will get 18 weeks maternity allowance (MA) from the Department of Social Security. Pregnant women on low incomes also qualify for income support under the normal rules for that payment. Where they are in receipt of income support or family credit they can, in addition, claim an £85 social fund maternity payment.

34. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings will be made in 1989-90 by not uprating the social fund payment to pregnant women on income support in line with other benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since there is no statutory duty to uprate social fund maternity payments, no saving arises in 1989-90. However, to have increased such payments in line with other benefits would have cost about £650,000.

Family Credit

20. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if statistical information is available on the number of claimants and subsequent recipients of family credit in each area of the United Kingdom; and what arrangements are being made to monitor the take-up rate during the current campaign.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is now available on the number of people actually receiving family credit in each local social security office area in Great Britain immediately before the start of the current take-up campaign, and this information will be updated from time to time as part of the monitoring of the campaign. A similar breakdown of the number of claims for family credit is not available. Information about take-up rates can only be obtained retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data, and only on a national basis.

Community Charge

22. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the arrangements for paying the community charge rebate.

33. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the arrangements for paying the community charge rebate.

39. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the arrangements for paying the community charge rebate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Members for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) and for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) earlier today.

Efficiency

23. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has as to whether the social security reforms have increased efficiency in the social security system.

Mr. Scott: There is considerable evidence that the social security reforms have resulted in benefits being directed more accurately and promptly. For example, income support (formerly supplementary benefit) error rates are down from 12 to 8 per cent. claims clearance times have fallen from six to five days and, for family credit (formerly family income supplement), claims clearance times have fallen from 18 to 16·5 working days.

Invalid Care Allowance

24. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the outturn for 1988-89 in invalid care allowance; and what has been the increase in real terms over the past five years.

Mr. Scott: The estimated outturn for invalid care allowance in 1988-89 is £160 million. This represents an increase in real terms of 1,043 per cent since 1984-85.

Residential Homes

25. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed the payment limits for residential homes.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) earlier today.

37. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed the payment limits for residential homes.

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed the payment limits for residential homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) earlier today.

45. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from Oxfordshire social services on benefit levels for private residential nursing and rest homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received a letter from the director of social services for Oxfordshire about the levels of benefit available to people in homes. A reply has been sent.

Family Expenditure

27. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much he estimates expenditure on the family has increased under this Government.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Excluding the extra help needed because unemployment was rising, support for families fell between 1974-75 and 1978-79 by 7 per cent. in real terms —or £500 million in 1988-89 values. Under this Government, the real increase up to 1988-89 was £1·8 billion (£1,840 million)—a rise of 27·3 per cent.

Disaster Fund Payments

29. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether payments made from any disaster fund raised by public donations affect the housing allowances or other social security benefit entitlement of the recipient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payments from disaster funds do not affect the majority of social security benefits.

The income-related benefits—income support, family credit and housing benefit—may be affected by payments from disaster funds but this will depend on the size and nature of the payments. The first £5 per week of any regular payment may be disregarded and a lump sum payment will not affect benefit unless it takes the claimant's capital over £3,000. An income of £1 per week is assumed for every £250, or part thereof, of capital between £3,000 and £6,000 in income support and family credit, and between £3,000 and £8,000 in housing benefit. No income support or family credit is payable if the capital held is over £6,000, and no housing benefit is available if it is over £8,000. However, capital held on trust, may be disregarded. For example, any payment made from a disaster fund because of a personal injury, which is placed on trust, is fully disregarded for at least two years and, in the case of a child, for as long as the child is a dependant. Any actual payments from the trust will be taken into account as income or capital in the normal way. In addition, any payment made to a third party will be completely disregarded if it is used to provide goods or services which are not already met by benefit. Officials continue to liaise with the administrators of the Hillsborough disaster fund and they have advised them of the social security rules.

The 1989 Social Security Bill will not result in any social security benefit being recovered from payments made from any disaster fund.

Family Support

41. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the level of Government financial support for the family in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) earlier today.

"The Business of Service"

42. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he is acting on any of the recommendations made in "The Business of Service" report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department is taking action on all the recommendations of "The Business of Service" report. When we published the report in June 1988 my right hon. Friend anounced to the House that we had not rejected any of the report's 54 recommendations, although some needed further work. A copy of the action plan giving details of our response to all the report's recommendations was placed in the Library in January this year. A full implementation report will be prepared by the autumn.

Substantial progress is being made on the recommendations which need further work and we are in the process of implementing the recommendations we have accepted. In particular, my hon. Friend will be aware that we have already announced plans for relocation of some work from some London social security offices. My right hon. Friend also announced on 17 May the publication of a national definition of service, the setting of new performance targets and plans to turn social security operations work into "Next Steps" agencies.

Reforms (Monitoring)

48. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to monitor the social security reforms.

Mr. Scott: We have given an undertaking to monitor all aspects of the social security reforms. This is a continuing process and is showing that the reforms are meeting their main objectives in producing a benefit system that is easier to understand and administer, that is better targeted on priority groups and that enhances rather than obstructs individual responsibility and choice.

The monitoring process has also enabled us to make improvements where these have been shown to be necessary. For example, since April 1988:

- the capital limit for housing benefit has been increased from £6,000 to £8,000, at a cost of £30 million;
- transitional payments of housing benefit have been introduced for pensioners, working families with children, sick and disabled people and widows, at a cost of £70 million;
- £70 million extra help has been given to poorer families with children on top of a normal uprating;
- nearly £200 million extra will be available to older and disabled pensioners from October this year, on top of their uprated benefits;
- the independent living fund has been established to enable severely disabled people to live independently in the community;
- extra help will be given, from July this year, to 16 and 17-year-olds who are forced to live away from home;
- women widowed before the introduction of the reforms have had their benefit restored in line with the expectations that they formed then;
- premiums within income support are being extended to all claimants receiving urgent cases payments, notably asylum seekers.

I believe that these measures demonstrate the Government's readiness to respond quickly in those areas where fine tuning is shown to be necessary and that they add to the success and underlying coherence of the reforms.

Dorothy Moran

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will pay Dorothy Moran her claim for the higher rate of attendance allowance as upheld by the social security commissioners, under their issued decision CA/139/1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The tribunal of social security commissioners decision CA/139/1988 did not award Mrs. Moran the higher rate of attendance allowance, but it found that the independent attendance allowance board had made errors in law in its decision that she satisfied only the medical criteria for the lower rate of the allowance. The board is in the process of reviewing its decision in the light of the commissioners' findings.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1979 the total number of prosecutions initiated by the Department of Social Security against employers for failure to pay over national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department uses both civil and criminal proceedings to recover national insurance contributions that have not been paid over by employers. The information requested is not available prior to 1983-84. The available information is as follows:

	Civil proceedings	Criminal proceedings
1983-84	2,080	1,971
1984-85	1,570	1,326
1985-86	1,259	13
1986-87	1,508	15
1987-88	1,254	10
1988-89	1,522	6

The reduction in criminal proceedings after 1984-85 resulted partly from the repeal of section 152(4) of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1979 the total amount of unpaid national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Year	Amount £
1979-80	8,659,576
1980-81	69,687,552
1981-82	30,402,682
1982-83	73,073,351
1983-84	83,505,000
1984-85	77,606,000
1985-86	94,325,000
1986-87	99,794,000
1987-88	94,952,000

Notes:
1. Prior to 1980-81, amounts of unpaid national insurance contributions transferred from Inland Revenue were recorded only when the Department had abandoned hopes of recovery. As a result, a significant total debt accumulated, much of which was eventually abandoned. From 1980-81, it was decided to record as unpaid amounts transferred from Inland Revenue in the year the transfer took place. Outstanding sums transferred in earlier years amounting to £40,764,693 were therefore included in the figure shown for 1980-81.
2. The amount shown for 1981-82 was affected by industrial action.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1979 (a) the total number of inquiries from local Department of Social Security offices to the contributions office in Newcastle and (b) the number of inquiries returned because they cannot be linked to any record of contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Records show that the number of inquiries to DSS Newcastle central office from all sources, including local offices of the Department, is as follows:

	Number
1981-82	10,846,742
1982-83	24,542,960
1983-84	19,706,292
1984-85	18,384,182
1985-86	30,451,984
1986-87	37,465,803
1987-88	22,887,640
1988-89	23,254,859

No information is available for years before 1981-82.

Records are kept of the number of items which are rejected during computer processing, but records of the number of items rejected because no account has been traced are not maintained separately. For 1988-89 the overall total of rejected items was 721,960.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1979 (a) the total number of claimants requesting that contributions are deemed paid under regulation 39 of the Social Security (Contributions) Regulations 1979 and (b) the number of such requests granted; and if he will also give these figures broken down according to type of benefit claimed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No record is kept of the number of claimants who request deeming of contributions under regulation 39 of the Social Security (Contributions) Regulations 1979. Regulation 39 is applied only where the secondary contributor is unable to pay arrears of contributions due. This usually happens when an employer is bankrupt or goes into liquidation. Where claimants to benefit find that their contribution record is deficient and report the fact that they have paid contributions to DSS, investigations are commenced to recover the moneys due. As benefit rights in respect of all such employees are protected records, the number of these reports is not maintained.

Martin Smale

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now prepare a statement of case with regard to Martin William John Smale of Grosvenor house, Ivybridge; and why no action has taken place since completed forms in respect of an appeal were acknowledged as having been received by the DHSS on 28 June 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A statement of case has been prepared in respect of the war pension entitlement appeal lodged by Martin William John Smale of Grosvenor house, Ivybridge. Medical branch is currently preparing the opinion of medical division which accompanies the statement of case. Both documents will be despatched to Mr. Smale's representative within the month.

At the time of lodging the appeal, Mr. Smale's representative made representations about the terms of Mr. Smale's discharge from the Navy. War pensions branch made inquiries to the Ministry of Defence and wrote to Mr. Smale's representative about the findings on 20 April. This was in addition to preparing the statement of case and seeking medical advice.

Widows

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has and from what sources, on the proportion of widows, under 45 years, who remarry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Latest available information indicates that about 90 per cent. of widows aged 44 and under remarry within 10 years. This information was published in Population Trends No. 30 (January 1983), in table 3 of the article by John Haskey of OPCS, entitled "Widowhood, Widowerhood and Remarriage".

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what comparative assessment he has made of the United Kingdom system of maternity benefits as against those of European Community countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) earlier today.

Appeal Procedures

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further steps he proposes to take to speed up the social security appeals procedures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Delays in hearing social security appeals are steadily decreasing due to a reduction in their volume caused largely by the introduction of the social fund and the replacement of supplementary benefit by the simpler scheme of income support.

The administrative procedures involved are undertaken partly by the president of social security and medical appeal tribunals, and partly by the Department of Social Security. However, overall responsibility for appeals processing lies with the president, and the hon. Member may wish to take up the matter directly with him.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department since the introduction of the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 May 1989]: The latest provisional estimates based on data from June 1988 to March 1989 are given in the table.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department has spent £1,978,831 on commercial television air time since being formed in August 1988. Prior to that expenditure on TV advertising was incurred by the Department of Health and Social Security. Between May 1984 and July 1988 that figure was £1,752,745.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: I regret that this information is commercially confidential.

THE ARTS

Printed Matter (Preservation)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what is his policy for co-ordinating processing arrangements in connection with printed matter and material held in the various museums, archives and libraries which are the responsibility of his Department;

(2) what study he has made of the processing arrangements for printed matter and material under development in the United States of America, Canada and Austria; if any useful lessons have been learned from the techniques employed in these and other countries; and if he intends to introduce changes in British practice.

Mr. Luce: It is for the institutions themselves to ensure that their processing arrangements are efficient and up to date and to keep in touch with developments. The British Library, for example, is among the leaders in the development of bibliographic standards and techniques and works closely with libraries and other institutions both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Schools (Educational Opportunities)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the use made of the educational opportunities afforded to schools by arts bodies.

Mr. Luce: I believe that arts bodies, museums and galleries and public libraries all offer valuable ways of supplementing and supporting the teaching in schools. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I are commissioning work on a package of material, illustrating good practice, which will be distributed to all maintained schools early next year. The booklet will provide examples of the range of learning opportunities available in the contemporary arts and in museums and will show how these and similar initiatives in related fields can have wider educational applications.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Output

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the index of manufacturing output for each of the standard regions and Wales for each 12-month period from June 1979 to June 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Major [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Information on the standard regions of England is not available; using latest published data, the indices of manufacturing output for Wales are as follows:

Year[1]	Wales
1979-80	99·1
1980-81	90·6
1981-82	94·9
1982-83	93·0

Production Industries

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the index of production industries in each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales for each 12-month period from June 1979 to June 1988.

Mr. Major [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Information on the standard regions of England is not available; using latest published data, the indices of production for Scotland and for Wales are as given below:

Year[1]	Scotland	Wales
1979-80	99·6	105·9

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the revised proposals by the European Economic Community for the revision of value added tax arrangements in the United Kingdom, and, in particular, what items, at present zero-rated, would require to be taxed; and if there are any other proposals linked to the arrangements proposed by the European Economic Community for changes in excise duty.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The Commission announced its revised thinking on indirect taxation in the single market on 17 May. It now accepts that some zero rates may be retained, but still seeks a measure of tax approximation in the shape of an unspecified minimum standard rate for VAT; a reduced VAT rate band as previously proposed; and, as yet unspecified, minimum rates or rate bands for excise duties. It also suggests quadrupling the tax-paid travellers' allowances and doubling the duty paid allowances on alcohol and tobacco in stages by 1992. Announcement of its technical proposals for fiscal control of exciseable goods has been deferred until August.

The Commission's admission that zero rates are acceptable in principle is clearly a step forward and a vindication of our firm stance, and we welcome it; but we shall obviously need to clarify a number of elements, given our very clear commitments in this area. We also welcome the proposals on travellers' allowances, for which we have been pressing. Other parts of the Commission's revised thinking, such as its continued desire for tax approximation, are less welcome; our position on that issue is unchanged.

These proposals would require the unanimous assent of all member states.

Tobacco (Taxation)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of taxation on tobacco products.

Mr. Lilley: Since 1979, the combined burden of duty and VAT on cigarettes has risen by nearly 50 per cent. in real terms. The level of duty in the United Kingdom remains the highest in the Economic Community, with the exception of Denmark.

Alcohol Taxation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the annual revenue from alcohol taxation.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) on 14 April 1989 at columns 739-40.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) of 27 February, Official Report, column 27, how many people earn less than the respective point at which the tax benefit withdrawal level falls to 34 per cent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

Reliable estimates are not available on the basis requested. Estimates of the number of full-time workers in receipt of income-related benefits and facing combined income tax and benefit withdrawal rates in excess of 40 per cent. were given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 8 May at column 309. It is very unlikely that there are any full-time workers facing marginal deduction rates between 34 and 40 per cent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Church-aided Schools

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last reviewed his Department's policy in respect of the funding of capital projects for Church-aided schools.

Mr. Butcher: The COGE (control of grant aided expenditure) working group was set up in 1986 to examine methods of improving the control of grant-aided expenditure for voluntary aided and special agreement schools. My right hon. Friend accepted its recommendations for improved procedures designed to secure more reliable predictions of capital expenditure needs at voluntary aided schools. The group concluded that the Department's priorities for the funding of voluntary school building projects were fair and just. Each year bids for work are carefully scrutinised to ensure that resources are targeted to those projects where needs are greatest.

Nursery Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of nursery places per 1,000 children in the shire counties; what is the average figure for the metropolitan districts; and what factors account for the difference between the figures.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on nursery places is not collected centrally. The number of pupils under five attending maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools in England in January 1988 per 1,000 of estimated population aged three and four in each non-metropolitan county and the overall average for metropolitan districts is given in the following table. A variety of factors may account for the differences between the figures including local policies on the education and care of the under-fives and the priority given by successive Governments to the most disadvantaged areas.

Community Charge

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will take to ensure that students aged 18 years will not pay the full community charge during the period between leaving school and entering higher or further education later in the year; and what effect this will have on student loans or grants.

Mr. Jackson: School leavers aged 18 will, after leaving school, remain exempt from community charge for as long as they are the subject of continuing entitlement to child benefit. Once that entitlement has expired, a person aged 18, and between school and higher or further education, will be liable to the full community charge, but will be able to claim rebate on the charge, provided that his income or resources (or, in the case of a couple, their joint income or resources) do not disqualify him from the rebate. Once enrolled full-time in further or higher education, that person will become eligible to a rebate of 80 per cent. of the full charge, and his previous status will be irrelevant to eligibility for grant.

Association of University Teachers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Association of University Teachers; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not recently met the AUT, but we are in touch with it from time to time in the same way as we are in touch with a wide variety of bodies in order to keep abreast of developments.

School Discipline

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in response to the Elton report on school discipline.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has to date received three letters commenting on the report of the committee of inquiry on discipline in schools, chaired by Lord Elton, which was published on 13 March.

Teachers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of teachers in (a) Surrey and (b) England leave the profession within five years.

Mr. Butcher: Information is not available in respect of Surrey, nor nationally in the precise form requested. However it is estimated that amongst teachers trained in England and Wales who enter full-time service in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England and Wales, 35 per cent. leave again within five years of qualification. About a fifth of these leavers re-enter service within the same five-year period, and many more do so subsequently.

Examination Papers (Security)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance he gives to local education authorities and schools for the secure storage of public examination papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the examining bodies themselves to establish procedures governing the security of question papers and for individual schools and colleges acting as examination centres to ensure compliance with them.

"Jean Monnet, Father of Europe"

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements have been made to distribute the video cassettes of the film entitled "Jean Monnet, Father of Europe" made available by the European Commission, among schools in the United Kingdom; and what proportion of these have been distributed to Hampshire and Havant, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The European Commission has not supplied copies of the video cassette to my Department for general distribution. A limited number of copies is available from

The London Office of the Commission of the European Communities

Cancer Research

78. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he can give an estimate of the current value of research into the causes, prevention and treatment of all forms of cancer; and how much is attributable to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. I understand that, in 1987-88, the last financial year for which figures are available, the council's expenditure for research into the causes, prevention and treatment of all forms of cancer was £9·9 million. The corresponding figure for the Department of Health was £2·3 million.

In addition, university departments and medical schools support a range of basic research from public funds, some of which will be relevant to cancer research.

Information is not collected centrally on the whole range of organisations funding research into the causes, prevention and treatment of all forms of cancer. I understand from the latest edition of the handbook of the Association of Medical Research Charities that the research expenditure of the Imperial Cancer Research Fund for the year to 30 September 1987 was £41·8 million.

Teacher Exchange Schemes

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in considering local management schemes, he will ensure that local education authorities retain as an exception from delegation, sufficient funds to meet the overhead costs of teacher exchange schemes.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 December 1988, at column 389.

ENERGY

Mining Subsidence

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the provision in British Coal accounts for 1988-89 for coal mining subsidence damage costs;

(2) if amounts of moneys levied on coal production costs by British Coal to cover coal mining subsidence costs are carried over into the next financial year;

(3) if amounts of moneys levied on coal production costs to cover coal mining subsidence damage costs are included in British Coal's global accounts year by year;

(4) pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield on 15 May, Official Report, column 102, if he will supply figures showing the financial costs of coal mining subsidence damage, externally to British Coal for each year since 1979, with a regional breakdown by coalfield area;

(5) pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield on 15 May, Official Report, column 102, if he will supply figures giving a breakdown of coal mining subsidence damage costs broken down into administration, repair, compensation, outside consultancies, and other relevant categories for each year since 1979, with a regional breakdown by coalfield area;

(6) pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield on 15 May, if he will supply figures showing the amounts of moneys levied on coal production costs by British Coal for each year since 1979, with a regional breakdown by coalfield area;

(7) pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield on 15 May, Official Report, column 102, if he will supply figures showing the provision in British Coal's accounts for coal mining subsidence damage costs for each year since 1979, with a regional breakdown by coalfield area;

(8) pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield on 15 May, what is the current total financial amount held by British Coal for the provision of repair, compensation and administration of coal mining subsidence damage.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Administration of the subsidence compensation and repair system, including making the necessary provisions in the accounts, is a matter for British Coal. Details on the level of provisions are given each year in the annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Details of the number and cost of claims settled, broken down by coalfield areas, are provided in British Coal's annual report to the Secretary of State for Energy, the first of which was placed in the House of Commons Library towards the end of last year. I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member if any additional information is readily available.

UKAEA (Regulation)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to relax the statutory regulation of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to enable it to exploit market opportunities more fully.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no plans to do so at present, although the matter is under discussion with the AEA.

British Coal (Investment)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has considered the British Coal Corporation's initial response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the corporation's investment programme.

Mr. Parkinson: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the MMC published its report on the investment programme of British Coal on 25 January. The corporation has now provided its initial response, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

The MMC rightly draws attention to British Coal's impressive achievement over the last five years in reducing costs and restructuring the industry, but identifies a need for a more cohesive and systematic approach towards its business planning, including fuller and more regular analysis of risk scenarios and contingency responses, greater use of modelling, and more local input on business prospects as the market evolves. I share the commission's view that these are priority areas for attention.

The United Kingdom market for coal is becoming increasingly open, with greater price differentials both regionally and as between market sectors. This makes it particularly important to identify, and base business decisions upon, the true profitability of individual coal flows, so that management at all levels can respond promptly and concertedly to the impact of market developments on profitability. Exposure to loss-making business must be reduced if the corporation is to achieve its objective of maximising profitability. I accordingly welcome the corporation's intention to continue to adapt its business planning systems and organisation to meet changing circumstances, and I expect the detailed steps taken under each of the commission's recommendations to be fully set out in the corporation's further responses to the MMC report. My recent appointment of a second deputy chairman should help to strengthen the corporation's efforts in this direction over the coming year.

The commission concluded that British Coal's controls over capital investment are generally good, and expressed confidence that the corporation's investment programme is achieving a rate of return of at least 5 per cent. Since its report was published, the Government have increased the required rate of return to 8 per cent, and I will be considering with British Coal over the next 12 months the implications of this for the test discount rates for individual categories of expenditure.

I do not share the commission's view that the Asfordby project was never viable; as British Coal points out, an independent review in July 1983 suggested that at that stage an acceptable rate of return could be achieved. But I agree that such large projects, particularly where lead times and payback periods are long, tend to be financially more risky than many other types of expenditure, and that this requires to be fully recognised in the criteria for initial investment appraisal. This should minimise the risk of future projects being 'piece-mealed through time'; as regards Asfordby itself, it is important that the substantial balance of the expenditure still uncommitted should show a robust financial return. I also share the commission's view that, in general, conditional approval should not be given in advance of a sound financial prospectus.

I welcome British Coal's acceptance of the need to assess the system effect of large projects involving new capacity; as the commission recognises, however, even relatively small amounts of new capacity can have a significant effect in localised or special quality markets. I also welcome the importance attached by both the commission and British Coal to the spread of six-day operations and other more flexible working patterns.

I share the commission's view that new medium-term financial objectives need to be agreed between the corporation and Government, but I recognise that these cannot be sensibly finalised ahead of the coming negotiations with National Power and Power Gen on the terms of coal supply beyond January 1990. In the meantime the external financing path to 1991-92 which I announced to the House on 6 February provides a provisional basis for forward planning.

I am anxious that early progress should be made on this agenda. Under the normal arrangements for the follow-up to MMC recommendations arising from section 11 inquiries, British Coal will be reporting to me after one and three years on progress achieved in implementing the recommendations. I shall lay its report before the House next spring.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community's Council of Energy Ministers on 11 May.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I represented my right hon. Friend at the Council.

The Council decided on a programme for improving the efficiency of electricity use and approved recommendations aimed at reducing any distortions of competition between oil refineries resulting from differences in environmental protection standards. It agreed conclusions setting a framework for detailed discussions of Thermie, a proposed new scheme for demonstrating and disseminating new technology in the energy sector, including efficient use of energy; the existing schemes are due to finish at the end of this year. Eleven member states, including the United Kingdom, similarly agreed a framework for discussing improvements in energy price transparency. No conclusions were reached in a discussion on trade between integrated electricity systems, during which I stressed the importance of consumer choice and competition.

Arrangements will be made for the Energy Council to convey its opinion to the Internal Market Council before any decisions are taken on the energy aspects of the Commission's proposals on procurement in the energy, water and transport sectors.

In an inconclusive discussion of the 1975 directive controlling the use of gas for generating electricity, the United Kingdom strongly urged its repeal, particularly on environmental grounds, but also in the interests of competition, exploration and efficiency. The Commission was unwilling to propose repeal before the next review of the Community's energy objectives, but would do so if it were shown that the directive restricted the development of the gas industry.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Personal Pensions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the population have taken out personal pensions since the reform of pension arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since July 1988, around 3 million people have taken out a personal pension: this is equivalent to about 11 per cent. of the working population.

Family Credit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for the take up of family credit as a percentage of total family credit budgets for each of the DSS offices in Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Family credit is dealt with centrally, and expenditure estimates are made for Great Britain as a whole. Similarly, information about percentage take up rates can be obtained only for Great Britain, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

At the beginning of April 1989, the number of families receiving family credit who were living in the areas covered by each of the local social security offices in Glasgow at the time the award was made was as follows:

	Number
Glasgow (Anniesland)	646
Glasgow (Bridgeton)	143
Glasgow (City)	341
Glasgow (Craigton)	403
Glasgow (Cumbernauld)	600
Glasgow (Laurieston)	367
Glasgow (Maryhill)	336
Glasgow (Parkhead)	575
Glasgow (Partick)	20
Glasgow (Provan)	875
Glasgow (Rutherglen)	658
Glasgow (South Side)	516
Glasgow (Springburn)	275

Transitional Protection

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants' claims for transitional protection failed, in total and as a percentage of the whole.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At 18 May 1989, a total of 474,974 applications for housing benefit transitional payments had been received. Of these 446,035 had been assessed and in 247,623 cases (52 per cent. of all applications) no benefit was payable. Of the cases outstanding the majority are awaiting the return of inquiry forms about housing benefit details from local authorities.

Community Care Grants

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much money is being allocated for the national advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants;

(2) if he will place in the Library the national consultancy report on which the forthcoming advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants has been based;

(3) how its forthcoming national advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants is being conducted; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will place in the Library the draft formats of any posters, leaflets, and so on relating to the forthcoming advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants;

(5) if he will be making available additional funds to advice agencies during the forthcoming advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants;

(6) when the national advertising campaign on social fund community care grants is starting;

(7) if he will make available additional funds by virtue of his power under section 32(6) of the Social Security Act 1986 in order to meet demand generated by the forthcoming advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants in excess of Department of Social Security local office budget profiles.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to mount a national advertising campaign in respect of social fund community care grants and we are not aware of any national consultancy report on this subject.

We are, however, intending to produce additional information material on the social fund, including community care grants, which will be aimed at potential applicants. Leaflet SB16 "A guide to the Social Fund" is also being revised to take account of forthcoming changes to the social fund manual guidance on community care grants. This new information material should be available to the public this summer. The costs will be met from within the Department's budget for leaflets. We do not think that it would be helpful to lay draft copies in the Library, but we shall ensure that copies of the final versions are made available.

Our intention is to provide both potential applicants and advice agencies with better information about the scheme than they have at present. There is therefore no need for additional funds to be made available to advice agencies as a result of this initiative, nor do we intend to increase the community care grants budget allocation for the current year.

Resettlement Units Executive Agency

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to establish the resettlement units executive agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The resettlement units executive agency will tomorrow become the first part of the Department of Social Security to achieve agency status. Its main aim is to provide help and assistance to a group of people who are among the most disadvantaged. There are two key tasks: first, to manage the existing DSS units efficiently and effectively, examining how to get the best out of the resources available; secondly, to implement the policy set out by the Government in 1985 that the needs of these people, and in particular their prospects for a more settled way of life, could more appropriately be met in accommodation that is locally run and administered by local authorities and by voluntary organisations rather than in large centrally run institutions.

The units provide 1,836 beds, 670 of which are in London, for single homeless people. In addition to providing food and shelter, the units seek to encourage users to adopt a more settled way of life and to help them to find accommodation of their own.

The agency will be a more effective way of carrying out that work. Efficiency targets have been set, but in accordance with the promises made by the Government in 1985 all efficiency savings will be retained by the agency. A more clearly defined timetable for taking forward the replacement programme will be developed. The new concept of a single agency budget, and the flexibilities given within that, will facilitate the work of the chief executive in deploying all the resources available in the best interests of the users of resettlement accommodation.

Copies of the agency framework document and of the initial set of performance targets, have been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Vale of Glamorgan

Q17. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister whether she plans to make an official visit to the Vale of Glamorgan.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Romania

Q121. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she proposes to make an official visit to Romania.

The Prime Minister: No.

Collisions at Sea

Q151. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to minimise the risk of collisions between fishing vessels and submarines.

The Prime Minister: The Royal Navy already takes the greatest care to ensure that the risk of collisions between submarines and fishing vessels or their gear is very low. I understand that the hon. Member recently visited the Clyde with a group of Members from this House and that some suggestions were made for technical improvements to fishing vessels to reduce the risk further. These suggestions will, of course, be considered on their merits.

Rain Forests

Q173. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has received concerning the rate of destruction of the world's forests for each of the past 20 years; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Data on the rate of destruction of the world's forests are not available on an annual basis. The latest internationally comparable figures were published by the Food and Agriculture Organisation in 1982 and relate to tropical forests during the period 1976-1980. Annual deforestation rates for all tropical closed forests by region and worldwide were:

	Tropical closed forest
	Area lost (Millions of hectares/ year)	Per cent. of total area
Africa	1·33	0·61
Asia, Pacific	1·82	0·59
Latin America	4·12	0·61
Total	7·27	0·61

Comparable data for earlier periods are not available. The FAO and the United Nations Environment Programme will make a second forest resources assessment in 1990.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the circumstances in which Her Majesty's Government would order the firing of nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: No.

Broadleaved Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister why thre is no system of felling licences to protect Northern Ireland's broadleaved woodlands; if she will extend the United Kingdom system of felling licences to Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The 1970 White Paper "Forestry in Northern Ireland" stated that the Government felt that there was no longer the need for restrictive legislation on the felling of trees and proposed that the relevant legislation be repealed. This was done in 1982. There are no proposals to reintroduce felling licences in Northern Ireland. The Department of Environment for Northern Ireland has powers to make an order (known as a tree preservation order) to prohibit the cutting down of trees.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 23 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had a number of meetings. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings with ministerial colleagues and others later today.

Gulf and Gulf of Oman (Award)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister whether an award is to be made to members of the armed forces and civilians who were engaged in recent operations in the Gulf and the Gulf of Oman.

The Prime Minister: In recognition of service and with special regard to the dangers and hardships which accompanied duty there, for personnel who served in vessels of the Royal Navy and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary, her Majesty the Queen has graciously approved the award of the General Service Medal 1962 with "Gulf" clasp. The award covers operations in the Gulf of Oman between 17 November 1986 and 31 October 1988 and continuing mine counter-measures operations in the Gulf from 1 November 1988 until 28 February 1989. A Command Paper (Cm. 699) which, inter alia, sets out the criteria of eligibility, is being laid before the House today.

WALES

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Milk Marketing Board about the use of bovine somatotropin on dairy herds in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Countryside (Employment)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has assessed the implications of his agricultural policies on employment in the countryside in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The level of employment on agricultural holdings in Wales in 1988 was marginally higher than in 1983. Grants and subsidies paid to Welsh farmers in 1988 are provisionally estimated to have amounted to £106 million, significantly contributing both directly and indirectly to rural employment.

Nurses (Regrading)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement concerning nurses' regrading in Wales;

(2) how many nurses are involved in regrading in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) on 20 March 1989 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Welsh Office at column 435. Some 24,787 posts were involved.

Homelessness

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to release empty property belonging to his Department for use by homeless people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office currently holds some 150 dwellings. Where practical, they are used for letting or sale to those in need.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on homelessness in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I am concerned as long as there are any families in Wales without permanent homes. That is why the Government have made such a substantial investment in recent years in measures to increase the supply of housing available. We have also encouraged local authorities to make better use of their stock and reduce the number of families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Singleton Casualty Unit

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to complete the review of the first year's work of the Singleton casualty unit since it restored a 24-hour service; and when would be an appropriate date to meet a further deputation led by the right hon. Member for Swansea, West to discuss the future development of the unit.

Mr. Grist: The first year of operation of the 24-hour service at the Singleton minor casualty unit will end at the beginning of June. I would therefore expect the review of its work to end by the autumn. If the right hon. Gentleman contacts my office, I shall be happy to arrange a meeting with a deputation led by him.

Mumbles Railway

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which grant systems are available for a project to reopen the Mumbles railway in Swansea; what are their criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office officials have not been informed of any firm proposal to reopen the Mumbles railway. Without precise details, we cannot make a statement.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for Wales the number of (a) acute beds and (b) non-acute beds available since 1979 for each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 15 May 1989 at column 38.

Afforestation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the Welsh water authority's attitude towards the proposals to afforest Bara Ceirch and Bwlch-y-Garreg in the Cambrian mountains; and what provisions have been made for the timing of this afforestation.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the light of objections raised by the Welsh water authority to the afforestation proposals for these two sites, the applicants were informed by the Forestry Commission that grant approval would depend on a suitable liming regime being agreed with the water authority. Such an agreement has not so far proved possible.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits for class XVII, votes 5, 8 and 10 in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for class XVII, vote 5 will be increased by £100,000, from £273,611,000 to £273,711,000; the cash limit for class XVII, vote 8 will be increased by £6,800,000, from £823,710,000 to £830,510,000; and the cash limit for class XVII, vote 10 will be increased by £47,000, from £1,049,000,000 to £1,049,047,000.

The increases for class XVII, votes 5 and 8 follow the decision to implement the recommendations of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine and on doctors' and dentists' remuneration, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 February 1989. These increases will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The increase for class XVII, vote 10 is in respect of an adjustment to a local authority's prior year entitlement to block grant. Expenditure on this vote is not classed as direct public expenditure.

Community Energy Action

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate numbers of operatives and trainees are available to undertake community energy action work in draughtproofing and loft insulation in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 May 1989]: A package of measures was announced on 10 February by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment to help community insulation projects under employment training. Projects which are not suitable for ET might be suitable for providing voluntary work for people who have finished employment training as a means of practising their skills until they find work.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the contribution made to the well-being of elderly people and other vulnerable people in Wales by programmes of community energy action work including draughtproofing and loft insulation in each of the last 10 years; and what targets he intends to set for each of the next five years.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 May 1989]: It is essentially a matter for the placement providers to consider the contribution their projects will make to the well-being of the elderly and other vulnerable people in their areas. The elderly will benefit from recent changes to the homes insulation scheme to improve loft insulation and the installation of thermal insulation under the new home improvement grant arrangements.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the number of trainees undertaking community energy action work in draughtproofing and loft insulation to equal the number so engaged under the community programme in April 1988.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 May 1989]: It is not possible to compare the numbers on community programme with employment training. Their aims are fundamentally different. Whilst CP provided the long-term unemployed with work experience on projects that benefited the community, ET aims to provide individuals with the skills to meet their own training needs and the needs of the local labour market.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trainees were employed on community energy action work such as draughtproofing and loft insulation in each district council area in Wales in April 1988 under the community programme; and how many were employed under employment training in April 1989.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Figures for district council areas are not available. The following refer to Training Agency area office regions:

	Community Programme Nos. of participants April 1988	Employment Training Nos. of trainees April 1989
Wrexham AO (Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys)	173	130
Cardiff AO (Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan)	346	102
Swansea AO (West Glamorgan and Dyfed)	149	62
Newport AO (Gwent)	143	47

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

North-South Campaign

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representatives who attended the Council of Europe's European public campaign on north-south interdependence and solidarity colloquy, interdependence and cultural development, held in Lisbon, Portugal from 7 to 8 April 1988; and if he will show in his answer (a) what country and (b) what organisation these representatives were from.

Mr. Chris Patten: From the information available to me, I understand that the colloquy was attended by more than 100 participants and observers from a number of countries. These included the secretary-general of the Council of Europe, the President of the Republic of Portugal, representatives from 17 developing countries and from a variety of international organisations, churches and non-governmental organisations. I have asked the Council of Europe secretariat for a full list which I shall forward to the hon. Member in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Edward Zolofarevsky

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Russians about the continued failure to grant an exit visa to Edward Boris Zolofarevsky of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State raised this case with Mr. Shevardnadze in April. We shall continue to press the Soviet authorities until Mr. Zolofarevsky is allowed to leave the USSR.

Abduction

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received during the present Parliament about the abduction and taking abroad by their foreign-born fathers of the children of United Kingdom citizen mothers; what information he has of the numbers of such children and the countries where they are now believed to reside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's interest in cases involving the abduction and taking abroad of children stems from the child's British nationality, irrespective of the nationality or place of birth of its parents. Some of the information requested by my hon. Friend is not therefore available—for example, the place of birth of fathers or the nationality of mothers.

The information which can be provided is not immediately available, and a further reply will be given to my hon. Friend in due course.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations from any organisation about the denial of human rights in the Punjab, India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Representations received include a report forwarded by the hon. Member, and the matter was the subject of an Adjournment debate in the House on 11 November 1988.

As my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office said on that occasion, the Government have always made clear their views on the need for all Governments to respect human rights. We must, however, recognise that the democratic Government of India faces a violent challenge to the rule of law from ruthless terrorists. The Indian Government none the less announced measures in March aimed at improving the situation in the Punjab.

Public Holidays

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of public holidays which now exist in the member states of the Economic Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: The list is as follows:

	Days
Belgium	10
Denmark	10
Federal Republic of Germany	10
France	11
Greece	11
Italy	[1]11
Luxembourg	12
The Netherlands	8
Portugal	13
Republic of Ireland	8
Spain	[2]12

[1] plus 2 falling on Sundays.
[2] plus 1 discretionary day.

US Judiciary Subcommittee (Report)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the United States Senate for his departmental library the report from the United States judiciary subcommittee on Separation of Powers on Senate Bill 158 of the 97th Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office library purchases United States Committee reports only if their subject is of interest to the FCO.

Pornography (United States)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the legislation passed by various American States in 1988 to deal with the so-called dial-a-porn problem.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office Library normally obtains only such copies of overseas legislation, other than that of the Commonwealth, as is necessary for day-to-day business.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Private Health Screening

79. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to control the use of direct mailing advertisements for private health screening services.

Mr. Forth: Direct mail advertisements, including those for private health screening services, are covered by the British code of advertising practice, which is administered by the Advertising Standards Authority.

False statements in advertisements are covered by the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. The Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations 1988 enable the Director General of Fair Trading to seek a court injunction to prevent the publication of a misleading advertisement, where other means of control have failed. I have no plans to introduce any further controls.

Telecommunications

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many premium rate telephone message and one-on-one services were carried by each of the operators licensed under the Telecommunications Act 1984 for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: The telecommunications regime does not oblige individual service providers to register such services. These figures are not, therefore, available. The report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on chatline and message services does, however, provide some indications of the size of the premium rate services area. Its report indicated that some 120 service providers were in business, operating about 11,000 lines. A copy of this MMC report is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many monitoring staff are employed by the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services; and how many calls they have monitored in each of the past 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters for the independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services. I understand that the committee is taking an increasingly active role in the monitoring of premium services, but the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman, Louis Blom-Cooper QC, ICSTIS, 67-69 Whitfield Street, London W1P 5RL to request the details he seeks.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the documents in which he has given directions to the Director General of Telecommunications under section 47 of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has given no directions under section 47 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Regional Assistance (Corby)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many projects, and at what cost, have been supplied by regional assistance in the Corby development area in each year since 1979-80.

Polyester Silk Plants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by year for the last 10 years the value in current prices of polyester silk plants made in the United Kingdom; and how many companies at the latest date for which he has figures are currently producing this product in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The figures are not available.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to his reply of 27 April, Official Report, columns 614-15, concerning gross output of finished manufactures and imports of semi-manufactures, intermediate products and basic materials, whether he will provide comparable figures for motor cars; and if he will add figures for 1973 and for exports.

Inward Investment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of inward investment projects in each of the standard regions and Wales for each of the years 1979 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 May 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 16 May, at columns 115-16.

EC Regional Fund

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the precise areas which will now benefit from the EEC regional fund; and if the decision on the boundaries and size of the individual allocations will be made by his Department or by the European Commission.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the precise areas which will now benefit from the EEC regional fund; and if the decision on the boundaries and size of the individual allocations will be made by his Department or by the European Commission.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The following areas of the United Kingdom have been designated for eligibility for the European regional development fund (ERDF) with effect from 1 January 1989. Northern Ireland was designated by the Council of the European Communities in its regulation (EEC) 2052/88 of 24 June 1988. The remainder were designated by the Commission, in pursuance of that regulation, on 22 March and 10 May 1989:

Northern Ireland;

The assisted areas of Great Britain, except: Cinderford and Ross-on-Wye, Corby, Kidderminster and Whitby travel-to-work areas, and parts of Birmingham, Bridgend, Cardiff, Coventry and Hinckley, Dudley and Sandwell and Sheffield TTWAs;

The remainder of the Highlands and Islands Development Board and Development Board for Rural Wales areas;

The remainder of Greater Manchester; Nottingham City (UPA); and the following TTWAs: Alnwick and Amble, Burnley, Castleford and Pontefract, Chesterfield, Goole and Selby (part), Mansfield, Pendle, Retford, Stirling (part), Wakefield and Dewsbury, Whitehaven and Worksop.

Both hon. Members' constituencies (Bassetlaw, and Pontefract and Castleford) are thus eligible in their entirety.

The excluded parts of Bridgend, Cardiff and Sheffield TTWAs remain eligible under transitional provisions, at least for the period of ERDF programmes which relate to them. Camarthen and Llandeilo TTWAs are also now eligible in principle; but the terms of the previous ERDF regulation, which still apply transitionally in the case, provide for ERDF grants in non-nationally aided areas only exceptionally. Further areas may become eligible for limited grants under special programmes—Resider (steel areas), Renaval (shipbuilding areas) and others that may be adopted by the Commission.

The allocation of grants is determined by the Commission upon application by the Government. Indicative financial plans for ERDF assistance in the three years 1989-91 are to be contained in Community support framework documents, to be established by the Commission in agreement with the Government by the autumn of 1989 and published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Europe: Open for Business Campaign

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all outside bodies, consultancies and firms who have received payments for work connected with the Europe: Open for Business campaign; and how they were appointed.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The following are the main contractors used on the Europe open for business campaign. The list includes all prime contractors (but not their subcontractors) employed by DTI and the Central Office of Information where the work involved had a value of at least £5,000. Firms and others contracted by DTI direct are denoted by an asterisk (*); those providing services via COI are marked thus(†).

DEFENCE

Computer Language (ADA)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will issue a complete list of projects using the mandatory computer programme language Ada; if he will give the Ada specific costs involved in those projects; and whether the use of Ada has helped to control software development and maintenance costs.

Mr. Sainsbury: The adoption of Ada as MOD's preferred language for new operational software, together with improvements in the management of those projects which have a large and complex software content, is helping to control the costs of software development and maintenance.

We do not insist inflexibly on the use of Ada. There will be particular circumstances where Ada cannot be used or where an alternative approach might offer better value for money. Information concerning those projects which do use Ada, and the Ada specific costs involved in these projects, is not held centrally. To obtain that information would require a special survey, and would incur disproportionate cost.

Buccaneer

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects agreement on the air staff requirement for the Buccaneer replacement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Initial studies into possible replacement options are currently in hand. It is too early to say when a staff requirement is likely to be agreed.

Nimrod

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects agreement on the air staff requirement for the Nimrod MR2 replacement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the effects of corrosion on the fatigue lives of the RAF Nimrod maritime reconnaissance fleet.

Mr. Sainsbury: The fatigue life of an airframe is affected by a number of factors, of which corrosion is only one. In the case of the Nimrod MR2, it is too early to assess the effect of corrosion on the aircraft's fatigue life, but we expect the Nimrod to give many more years of useful service. It will be some time before a staff requirement for a replacement aircraft needs to be agreed.

Harrier

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Harrier GR5 squadrons will be based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: One.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Harrier GR/7 to enter service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the early 1990s.

RAF Pilots

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average number of hours flown by RAF fast jet pilots per month.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is classified.

Low-Flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, dates and locations of all low-flying exercises conducted since 6 November 1987, advance notice of which was given to hon. Members in affected constituencies.

Mr. Neubert: Advance notice of the following exercises has been given to hon. Members whose constituencies were likely to experience unusual low-flying activity:

Exercise Name	Exercise Dates	Exercise Location
1988
Key Lift 88	5-13 March	North Yorkshire
Mallet Blow 88/1	14-18 March	Northern England/Borders
Red Lanyard	9-12 April	Many areas with centre on Salisbury Plain
Elder Forest 88	18-21 April	East Anglia/Lincolnshire/ Northern England/Eastern Scotland
Hammer 88/1	10 May	Northern England/Southern Scotland
OSEX 15	16-20 May	Wales
Roaring Lion	20-26 May	Many areas with centre on Northumberland
Central Enterprise	6 June	East Anglia/Lincolnshire/ Northern England/Eastern Scotland
Fast Buzzard	13-24 July	Many areas with centre on Salisbury Plain
Mallet Blow 88/2	25-29 July	Northern England/Borders
Green Lanyard	1-8 October	Many areas with centre on South West Wales
Elder Joust 88[1]	4-6 October	East Anglia/Lincolnshire/ North eastern England/ South eastern Scotland
Hammer 88/2	11 October	East Anglia/Northern England/ Southern Scotland
1989
Red Lanyard	17-23 February	Many areas with centre on Norfolk
Mallet Blow 89/1	3-7 April	Northern England/Borders
Salty Hammer 89[2]	9 May	Northern England/Southern Scotland
Equipment Trial	25 April-19 May	Northern England/Borders
OSEX 16[3]	10-19 May	Wales

Notes:
[1] Formerly called Exercise Priory.
[2] Formerly called Exercise Hammer.
[3] Including Highland Cardinal work-up exercise.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of covert surveys of low flying by the RAF police since 25 September 1987.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him in response to his similar question on 16 March 1989, at column 241. Since 22 February covert monitoring of low-flying activity has additionally been conducted at the following locations over the periods stated:

25-27 April	Liskeard
2-4 May	Gloucester
8-11 May	Blencarn

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what maximum speed and minimum height will be permitted during mock interception manoeuvres and run-ups to simulated targets, for aircraft participating in the OSEX 16 exercise.

Mr. Neubert: The normal height and speed regulations for low flying in the United Kingdom will apply to aircraft participating in OSEX 16.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use will be made of the 100 ft low-flying area in central Wales during (a) Exercise Highland Cardinal and (b) Exercise OSEX 16.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties will be carried out during exercises Highland Cardinal and OSEX 16.

Mr. Neubert: A maximum of 40 low-level sorties daily are planned for Exercise Highland Cardinal and a maximum of 120 daily for Exercise OSEX 16.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South of 16 May, Official Report, column 140, he will outline in the Official Report the considerable differences in the situations pertaining to British and United States of America nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: The temporal and special variations of the potential radiation hazards that may arise from nuclear tests depend, in a complex manner, on various factors, including device type and disposition, topography of the location, meteorological conditions and the test objectives. The doses of radiation received by individuals depend on the position and movement of individuals relative to the hazards, making due allowance for any protective measures taken. It is thus inevitable that the situations pertaining to United Kingdom and United States were considerably different.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to seek support of the Governments of the United States and France to introduce an amendment to the London dumping convention to allow the sea dumping of military radioactive waste arising, including submarine hulls.

Mr Sainsbury [holding answer 4 May 1989]: The London dumping convention allows the disposal at sea of low and intermediate-level radioactive waste, in accordance with internationally agreed guidelines and procedures, although a non-binding moratorium has been in place since 1983. The Government have decided not to resume sea-disposal of drummed radioactive waste, including waste of military origin. None the less, the Government intend to keep open this option for large items arising from decommissioning operations, although they have taken no decisions about how redundant nuclear submarines will be disposed of.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Income Support

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children were in families on income support in 1988-89.

Mr. Needham: The appropriate analysis of the income support caseload has not yet been completed.I shall let the hon. Member have the information as soon as it is available

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number of acute beds available and (b) the number of non-acute beds available in each health board; and if he will give the total for each year.

Mr. Needham: The information is set out in the table:

Environmental Protection

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his statement in the First Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, Official Report, 15 February, column 16, concerning the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, whether written consents under that order from the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) to owners or occupiers of areas of special scientific interest for the carrying out of notifiable operations on such land will specify the exact nature of the consented operation, its limits in time and area, and such other conditions as may be deemed appropriate.

Mr. Needham: Written consents issued to owners or occupiers of land with within areas of special scientific interest under the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 will specify the exact nature of the consented operations and, where relevant, any limits in time and area. Consents will also specify such other conditions as may be deemed appropriate.

There will be no difference in the form of consents issued under this order from those issued under the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his statement in the First Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, Official Report, 15 February, column 16, whether he has now considered further the matter of progress in designing special protection areas in Northern Ireland under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds, and if he will make a statement on measures to speed up the process.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has re-examined the procedures for the designation of special protection areas under the terms of EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds. While priority is being given to the declaration of areas of special scientific interest under the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, where ASSIs are also potential SPAs, the Department will proceed towards SPA designation as soon as is practicable after such ASSI declarations have been confirmed.

It is expected that a small number of SPAs will be designated under the above arrangements during the next two years.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the distribution of single payments and caseloads at social security offices during the period 16 December 1986 to 28 July 1987.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The information is set out in the table.

[1] During the period in question there were three counts of the caseload as shown.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the total numbers in receipt of (a) mobility allowance (b) attendance allowance and (c) invalid care allowance and to indicate the total number of claims received for each allowance in each of the past five years indicating the number of claims from each year which were successful.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The total numbers of people in Northern Ireland in receipt of mobility allowance, attendance allowance and invalid care allowance at the latest date for which information is available are 13,530, 29,394 and 6,174 respectively. The total numbers of claims received for each allowance in each of the last five years and the total numbers of claims allowed in those years are as follows:

Year	Claims received	Claims allowed
	Mobility Allowance
1984	4,544	2,055
1985	5,017	2,330
1986	5,427	2,959

Attendance Allowance Board

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of adjudication officer decisions reviewed by the Attendance Allowance Board in each of the past five years, the number of the board's own decisions which were further reviewed and the outcome of such reviews.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 May 1989]: The numbers of decisions reviewed by the Attendance Allowance Board in each of the last five years and the outcomes of the reviews are as follows:

Year	Decisions Reviewed	Claims allowed on Review
1984	1,663	899
1985	1,665	866
1986	2,079	830
1987	2,982	1,219
1988	3,055	1,487

The number of appeals on a point of law heard by the social security commissioner against decisions of the Attendance Allowance Board in each of the last five years and the outcomes of such appeals are as follows:

Year	Appeals Heard	Appeals Allowed
1984	6	3
1985	16	5
1986	22	7
1987	33	8
1988	71	17

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of adjudication officer decisions in respect of mobility allowance which were reviewed on appeal by the medical board in each of the past four years, the outcome of such reviews, the number of such decisions further appealed to the medical appeal tribunal and the outcome of such appeals.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 May 1989]: The numbers of appeals heard by medical boards and medical appeal tribunals in respect of claims to mobility allowance in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years and the outcome of such appeals are as follows:

Year	Appeals heard	Appeals allowed
Appeals to medical boards
1985	733	188
1986	822	186
1987	697	135

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary have lost their lives in the course of their duty in Northern Ireland during each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 18 May 1989]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of Officers
1984	10
1985	23
1986	15
1987	17
1988	7

These figures include members of the RUC and RUC Reserve.

Medical Cards

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many medical cards were issued in Northern Ireland in each of the five weeks beginning 16 April, 23 April and 30 April, 7 May and 14 May and the five corresponding weeks in 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The information is as follows:

Week Commencing	Number of Medical Cards issued 1989	1988
16 April	1,372	527
23 April	785	516
30 April	845	555
7 May	1,789	840
14 May[1]	1,148	786

[1] Up to and including 18 May.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The information available is as follows:

Department	Vehicles purchased by department		Vehicles purchased by public sector agencies		Number of British made vehicles[1]
	Number	Value[2]	Number	Value[2]
DANI	74	918,705	—	—	52

DED	3	22,902	213	2,120,527	161

[1] This list is based on the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom—produced if the United Kingdom context exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value.
[2] Includes VAT.
[3] Department of Education was unable to establish number of British made vehicles.
[4] Department of Health and Social Services could provide only a total figure for both Departments and the public sector.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the current financial position of the fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: After a series of good years the United Kingdom fishing industry is on a strong financial footing. Although landings so far this year are down compared with 1988, their average value remains high. And fuel prices, a major cost item for most fishermen, have fallen substantially over the past five years.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the level of third country fish imports since the beginning of the current year; and what assessment he has made of possible breaches of the reference pricing system.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Imports of fresh, chilled and frozen fish from countries outside the European Community in the first three months of 1989 were 47,552 tonnes at a value of £59 million. A small number of consignments have been below the reference price but none has been significant enough to trigger Community action .

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the areas of priority in the fishing industry which he will seek to raise at the Council of Ministers on 21 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are a number of issues of concern to the industry which I expect to be discussed by the Council and I will take a view on what else I need to raise when I see the draft agenda.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on tonnage and horsepower in the United Kingdom fishing fleet and on how these relate to the targets accepted by Her Majesty's Government under the multi-annual guidance programme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The size of the United Kingdom fishing fleet, as at 1 January 1989, was 174,774 gross registered tonnage (GRT) and 890,995 kilowatts (kw) (1,211,753 horsepower). Under our multi-annual guidance programme the United Kingdom is obliged to reduce fleet capacity to 161,231 GRT and 831,708 kw by the end of this year, to 150,336 GRT and 785,340 kw by the end of 1990, and to 141,620 GRT and 748,245 kw by the end of the programme on 31 December 1991.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will reconsider the decision to grant an extension of registration and licensing facilities to the flags-of-convenience vessels currently under legal debate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There has been no decision to grant an extension of registration to any flag-of-convenience vessels. With effect from 1 April 1989 any vessels which failed to satisfy the new registration rules for fishing vessels under part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 have been removed from the register, and cannot lawfully fish against United Kingdom quotas.

Provided they do not fish in the meantime, the owners of those vessels party to the legal challenge to the new registration rules (in the Factortame case) have until 1 October 1989 to transfer their licences upon the sale of the vessels to genuine British owners who meet the new registration rules.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further consideration he has given to the introduction of a scheme of decommissioning of the fishing fleet under European Community regulation No. 4028/86.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on Monday 22 May to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman), at column 372.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on licensing policy for the United Kingdom fishing fleet.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Access to United Kingdom quota species continues to be governed by the restrictive licensing scheme first introduced in 1984 and subsequently amended on several occasions. Fisheries Departments are considering whether further amendments might be desirable in the light of the wide-ranging and diverse responses from the fishing industry to our consultation exercise last year.

Brogdale Experimental Horticulture Station

Mr. Straw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the Brogdale experimental horticulture station is to be closed; and what arrangements will be made for the care and maintenance of the national fruit variety collection there.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The proposal to close Brogdale experimental horticulture station, which was announced to the House on 21 March, stems from the withdrawal of public funding from near market R and D. Final decisions on the closure of Brogdale will not be taken until consultations with industry have been concluded. We intend however to ensure that the national fruit collection is preserved, and we are considering what arrangements should be made in the event that the station is closed.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total cost to public funds of (a) the Brogdale experimental horticulture station and (b) the national fruit variety collection there, for each of the years 1979 to date in (i) current prices and (ii) constant prices.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information relating to the gross full economic cost of Brogdale experimental husbandry station from 1981-82 is as follows:

Gross full economic cost (£ thousands)

Year	(a) current prices	(b) constant prices (1987-88 base)
1981-82	502	672
1982-83	656	820
1983-84	739	882
1984-85	785	892
1985-86	917	984
1986-87	876	911
1987-88	881	881

Important elements of the overall cost of maintaining the national fruit collection are undertaken in common with support to other work undertaken at Brogdale EHS. Separate NFC costings have not been collected throughout the period in question, but on the basis of manpower required to maintain the NFC it is estimated that, as part of Brogdale EHS, the NFC accounted for some 7 per cent. of Brogdale's total costs in 1987-88, equivalent to some £60,000. It is not thought likely that this relative cost has been significantly different in earlier years.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is intended to change the cash and running cost limits on any Department vote for which he has responsibility.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised Estimate the cash limit for class IV, vote 2, (Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce; administration) will be reduced by £1,284,000 from £39,509,000 to £38,225,000, and that for class IV, vote 5 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; departmental research, advisory services and administration) will be reduced by £72,000 from £257,014,000 to £256,942,000. The running cost limit for class IV, vote 2 will also be reduced by £76,000 from £19,957,000 to £19,881,000 and that for class IV, vote 5 will be reduced by £72,000 from £262,458,000 to £262,386,000.

The reductions in the running cost limits on votes 2 and 5 reflect the transfer of provision to the Scottish Office administration vote (class XVI, vote 21) for processing data from England and Wales in connection with the beef special premium scheme. The remainder of the reduction to the cash limit of £1,208,000 on vote 2 arises on IBAP's agency payments to DANI in respect of the beef variable premium scheme which has ended.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the letters he received on 22 June 1988 and 15 November 1988 from Sir Richard Southwood which contained the interim recommendations of his committee and Government action on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Yes, I have arranged for copies of the letters to be placed in the Library of the House today.

Meat Products (Animal Brains)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any statutory restrictions exist on the use of animal brains in the manufacture of human foodstuffs.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 prohibit the use of brains in the manufacture of uncooked meat products. I shall shortly be issuing proposals for legislation which would prohibit the sale of baby foods containing brains and other specified offal. I understand through trade sources that brains are not used in baby foods.

Pollution

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now ban the discharge into waters off the north Devon coast of untreated sewage and chemical waste.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The discharge of waste by pipeline is regulated by water authorities. Water authorities' own discharges of sewage by pipeline are regulated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

My Ministry licenses deposits from vessels. There are no licences for deposit off the north Devon coast of chemical waste. Most of the sewage sludge which is licensed has been treated. The disposal site is periodically monitored and no significant adverse effects have been identified.

HEALTH

NHS Reform

8. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates will be the average capital charge to self-governing hospital trusts in London.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Self-governing trusts will not pay capital charges, but they will be given a financial regime similar to the capital charging system for district managed hospitals. The precise details are still being finalised and I expect to give further details within the next few weeks.

12. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number and location of those hospitals considering self-governing status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regional health authorities have been asked to send expressions of interest to the Department by 31 May. But I understand that well over 100 expressions of interest have been received throughout the country.

13. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the White Paper proposals for medical audit.

36. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the proposals for medical audit outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

60. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" on medical audit.

Mr. Mellor: Our proposals on medical audit have been widely welcomed by doctors. The White Paper made it clear that there would be discussions with the medical profession and first meetings have already been held in a constructive manner.

23. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether National Health Service self-governing hospitals will have to retain emergency services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, unless it would be better for these services to be provided elsewhere.

24. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that copies of the White Paper "Working for Patients" are available to doctors.

Mr. Mellor: Copies of "Working for Patients" were sent to health authorities and family practitioner committees to explain the proposals to doctors in their management role. Copies of the three working papers directly relevant to the family doctor service were sent to all GPs. Individual copies of the White Paper are available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office, price £8·80, or by order through public libraries.

29. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from members of the public about his White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor: In excess of 4,000 letters.

31. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the proposals to allow hospitals to become self governing National Health Service hospitals.

47. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on his proposals to allow hospitals to become self governing.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a large number of letters from members of the public and many responses from representational bodies on the White Paper proposals including those relating to enabling hospitals to become self governing within the NHS. Many people find the proposals attractive.

32. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the consequences of allowing general practitioners' practices to hold their own budgets.

53. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the proposals to allow general practitioners' practices to hold their own budgets will affect patient care.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Practice budgets will offer general medical practitioners new opportunities to improve the quality and standard of service to their patients. GPs with budgets will have control over large sums of taxpayers' money which they will be able to use as they judge best for the provision of care to their patients. This means that GPs will, for the first time, be able to back their referral decisions for those conditions covered by the budget with taxpayers' money to provide the chosen hospital with finance for the treatment. As a result hospitals will be encouraged to be more responsive to the needs of individual GPs and their patients, and GPs in the practice budget scheme will have a much greater role than at present in influencing the provision of hospital services. This can only be of benefit to patients and to the NHS as a whole.

33. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from professional bodies and trades unions concerning the review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: A good many expressing many different views.

34. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the effect on doctors who choose to operate a practice budget, as proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients" of an overspend in their budget.

Mr. Mellor: There is of course no question of patients not receiving the treatment they need as a result of a budget overspend. Larger practices which volunteer to hold a practice budget will be allowed to overspend by up to 5 per cent. a year on the basis that a corresponding reduction will be made the following year. Where the overspend is due to the changed cirumstances of a practice such as an increase in the number of patients or in their relative need for services, the practice may ask for a review of its budget. If a practice overspends by more than 5 per cent., or persistently overspends at a lower level, the family practitioner committee will initiate a thorough audit. An overspend greater than 5 per cent. for two years in succession may lead to the practice losing the right to hold its own budget.

35. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of Health how will patients be affected by the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

55. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the consequences for patient care of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our proposals will produce a better quality of care for all NHS patients, including elderly and chronically sick people. We intend to bring all services up to the standard of the very best and to make certain that taxpayers' money is used to best effect from the patients' point of view. The proposals reflect our strong commitment to the principles on which the NHS was founded and will ensure that it is more than ready to face the rapidly changing and rising demands upon it as medical science progresses and the average age of the population rises.

37. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether under the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", a patient could go without necessary drugs if a general practitioner overspends on his or her drug budget.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. As a result of our proposals no patient could ever go without necessary drugs in any circumstances. Indicative prescribing budgets for GPs will be set at sensible and realistic levels and in discussion with each practice to reflect the needs for drugs of patients in that practice. While general medical practitioners will be expected to aim to contain their prescribing within their indicative budgets, we fully accept that the legitimate demand for drugs may not follow a consistent pattern at practice level and that some practices may exceed their indicative budgets with good reason. There will be no question of any doctor ever being prevented from prescribing necessary medicine for any patient, whether or not he or she has overspent or will overspend his indicative budget.

39. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the consequences of the new general practitioners' contract for rural practices.

50. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how rural practices will be affected by the new general practitioners' contract.

51. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement of the future of general practitioners' practices in rural areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As I announced to the House on 5 May, we have now reached agreement with the general medical services committee's negotiators on all the major outstanding issues on the new contract for GPs. We have modified our proposals in several ways which will be welcomed by GPs serving rural areas. We have agreed to retain the present rural practice payments scheme pending its revision by the Central Advisory Committee on Rural Practice Payments. We have included home visits in the hours of availability to patients required of GPs, although in consequence we have raised the number of hours to 26 per week. We have agreed that the requirement for GPs to be available over five days a week may be reduced to four days where the GP carries out other health-related activity in the public service (for example, service in a community hospital).

We have also agreed that ad hoc minor surgical operations may be aggregated for the purpose of claiming entitlement to the new minor surgery sessional payments. Many GPs serving rural areas will benefit from retention of seniority payments (though reduced in value) and from the extension of the higher night visit fee to rotas of up to 10 GPs. Retention of partnership average list size for calculating entitlement to basic practice allowance, and the lowering of the threshold for full basic practice allowance to 1,200 patients rather than 1,500 as previously proposed, will also benefit GPs in rural areas.

The general medical services committee has agreed to put the agreement to the annual conference of local medical committee representatives in June on the basis recommended by its negotiators.

45. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the proposals affecting family practitioner committees in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor: We have received responses to the White Paper "Working for Patients" from a large number of organisations and individuals. Many of these have included comments on the proposals affecting family practitioner committees.

46. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on allowing district health authorities to purchase health care from hospitals.

57. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on his proposals to allow health authorities to purchase health care from hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a large number of representations on the White Paper proposals, from statutory, voluntary and professional bodies and from individuals including right hon. and hon. Members. Many have welcomed the proposed relationship between health authorities and general practitioner practice budget holders on the one hand and hospitals as the providers of services on the other since this will allow contracts to specify services, quality of standards and levels of agreed funding, enabling money to follow patient choice. We will take careful note of these comments in taking forward our plans for implementing our policies.

49. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will commission any pilot studies of general practitioner practices operating practice budgets similar to those proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor: Eligibility for practice budgets will be confined, at least initially, to practices or groups of practices with a registered list of at least 11,000 patients to provide sufficient budgetary flexibility. Practices will also need to be able to demonstrate the ability to manage budgets including having adequate administrative support and IT and information systems. On this basis we see no need for separate pilot studies of practice budgets but we will of course keep the system under review once it has started to operate in April 1991 and make any improvements which are necessary in the light of experience.

61. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received to date in response to his proposals for National Health Service reforms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) earlier today.

65. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expressions of interest he has received from hospitals in Shropshire for the granting of National Health Service hospital trust status.

Mr. Mellor: None. However, I understand that the West Midlands regional health authority has received a number of expressions of interest in self government from hospitals in the region; these will be sent to the Department by 31 May.

66. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the proposed indicative drugs budgets for general practitioners will affect patient care.

Mr. Mellor: Indicative prescribing budgets will improve patient care. They will provide a further incentive to general practitioners to examine their prescribing patterns critically to ensure that they prescribe in the most effective way possible. This includes prescribing only when and for as long as necessary. More effective prescribing is better for patients. All patients will always get the drugs they need.

69. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress made on his proposals to cash limit general practitioners' budgets.

Mr. Mellor: We are making good progress in developing details plans for implementing practice budgets for GPs from 1 April 1991. These budgets will be available to GPs who fulfil the eligibility criteria and choose to opt for them in view of the new freedoms of choice they will confer on the practice.

74. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether National Health Service self governing hospitals will have to retain core services.

Mr. Mellor: Yes, unless it would be better for these services to be provided elsewhere.

75. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have applied for self-budgeting status in accordance with the provisions in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

76. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests for information he has received from National Health Service hospitals interested in achieving self governing status.

Mr. Mellor: Regional health authorities are currently considering expressions of interest in individual hospitals becoming self governing. They have been asked to send the expressions of interest to the Department, together with their comments, by 31 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates to be the optimum size of practice for a general practitioner in an average urban area; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effects of the increased capitation element in the general practitioners' contract on doctor-patient relationships.

43. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what detailed assessment he has made of the effect of the new general practitioners' contract on list sizes.

73. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what detailed assessment he has made of the implications of the new general practitioners' contract for doctors' list sizes.

Mr. Mellor: We believe that the increase to 60 per cent. of the proportion of general practitioners' income represented by capitation payments will stimulate greater competition among general practitioners and make services more responsive to patients' needs.

Our proposals for making more information available to patients and making it easier to change doctors will encourage patients to choose the general practitioner who provides the best service. We expect therefore that general practitioners who provide a wide range of high-quality services will gain patients, and those who do not will have to improve their services in order to maintain income. List sizes will, however, settle at levels consistent with the provision and maintenance of high-quality services, because patients will not join or remain on the list of a general practitioner whose services are below standard. We do not consider that there is an optimum list size, because the quality of services depends on a range of factors (for example, the size and skills of the practice team) of which list size is only one.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what detailed assessment he has made of the implication of the new general practitioners' contract for women doctors.

44. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the proposed contract for general practitioners.

54. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to attract more women doctors into general practice.

56. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received from the British Medical Association relating to the general practitioners' contract.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed) and Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) earlier today.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the effects of the proposed changes in the remuneration of general practitioners on the gross income of those who do not opt for their own budgets; and what is the intended effect of the new arrangements in terms of (a) the number of patients per doctor and (b) the number of staff employed by doctors, and their remuneration.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown), for Slough (Mr. Watts) and for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) today. Under the proposals for GP practice budgets set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" and working paper 3, practices that opt to become budget holders may invest any savings on their annual budget in improving the services they offer to patients. The Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration will continue, as now, to recommend the average net income and indirectly reimbursed expenses of all GPs, whether budget holders or not. Other expenses incurred by GPs are reimbursed directly.

We expect the number of staff employed by GPs to increase as a result of our intention to invest more in practice teams, and to remove the present restraints on their number and the range of qualifying duties. By enabling FPCs to target funds on areas of greatest need, the deployment of practice team staff will become more cost effective.

Halton General Hospital

14. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to visit Halton general hospital to discuss the future of the hospital.

Mr. Freeman: I look forward to a visit when convenient.

Ministers make special efforts to visit as many hospitals as possible.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the target number of patients to be treated in Halton district general hospital in 1988-89; and what was the actual outcome in that year.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may care to contact the chairman of the Halton district health authority.

Competitive Tendering

15. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-medical services provided within National Health Service hospitals are now subject to competitive tendering.

Mr. Freeman: I am aware of at least 20 different non-medical services which health authorities have subjected to competitive tendering, most frequently as the result of local initiatives.

NHS Funding

16. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the level of funding of the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The level of funding for the NHS is a matter of considerable interest, often raised in correspondence and at meetings and visits; since 1979 expenditure has increased by some 40 per cent. in real terms and we are now spending more on the National Health Service than ever before.

62. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the additional funds allocated to the National Health Service this year are to be used to repay deficits accumulated in earlier years.

Mr. Freeman: Within the additional resources allocated to the National Health Service, combined with continued improvements in efficiency, including planned rationalisations of service, authorities are expected to plan to bring income and expenditure into balance. Where a region has funded excess spending by districts in earlier years the repayment of such funding, including use of the additional resources made available this year, is a matter for agreement between the region and districts concerned.

Medical Control Agency

17. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the pharmaceutical industry contributes to the financing of the Medical Control Agency.

Mr. Mellor: From 1 April 1989 the full cost of the Medicines Control Agency work is to be funded by the pharmaceutical industry, save for the costs of the work of the British Pharmacopoeia Commission whose staff are provided by the agency, the cost of NHS inspection work and certain other minor matters. Payment will be made through licence and inspection fees.

Nurses

18. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeal cases concerning nurses' gradings have been (a) lodged, (b) upheld and (c) refused since 1 April 1988, by authority.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) earlier today.

68. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on nursing staff levels in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Mellor: As at 31 March 1989 the Oxfordshire DHA had 4,232.1 "worked whole time equivalent" nursing and midwifery staff. Recruitment of trained nursing staff is satisfactory in most specialties and an additional £200,000 has been made available by the district to the John Radcliffe hospital to deploy additional staff on medical and surgical wards. A new nurse training scheme, due to start in October, has attracted a large number of applicants.

Bassetlaw Hospital

19. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters he has had from members of the public or local organisations in Bassetlaw supporting the application from the Bassetlaw health authority to turn the Bassetlaw hospital, Worksop into a self governing trust.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None, but only one against. If an application is made for Bassetlaw health authority to become self governing I will look to the Trent regional health authority to seek the views of all those with an interest.

Human Placenta

20. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the sale of human placenta by National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: There is a long-standing arrangement under which health authorities can make available placenta to a commercial organisation. I understand this is used for therapeutic purposes (for example the manufacture of albumen and gamma globulin) and that a small handling charge is paid to participating health authorities to cover storage costs.

Family Practitioner Committees

21. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the intended effects of the changes in composition of the family practitioner committees proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Family practitioner committees will have a greatly enhanced management role in future as a result of the implementation of the proposals in the two White Papers: "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients". I therefore intend to create committees more suited to taking the necessary decisions and managing the contracts of the doctors, dentists, opticians and pharmacists in contract with the NHS in their area. I believe that FPCs should play a significant role in protecting and raising the standards of primary health care for patients.

British Medical Association

22. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the British Medical Association; and what matters were discussed.

28. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the British Medical Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friends to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) and Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind).

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the British Medical Association; and what he expects to discuss.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand from newspaper reports that the BMA wishes to meet me again to discuss the White Paper on NHS reforms. I expect therefore to have a meeting with it on that subject in the near future.

Disabled People

25. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financing of local authority and health authority services for the disabled for which his Department has responsibility.

41. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of expenditure on those services for disabled people for which his Department is responsible.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to identify separately the financing of National Health Service expenditure on services for this client group. They will have benefited, however, from the growth in expenditure on the National Health Service by around 40 per cent. in real terms since 1979. The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy estimates that in 1988-89 gross expenditure on local authority personal social services for physically and sensorily handicapped people will total over £200 million.

NHS Expenditure

26. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of National Health Service health care expenditure spent in the north-west region as a percentage of total National Health Service health care expenditure, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987-88 total revenue and capital expenditure by health authorities comprising the north-western region was £1,078·4 million, which represented 9 per cent. of the total expenditure of all regional and district health authorities in England.

Fair Hearing Campaign

27. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to respond to the recommendations put to him by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in the fair hearing campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Royal National Institute for the Deaf is currently refining its proposals in the light of comments it has received from a number of organisations concerned with the provision of hearing aids. We shall need to consider the very complex issues involved in the context of RNID's revised proposals.

Contracting Out

30. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he can give an estimate of the savings made in the last available year from the contracting out of services within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 21 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King), at column 564.

Tobacco Advertising

40. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the second report of the committee for monitoring arrangements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 18 April, at columns 119-20.

Midwives

42. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on midwives regrading.

Mr. Mellor: All midwives have been regraded within the new clinical grading structure with effect from 1 April 1988. Information on the assimilation from old grades to the new has been placed in the Library. A number of appeals against gradings are outstanding. Assimilation to the new structure resulted in an average pay increase for 1988-89 of over 20 per cent. The new structure provides greatly improved career opportunities.

Griffiths Report

48. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the recommendations of the Griffiths report.

Mr. Mellor: We have received over 270 representations from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public about Sir Roy's recommendations. Recent responses have been received from a number of national organisations and professional groups. We are studying all responses carefully as we formulate our own proposals.

Occupational Health Facilities

52. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities which are providing occupational health facilities to private companies and public bodies.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect this information centrally. It is for individual health authorities to decide whether to enter into such arrangements.

Registered Homes Act 1984

58. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to review the scope of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 23 February, at column 793.

In Vitro Fertilisation

59. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of IVF within the south-west region, with particular reference to (a) its availability free of charge in Bristol and (b) its non-availability in the North Devon health area.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 15 May, at columns 80-81, and my pursuant reply to him yesterday.

Homeless and Rootless (Wakefield)

63. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received from the Wakefield family practitioner committee on action taken to help the homeless and rootless; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The family practitioner committee has secured the provision of general medical services on the one official travellers' camp in the Wakefield area. The service, which began on 5 April using the Wakefield health authority's mobile clinic, is provided by a local doctor supported by community nursing staff. No other problems have been encountered.

Hospital Closures

64. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital closures proposals have been confirmed by his Department since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Ministerial approval has been given to 85 proposals for total closures of hospitals/units from 1979 to end 1988.

Childhood Cancer

67. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by research teams funded by his Department in identifying the causes of childhood cancer incidence.

Mr. Freeman: The Department's commissioned research into childhood cancer complements a wide range of studies internationally. A variety of possible factors have been investigated, and while some progress is being made, in general, specific causes are not fully understood.

Consultants (Dismissals)

71. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultants and (b) other doctors in hospitals were dismissed in each of the past 20 years.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information routinely and could obtain it only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Schools

72. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the role of university medical schools in relation to the proposals in "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received representations from various organisations and individuals, including the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, and the Joint Committee of Metropolitan and Provincial Deans, which represents the deans of United Kingdom medical schools and clinical facilities. Both these bodies have welcomed the commitment in "Working for Patients" to maintaining the quality of medical education. I will be considering their comments very carefully in developing our proposals.

In addition, paragraph 4.30 of "Working for Patients" explains that the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education will carry forward its work and make recommendations in the light of the proposals in the White Paper. The steering group contains representatives of all the major bodies with responsibility for medical and dental education, and is making a constructive contribution to the implementation of "Working for Patients".

Dental and Eye Tests (Changes)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there has been any change in the number of people having dental examinations and eye tests since the introduction of charges.

70. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the impact of the introduction of dental charges on the number of patients attending for dental checks.

Mr. Mellor: Demand for dental treatment is subject to short-term fluctuation irrespective of changes made to charges. The Department monitors the number of courses scheduled for payment each month. It is unlikely that an assessment of whether there has been an effect on demand following the introduction of the examination charge can be made until figures are available for the quarter July-September 1989.

There is no charge for NHS sight tests. We shall be monitoring the position in respect of private sight tests in the autumn.

Grading

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals in respect of clinical regrading are outstanding at the latest date; and when he expects the appeals to be concluded.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Electoral Registers

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 25 constituencies with the lowest electorate in 1989 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) England.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Constituencies with smallest electorate in 1989

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report each parliamentary constituency in England where electoral registrations have declined by more than 4 per cent. between 1988 and 1989, together with the size of the decline in each case in percentage and absolute figures.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary constituency	Change in total parliamentary electorate, 1988-89
	Number	Percentage
Manchester, Blackley	−2,421	−4·1
Harrow East	−3,742	−4·6

Transplants

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the General Medical Council has ever disciplined a doctor for breach of ethics relating to transplants.

Mr. Freeman: The General Medical Council is an independent statutory authority: I suggest that the hon. Member approaches the council for this information.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will specify which will be the next supra-regionally funded heart transplant centre.

Mr. Freeman: We have asked the supra regional services advisory group for advice, and expect to make an announcement later in the year.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people now hold donor cards.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 20 December 1988, at column 241.

Body Scanners

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, which NHS hospitals in the West Midlands RHA at present have whole body scanner facilities; when the equipment was installed in each case; which hospitals it is planned to provide with such facilities as new, or to replace obsolete facilities, in the next 12 months; and which hospitals have paid for equipment in whole or part from voluntary and charitable sources.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

ENVIRONMENT

Coventry Evening Telegraph (Article)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the publications in which the Minister for Local Government; the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) had printed any article in the form, length or content as that which appeared on Tuesday 9 May in the Coventry Evening Telegraph.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government distributed more than 500 articles to newspapers throughout the country. Whether their editors chose to print the articles is a matter for them.

African Elephant

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what fresh initiatives his Department is taking both in respect of unilateral action by Britain and to mobilise international support for action to protect the African elephant and to outlaw the use of ivory in developed nations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 May 1989]: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to reduce chlorofluorocarbon damage to the ozone layer by arranging for the collection of redundant domestic and commercial refrigerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

I am aware of only one nationwide retailer of domestic refrigerators which has arrangements to collect old appliances when delivering new ones, and for recovery of the CFC refrigerants for recycling. The Government are encouraging others to do the same, and officials are discussing with local authority associations what can be done with the appliances which end up with them. Warren Spring laboratory is currently considering the possibility of economic recovery from domestic appliances and the Department is assessing the need for further research in this area.

CFCs in domestic refrigerators account for only about 3 per cent. of total CFC use in the United Kingdom. There are considerable technical and logistical difficulties in recovering and recycling CFCs from the coolant systems and particularly from the foam insulation in such appliances.

Community Charge

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement clarifying the sentence in his Department's leaflet "The Community Charge—How It Will Work For You", which reads

"Filling in the form does not mean you will have to pay the community charge for anyone else" in relation to the provision in the Act for joint liability.

Mr. Gummer: The section of the leaflet to which the hon. Member refers deals with the process of registration. The High Court said in the judgment given on 16 May

"The filling in of a registration form does not in itself mean that you will have to pay the community charge for anyone else or indeed yourself. As a matter of law it is no more than the first step in a process which, subject to rights of appeal, will result in names appearing in the register."

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the illustrative figures for the poll tax in Nottingham given since 1987; and when he now expects to estimate the figure to be levied in May 1990.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Published illustrative figures show a community charge in Nottingham of £207 in 1987-88 and £251 in 1988-89. With the proposed transitional safety net arrangements fully in place, the published illustrative figures are £195 for 1987-88 and £231 for 1988-89. Illustrative 1989-90 community charges in England will be published once data needed from local authorities have been received and analysed.

The illustrative figure for Nottingham will be dependent on spending by Nottinghamshire county council and Nottingham city council. If both the county council and the city council had budgeted to spend according to the assumptions used in the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement and had rated accordingly, the 1989-90 illustrative community charge in Nottingham (disregarding the transitional arrangements) would be £251.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the community charge in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: The overwhelming majority of local authorities are making good progress in preparing for the introduction of the community charge. Registration began this week in most areas of England and Wales. The leaflet informing people of their rights and duties has been distributed, despite an attempt to stop it.

Sea Dredged Aggregates

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the principles upon which he monitors the effect of aggregate dredging on coastal defences and erosion of beaches.

Mr. Chope: Government policy, set out in minerals planning guidance note 6, is that licences to dredge for sand and gravel are not and will not be granted by the Crown Estate if it is likely that coastal erosion would result.

The arrangements for consulting Government Departments and other bodies on applications to dredge minerals from United Kingdom territorial waters and the United Kingdom continental shelf ensure that all proposals are referred to consultants for professional advice at an early stage. If these investigations demonstrate an unavoidable risk of coast erosion, the Crown Estate would reject the application without further consideration.

The responsibility for the monitoring of coastal defences and erosion of beaches lies with the appropriate individual local authority.

Football Stadiums

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance his Department will give to football clubs to encourage all-seater stadiums.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no plans to provide financial assistance to football clubs. I shall be discussing the question of all-seater stadiums with the football authorities shortly.

Tourism

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have a report on the experiment of deemed consent for directional advertising signs for tourist attractions and facilities.

Mr. Chope: The part-time consultant who is monitoring the experiment in east Kent has submitted an interim report, which is now being considered.

Pollution Inspectorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to monitor the consequences for local authorities of the reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution;

(2) what plans he has for monitoring the effect on the relationship between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and local authorities of the reorganisation of the inspectorate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We recognise the importance of regular links with local authorities. We shall give high priority to maintaining good communications with them as we develop the reorganisation proposals. The effectiveness of the reorganised inspectorate will be kept under close review.

The Government's 1986 consultation document on air pollution control in Great Britain set out new control powers for local authorities dealing with a second tier of scheduled processes. These powers will establish new working relationships between the inspectorate and local authorities. We have set up a local authority unit to monitor the effectiveness of the operation of the proposed controls. The inspectorate of pollution liaison committee will also continue to discuss matters of common interest between local authorities and HMIP and the Environment Departments.

Homelessness

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to release empty residential property belonging to his Department for use by homeless people.

Mr. Chope: There are no empty properties owned by the Department of the Environment at present suitable for use as temporary accommodation for the homeless.

Should empty residential properties not be required for further Government use and they cannot be sold because of legal restrictions or sold within six months due to market conditions they are offered first to the local housing authority and then to a housing association.

Playgrounds

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations regarding safety standards for the surfaces of public playgrounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received 34 written representations on this matter since the beginning of March and I have met my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) to discuss his Bill.

Water Standards

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds for the (a) Yorkshire water authority and (b) Severn-Trent water authority, that enables him to assess the extent to which potable water in these water authorities complies with the European Community directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/77/EEC); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Department has information about supplies made by the Yorkshire water authority and the Severn-Trent water authority which regularly do not comply with one or other of the standards in the EC drinking water directive and about programmes to achieve compliance. Information concerning supplies where there is occasional non-compliance is being submitted by these authorities in the context of further improvement programmes.

M20 Service Area (Maidstone)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the report of the inquiry carried out by his inspector into the motorway service area proposed for the M20 in the Maidstone area to be published.

Mr. Chope: The inspector's reports on the public inquiry into planning applications in respect of two proposals for motorway service areas at Hollingbourne, and into a related draft compulsory purchase order, will be published when the decision letter on these matters is issued. We hope to make these decisions in the near future.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the remit of his inspector carrying out the inquiry into the proposal for a motorway service area on the M20 in the Maidstone area has been amended to take account of the proposed route for the high-speed rail link passing through the same area.

Mr. Chope: No. British Rail published its proposed route after the public inquiry into the motorway service area proposals had closed. I understand that discussions between British Rail and the Department of Transport indicate that the proposed route could be accommodated under the proposed motorway service area site and that it would not materially affect the land use planning questions considered at the inquiry.

Registers of Financial Interests

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the desirability of establishing registers of financial interests for (a) county and (b) district councillors; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We said in the "Conduct of Local Authority Business—Government Response to the Widdicombe Committee of Inquiry" (Cm. 433) that we propose to introduce legislation for statutory registers of pecuniary interests for councillors (see paragraphs 4.3-4.4). We have set up a working group with the local authority associations to consider what such registers should contain. We hope to introduce amendments on this subject to the current Local Government and Housing Bill.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum spent since 1983 by the Nature Conservancy Council on management agreements under section 15 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to prevent damage to sites of special scientific interest by afforestation; and if he will state the number of sites of special scientific interest involved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council has spent some £1·3 million since 1983 on management agreements under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968 to prevent damage to 21 sites of special scientific interest by afforestation.

Aveley Methane Ltd.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the ownership of Aveley Methane Ltd.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that Aveley Methane Ltd. is a joint venture involving the East London waste authority, Coal Processing Ltd. and merchant banking interests to utilise landfill gas from a site at Aveley, for which the East London waste authority holds the freehold.

Barking and Dagenham (Financial Assistance)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the London borough of Barking and Dagenham, seeking a policy of prior consultation before a statutory order under clause 30(5) and (6) of the Local Government and Housing Bill is made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a letter from the clerk of the East London waste authority (who is also the town clerk of the London borough of Barking and Dagenham) on the subject. We have already made it clear that we intend to consult local government about such an order before it is made.

Planning Law

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations are taking place, and with whom, on potential changes to planning legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In January my right hon. Friend published a White Paper on the future of development plans. In March he consulted interested bodies about proposed improvements to land compensation and compulsory purchase legislation, and about possible changes to the enforcement of planning control arising from the report of Mr. Robert Carnwath, QC.

The Department is also currently inviting views on the following consultation papers:

	Final date for comments
Permitted use rights in the countryside	30 June
Planning application forms	31 May
Review of Special Industrial Use Classes (B3 to B7)	14 July
Compulsory purchase by public authorities (Inquiries Procedure) rules	21 June
Planning control over hazardous substances	17 July

In addition, my right hon. Friend is currently undertaking on behalf of the Law Commission a limited consultation with organisations with an interest in the proposed consolidation of the Planning Acts. Consolidation is a clarifying exercise and entails only minor changes and improvements to the existing statutes.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the Severn-Trent water authority's capital expenditure has changed since 1979.

Mr. Howard: The information requested by my hon. Friend is contained in the table:

Severn-Trent Capital Expenditure

	1979-80 £ million	1988-89 £ million
Cash	75·8	193·8
1988-89 prices	120·9	193·0
1988-89 estimated outturn	—	—

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the outcome of the recent consultation exercise on the application of the competition legislation to the functions transferred from the Inner London education authority to the inner boroughs and the City of London.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have decided to make regulations which will introduce a phased implementation programme for the introduction of competition under the Local Government Act 1988 between 1 August 1991 and 1 August 1992 and provide that competition under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 will apply from 1 April 1990. Of the functions which will transfer to the inner London boroughs and the City of London after ILEA's abolition on 1 April 1990 the following functions will be subject to competitive tender: vehicle maintenance, ground maintenance, school catering, building cleaning; and building maintenance.

Groundwater Levels (London)

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action her Majesty's Government propose, following the recent publication of the construction industry research and information report entitled, "The Engineering Implications of Rising Groundwater Levels in the Deep Aquifer Beneath London".

Mr. Howard: My Department, which was one of the sponsors of the research and is the lead Department on this matter, welcomes the report and is examinig its conclusions and recommendations carefully. We have asked the National Rivers Authority advisory committee to arrange for the National Rivers Authority, when it is established, to undertake the monitoring and predictive modelling of the water levels and the publication of the results; to examine the potential for increasing water abstractions from the aquifer below London; and to examine the feasibility and costs of a permanent dewatering scheme.

Water Bill

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of Commissioner Ripa de Meana's letter of 16 May about clause 20 of the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: I am arranging for copies of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House today.

Marine Habitats

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which marine habitats are being studied by the North sea task force; if these include inter-tidal and estuarine habitats; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much funding for North sea research, under the direction of the North sea task force, has been directed towards research into the importance of inter-tidal and estuarine habitats to the well being of the North sea biological system; which particular aspects are being examined; and if he will make a statement;

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 May 1989]: it is not envisaged that the North sea task force will itself commission research into the marine environment, but rather that it will act as a co-ordinating body to bring together the work of all the North sea states. Studies on the coastal margin and inter-tidal areas have been identified by the task force as a priority area and more detailed proposals will be considered at its third meeting in September 1989. Research on inter-tidal and estuarine habitats has also been identified as an sea research programme: detailed proposals are now being drawn up to supplement existing work in this area.

Shiplift Project (Faslane)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what length of delays will be experienced in the shiplift project at Faslane as a result of the construction difficulties being experienced by the contractor.

Mr. Chope: The delay to the shiplift construction programme is about six months but this will be contained within the float from the overall works programme.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will the extra costs involved as a result of the delay in construction of the shiplift project at Faslane; and who will bear these costs.

Mr. Chope: This is commercial and confidential at this stage.

Palace of Westminster (Space)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many square feet within the Palace of Westminster are currently used for (a) office space for Members, (b) office space for peers, (c) office space for staff, (d) bars and (e) restaurants/dining areas.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Gentleman has a particular point in mind and would like to write to me I will see what I can do.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Obscene Telephone Calls

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reports the police received of obscene telephone calls; and how many prosecutions in relation to obscene telephone calls were brought under section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 in each of the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally on the number of reports that the police receive of obscene telephone calls or for prosecutions under section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984. Such prosecutions are classified with other offences under this act and therefore cannot be separately identified.

Heatherington Report

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to place in the Vote Office copies of the Heatherington report on war crimes upon publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, North (Mr. Gorst) on 18 April at column 92.

Police Constables

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of police constables in (a) the Basildon area, and (b) England and Wales; what were the comparable figures in 1974, 1976, and each year from 1979 to 1988; and what is the provisional figure for 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Constables strength at 31 December	[1] Basildon sub-division	England and Wales
1974	103	74,740
1976	114	81,342
1979	119	83,684
1980	120	87,516
1981	120	89,509
1982	121	90,581
1983	123	90,512
1984	125	89,946
1985	123	89,775
1986	129	90,379
1987	132	92,850
1988	134	93,508
1989[3]	133	[2]94,300

[1] Deployment of officers between sub-divisions and to other police functions is a matter for the Chief Constable to decide.

[2] This figure is an estimate and includes around 800 new constable posts approved for 1989-90.

[3] Provisional.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the reintroduction of capital punishment.

Mr. John Patten: We receive many letters about capital punishment, both from the public and from Members of Parliament on behalf of their constituents. The precise figures are not available.

Bingo Clubs

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the weekly attendances at licensed bingo clubs; how many arrests have taken place in bingo clubs over the last 12 months; and how many complaints about the membership scheme for those attending bingo clubs he has received over the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The Gaming Board for Great Britain believes that in total there may be in excess of 2 million attendances weekly at licensed bingo clubs in Great Britain. There is no power of arrest for offences under the Gaming Act 1968, which regulates licensed bingo. Representations about this system of regulation which have been made to the Home Office or the board in the past five years are not categorised routinely by those referring to the requirement for gaming in licensed bingo clubs to be operated under a membership scheme.

Immigration

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent arrangements have been made for United Kingdom immigration controls to take place prior to embarkation at airports abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The immigration service operated successful trials over a one-week period at the end of March and the beginning of April in conjunction with Trans World Airlines operating into Heathrow terminal 3 from J. F. Kennedy airport in New York and with Piedmont airlines operating into Gatwick south from Charlotte. Both trials were successful and were well received by both the passengers and the companies involved. As far as any future activity is concerned the Immigration Act 1988 allows for the provision of additional services against full cost recovery and any applications for pre-clearance will be considered in this context.

Recent press reports have linked pre-clearance with enhanced security arrangements both here and in the United States of America. Whilst this may be an additional benefit, the arrangements are principally designed to ease congestion on arrival at United Kingdom airports.

Police Forces

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will be holding a review within the next five years to reduce the number of separate police forces in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply which was given to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) and the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 11 May at column 529.

Female Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many female police officers in England and Wales are currently qualified to carry firearms; what are the figures for five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list by year for the last 10 years in England and Wales (a) in how many operations firearms were issued to female police officers and (b) in how many of these operations shots were fired by female police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: Information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners are serving sentences under the protection of rule 43; and what is the percentage in relation to the numbers of female prisoners, by prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information as at 31 March 1989 is set out in the table. The percentages relate to the total sentenced population at each establishment.

Sentenced female prisoners at 31 March 1989

Establishment	Number on Rule 43 (own protection)	Percentage of total
Cookham Wood Prison	2	1·7
Holloway Prison	5	2·2
New Hall Prison	8	18·2
Styal Prison	1	0·5

There were no prisoners on rule 43 for their own protection at any of the other eight establishments holding sentenced female prisoners.

Police (Racial Equality)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will commit funds for updating the police initial recruitment test as recommended by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 11 May, at column 526. The question of funding may have to be considered when the police advisory board has completed its work.

Asylum

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of asylum applications submitted at ports of entry subsequent to the applicant being refused entry to the United Kingdom on other grounds in each of the last three years;

(2) what was the average decision time taken by his Department for port applications for asylum in each of the last three years; and what is the current position;

(3) how many people were refused entry to the United Kingdom at ports of entry in each of the last three years.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given to questions from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 19 May, at columns 316-17.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were made at United Kingdom ports of entry in each of the last three years; and how many applicants were granted asylum.

Mr. Renton: The available information is given in the following table. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Applications[1] for refugee status at United Kingdom ports, and grants[1] of refugee status or exceptional leave to enter in port application cases

Number of cases[1]

	Applications received	Grants of refugee status[2]	Refused asylum but granted leave to enter on exceptional grounds[2]
1985	1,634	40	315
1986	1,102	30	1,118
1987	1,053	57	735

[1] Excluding dependants.
[2] The grant figures include, where relevant, grants on applications made in earlier years.

These figures do not include south-east Asian refugees who are dealt with under separate arrangements and are granted settlement on their arrival in the United Kingdom. The number granted settlement in the years 1985 to 1988 is published in table 18 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1987" (Cm. 415) and in table 3 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin, issue 10/89 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1988", copies of which are in the Library.

Television Licences

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for non-payment of televison licence fees in Warrington, Widnes, Crewe and the whole of Cheshire in 1986, 1987, 1988 and since the start of 1989.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Information available to me supplied by the national television licence records office relates to the number of prosecutions for television licence evasion by area of the television licence enquiry offices only. These area offices are based on the post code system. Information for Warrington, Widnes and Crewe and the whole of Cheshire is therefore not readily available. Data for the area offices covering the county of Cheshire are as follows:

Prosecution for television licence evasion by area television licence enquiry office covering the county of Cheshire

Area	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Altrincham	2,388	3,834	4,220	5,380
Preston	4,432	5,065	5,204	4,660
Shrewsbury	1,007	1,423	2,067	2,004

Note: Figures given are for financial year (April to March).

TRANSPORT

Level Crossings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many accidents have taken place in each of the past five years for which figures are available on unmanned and unlit railway crossings involving (i) foot users, (ii) vehicle users and (iii) cattle or other farm animals;

(2) how many accidents have taken place in each of the past five years for which figures are available on railway crossings which are lit involving (i) foot users, (ii) vehicle users (iii) cattle or other farm animals.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not readily available in the form requested. The total numbers of accidents at all level crossings (manually-operated automatic and unprotected) during the period 1984-88 are as shown. These categories comprise:

Manual: manned gates or barriers, including barriers remotely controlled by closed circuit television.

Automatic: half-barriers and open crossings protected by road traffic signals; user-worked gates (UWG) protected by miniature warning lights.

Unprotected: UWG: UWG with telephone; open crossings; footpath crossings.

The Department's accident records do not show whether a crossing is lit. All manually operated public crossings have some form of illumination and it is a requirement that where the road approaches are lit, all manual and automatic crossings must be lit at least to the same standard.

London Underground (Safety)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish the report of the chief safety inspector on safety arrangements on London Underground, in line with recommendations 56 and 57 of the Fennell report into the King's Cross Underground fire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for London Underground Ltd. to consider whether any reports which may be produced in response to these recommendations should be published.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the railway inspectorate's report on the safety management systems for London Underground stations.

Mr. Channon: As I told the House on 10 November 1988, at columns 496-97, I commissioned the chief inspecting officer of railways to carry out an urgent survey of the safety management systems applying to stations on London Underground. The report has now been completed and I am arranging for it to be published this afternoon, together with London Underground's written response to it. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

London Underground's first priority, after the King's Cross fire and, later, Mr. Fennell's report on it, was to take immediate action to deal with potentially unsafe equipment and conditions. This includes, for example, fitting fire detection and alarm systems on escalators and the removal of wood panelling as part of a safety programme costing nearly £300 millions over three years.

Safety is not, however, only about equipment and investment. It is now increasingly recognised that formal management systems to promote and monitor health and safety are required. Mr. Fennell recommended that the railway inspectorate should keep the Underground's management of safety under review. Today's report is the result of action taken on that recommendation.

The report is based on a survey conducted by a team drawn from the railway inspectorate, the Health and Safety Executive and the London fire brigade.

It assessed London Underground's safety management systems against the standards of the international safety rating system (ISRS), one of several recognised methods for safety audit, but one which has previously been applied mainly in other industries. The ISRS is designed to provide a progressive safety management programme. The optimum standards within the ISRS represent excellence in safety management, which should be achieved some five to 10 years after the introduction of the programme.

During its field work in January and February, the team found that some aspects were well managed. These included the Underground's controls on purchasing, employment of contractors, and the arrangements for recruiting and placing staff.

However, the team also found that much work still remains to be done. This includes the need for major improvements in leadership in safety management; in training for managers in health and safety; and in preparation of procedures for critical tasks, engineering controls and behavioural aspects.

The team's report makes 26 major recommendations together with a large number that are more detailed. The team consider that the priority areas for action, in addition to leadership in health and safety management, are job analysis and observation, organisational rules, engineering control and preparedness for emergencies. These recommendations set the course for a long-term programme of improvements to the Underground's safety management systems.

I have discussed the report with the chairman of London Regional Transport, Mr. Wilfrid Newton. I expressed my serious concern at some of the findings and made clear that decisive and sustained action is required. Mr. Newton has responded positively and quickly.

London Underground's written response shows that it accepts, in whole or part, all but one of the 71 recommendations. London Underground does not accept, however, the recommendations that the board's safety committee should be chaired by the managing director. Although the managing director has line management responsibility for safety and the safety staff report directly to him, London Underground believes that the safety committee should be chaired by an independent non-executive director who, in accordance with one of Mr. Fennell's recommendations, has special responsibility for safety.

The chairman of LRT has welcomed my proposal that the railway inspectorate should conduct a further survey in about 18 months' time. Meantime, the inspectorate will be monitoring progress closely through its programme of visits to stations and contacts with managers at all levels.

Road Humps

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to review the road hump regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultation on new regulations offering significant relaxations to those of 1986 will begin on 24 May. A copy of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House. We hope to make the new regulations in the autumn of this year.

Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road assessment studies for South Yorkshire (a) have been undertaken during the last five years and (b) are to be carried out in the near future; which are now under consideration by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A major study of the A1 through the county was carried out in 1987. We plan to commission studies later this year to investigate the need for improved highway links between south Lancashire and Yorkshire and to look at the A57 from east of the M1 to the A1 (Worksop). These were announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" which has just been published.

A47

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to commence improvements on the A47 trunk road at Skeffington bend in Leicestershire, as envisaged in his letter to the hon. Member for Harborough on 28 May 1987;

(2) if he will give a timetable for the completion of the improvements needed to the A47 at Skeffington bend in Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the publication of draft orders in 1987, we have given careful consideration to the need for this scheme. We have concluded that the likely accident savings do not, at present, justify the costs involved. We must target our funds towards those schemes where the potential for reducing accidents is greatest. We shall keep the situation under review.

Dial-a-Ride

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the Government contribution to dial-a-ride for each year available to date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Grants made by London Regional Transport to London dial-a-ride services are as follows:

Year	Grant £ million
1986-87	5·0
1987-88	6·0
1988-89	6·27
1989-90	7·27

The grant for 1989-90 is over 40 per cent. higher in real terms than the grant of £4·2 million provided by the GLC in 1985-86 (the last year it funded these services).

Naval Accidents

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the key statistics for naval accidents over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's annual publication "Casualties to Vessels and Accidents to Men" contains key statistics on casualties to merchant and fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom. Copies of CVAM from 1979 to 1987 are available in the Library. CVAM 1988 will be published within the next few months.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost of repairs and renewals on the Severn bridge at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £44 million since 1984.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total amount collected in tolls on the Severn bridge at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total amount collected in tolls is estimated to be some £58 million up to March 1989.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total outstanding debt on the Severn bridge at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £85·2 million at 31 March 1988.

M1-M69 Junction

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects works to begin to improve the M1-M69 junction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The expanded trunk road construction programme published in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" includes widening and junction improvements on the M1. A major improvement to junction 21 will be part of this.

Work should start this financial year on an interim scheme at the M1-M69 interchange (junction 21 of the M1) to prevent peak time queuing on the M1.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many proposals he has received to set up training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Twenty-two applications have been received by the national training task force which will review these proposals and forward its recommendations to me. This is an excellent response.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many proposals he has received from groups seeking to become training and enterprise councils; and when he expects to announce his decisions.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 16 May 1989]: Twenty two applications have been received by the national training task force. It will forward its recommendations to Ministers who will announce which TECs have been awarded development funding shortly thereafter.

97. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from employers on training and enterprise councils in the south-east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 16 May 1989]: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers in the south-east and throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils (TECs).

Since the launch of TECs on 10 March no fewer than 22 groups of senior employers from around the country have come forward to apply for TEC development funding, of which five applications are from employers in the south-east.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs have been closed since his decision to reduce their number; where they were located; how many had been run by (a) jobcentres and (b) external agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between my announcements to the House on 27 January 1989 and 28 April 1989, 131 job clubs had closed. They were located in the following regions:

	Number
Northern	1
Yorkshire and Humberside	7
East Midlands and Eastern	20
London and South East	20
South West	21
Wales	5
West Midlands	34
North West	22
Scotland	1

A total of 114 of these job clubs had been run by jobcentres and 17 by external agencies. Around 90 more closures are expected by 30 June 1989 in order to bring the network down to the 1,000 or so needed following the substantial and continuing fall in long-term unemployment.

The number of job club places available in 1989-90 will be some 25 per cent. higher than the number of participants in the programme last year. I hope that long-term unemployed people will take advantage of the opportunities open to them to join this valuable programme which has already helped more than 150,000 back into work.

Job Start

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have applied for job start allowance; how many have had their applications granted and refused; how many are currently receiving the allowance; and of those no longer receiving the allowance how long had they received it on average before termination, for Great Britain, and for each standard region.

Mr. Lee: In the period from July 1986 to March 1989, 41,676 people applied for the job start allowance. A total of 31,951 were accepted and 9,725 were rejected because they were not eligible. There are currently 3,989 people receiving the allowance.

The information requested about how long people received the allowance before termination is not readily available. However, it is estimated that in 1988 two thirds of job start participants received the allowance for the full 26 weeks. People may receive the allowance for a shorter period for a number of reasons, including a pay increase beyond the limit allowed.

New Businesses (Derbyshire)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses in Derbyshire have registered for value added tax in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: In 1986, the estimated number of new registrations for value added tax in Derbyshire was 2,500. The net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses in 1987 was 300, or 1·4 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Derbyshire are currently unemployed; and by what percentage this figure has decreased in the last year.

Mr. Lee: In April 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in Derbyshire was 30,391, a fall of 11,641, or 27·7 per cent., in the year since April 1988. The comparison is slightly affected by the change in the coverage of the count from September 1988 due to the new benefit regulations affecting people aged under 18 years.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), Official Report, 15 May, column 51, he will list the sources, authors, publishers, methodology of assessment, scope and time scale of study of the evidence that removal of wages councils for young people has resulted in increased job opportunities.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The information sought by the hon. Member is almost entirely irrelevant to the evidence referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 15 May.

Labour force survey data for 1986, 1987 and 1988 show an increase in the level of employment of young people under 21 in the retail distribution and hotel and catering industries. There is also evidence from employers in wages council trades that they are more ready to offer young people employment. It is also relevant that during the past two years unemployment among those aged under 20 has fallen from 21 per cent. to just above 12 per cent.

Social Charter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement outlining the European Economic Community proposals for a social charter and the consequences for employers and employees if the Council approves the proposals; and if such proposals fall to be considered by majority vote or by unanimity in the Council.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Commissioner Papandreou outlined at a press conference in Brussels on 17 May proposals for a charter of basic social rights. We are still awaiting a formal text from the Commission, but I have placed in the Library a copy of the press release.

The Commission announced that it would be putting forward a proposal for a formal declaration which would contain some generalised statements and invite the Commission to draw up an action programme by June 1990. The action programme would include proposals for series of regulations mainly in the employment and industrial relations field.

As the Commission is proposing a declaration by heads of state or Government, it follows that all heads of state or Government will have to agree to it. The voting arrangements for the specific proposals on particular issues depend on the subject matter and legal treaty base; in our view many will fall to be adopted by unanimity.

As far as we can tell from the information that we have on the proposals so far, the consequences will include retrictions on the freedom of employers and employees to negotiate the agreements that suit them both; reductions in the flexibility of the labour market; and the slowing down of economic growth and of the creation of jobs.

Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the expenditure, by economic region, by private industry on training.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 May 1989]: This information is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated expenditure by private industry on training.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 May 1989]: It is estimated from a study by management consultants to be published by the autumn, that in Great Britain in 1986-87 (the latest year for which information is available) about £11 billion was invested by private industry in training.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures currently exist for quantifying the amount of money spent on training by private industry.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Estimates of the amount of money spent on training by private industry can be obtained only from detailed surveys of employers. The latest such survey was carried out in 1987 providing information for the year 1986-87.

Tyneside Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he proposes to announce his assessment of the Tyneside training and enterprise council submission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The submission by the Tyneside TEC steering group will be considered by a panel of members of the national training task force shortly. Ministers will consider its recommendations and will announce which TECs have been awarded development funding shortly thereafter.

Income Support

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of whether the present income support scheme gives sufficient incentive to retrain mature people with families.

Mr. Nicholls: All trainees on employment training (the Government's main programme to give unemployed people, particularly the long-term unemployed, the skills they need to compete in the jobs market) receive an allowance which amounts to £10 more than their previous weekly benefit entitlement. Help is also given with travel costs and certain other expenses. In contrast to the situation under some previous programmes therefore, all ET trainees secure a higher income than if they had remained unemployed and claiming benefit.

I am satisfied that these arrangements offer a clear incentive to unemployed people whatever their family circumstances to undertake training. Of course we keep this and other aspects of the scheme under review.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the number of strikes and days lost in the dock labour scheme ports in each year since 1959; and what are the comparable figures for non-scheme ports.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 8 May 1989]: The number of stoppages and days lost in the dock labour scheme ports in each year since 1959 are listed in the table. Comparable figures for non-scheme ports are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, national figures for working days lost per thousand employees from stoppages in all industries and services are also listed, alongside figures for dock labour scheme ports. There is a minor difference in coverage between these two series, because the figures for all industries and services exclude stoppages involving fewer than 10 workers or lasting less than one day, where the total number of working days lost is 100 or less.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Procedure Committee

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing the implementation of the second report from the Select Committee on Procedure on private Members' time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Apart from exchanges in the House during business questions, I have received one letter supporting the recommendations of the Select Committee on Procedure and none opposing them. I hope that there will be an opportunity before the end of this Session for the House to debate the report.

Bills

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those personal Bills which received Royal Assent in each Session since 1970.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

1974-75: James Hugh Marwell (Naturalisation) [Lords]
1979-80: Edward Berry and Doris Eileen Ward (Marriage Enabling) [Lords]
1981-82: Hugh Small and Norma Small (Marriage Enabling) [Lords]
1981-82: John Francis Dare and Gillian Loder Dare (Marriage Enabling) [Lords]
1984-85: Valerie Mary Hill and Alan Monk (Marriage Enabling) [Lords]
1986-87: George Donald Evans and Deborah Jane Evans (Marriage Enabling) [Lords]
1986-87: John Ernest Rolfe and Florence Iveen Rolfe Marriage Enabling) [Lords]

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council what information and assistance is available to individuals desirous of promoting a personal Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Personal Bills may be promoted only through a registered parliamentary agent, duly authorised by Mr. Speaker. A list of agents is available from the Private Bill Office.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many personal Bills were introduced in each Session since 1970; how many received Royal Assent; and what percentage the latter represents of the former.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 1970 seven personal Bills have been introduced, all of which have received Royal Assent.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the occasions when Bills have been committed (a) under Standing Order No. 90(1) and (b) under Standing Order No. 90(2) in each Session since 1970, together with the title of each Bill.

SCOTLAND

St. Mungo's Primary School, Glasgow

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what communications he has received from parents of hearing impaired children who attend the unit at St. Mungo's primary school, Glasgow; whether he will take action to ensure medical tests are made to allay parental anxiety about children having inhaled asbestos dust; whether the parents made him aware of their concern about (a) the lack of specialist staff, (b) the standard of equipment, and (c) the physical conditions under which their children are taught; and if he will make a statement on (i) the opportunities available to him to seek improvements, and (ii) whether his Department will make additional funding available to the education authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this unit lies with Strathclyde regional council. Parents of children who attend the unit have written to my right hon. and learned Friend and inquiries are being made into the complaints that they have raised. I shall arrange to send the hon. Member a copy of the reply which will be sent to the parents shortly.

Fraud

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for the number of prosecutions for (a) tax fraud and (b) social security fraud and the total sums of money involved for the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: (a) There were 26 prosecutions in Scotland for tax fraud, involving a minimum sum of £420,000, in the period from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989.

(b) 986 persons were proceeded against in the Scottish courts for social security fraud in the period from 10 February 1988 to 28 February 1989. The cost of social security fraud in these cases is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the Scottish ambulance service (a) the total number of vehicles owned and (b) the total number of man hours worked for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Number of vehicles owned	Man hours worked (excluding overtime)
1979	n/a	3,240,640
1980	968	3,382,080
1981	968	3,425,760
1982	965	3,463,200
1983	967	3,531,840
1984	977	3,527,680
1985	988	3,577,600
1986	1,007	3,627,520
1987	1,004	3,642,080
1988	1,011	3,721,120
1989	1,051	3,704,844

The decrease in the man hours worked in 1989 is a result of the reduction of one hour in the working week which was an integral part of the 1988 ambulance men's pay agreement.

In the year ending 31 March 1989 a total of 234,156 hours overtime was worked. Figures for overtime worked are not readily available for earlier years.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure for the Scottish ambulance service for each year since 1979 at 1979 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Total expenditure for the Scottish ambulance service since 1979 at constant 1979 prices, calculated by applying the gross domestic product deflator, is as follows:

Year Ending 31 March	Expenditure £
1979	12,865,100
1980	15,104,623
1981	14,299,108
1982	14,334,212
1983	14,237,182
1984	14,530,689
1985	15,444,525
1986	15,214,675
1987	16,596,507
1988	17,467,219
1989	n/a

Doctors (Crown Indemnity)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the cost of the proposed Crown indemnity for doctors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The NHS in Scotland currently spends about £3 million per year on a scheme for reimbursing two thirds of the costs of the medical defence organisation subscriptions of hospital and community doctors and dentists. The cost of providing an NHS indemnity is expected to be comparable.

Teachers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of teachers in Scotland leave the profession within five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not readily available.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report each parliamentary constituency in Scotland where electoral registrations have declined by more than 4 per cent. between 1987 and 1989, together with the size of the decline in each case in percentage and absolute figures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Constituency	Numerical change	Percentage change
Aberdeen North	−3,147	−4·9
Aberdeen South	−4,347	−6·9
Edinburgh Central	−2,688	−4·5
Glasgow Cathcart	−2,130	−4·3
Glasgow Garscadden	−3,658	−7·5
Glasgow Govan	−2,243	−4·4
Glasgow Maryhill	−2,359	−4·5
Glasgow Pollok	−2,524	−4·9
Glasgow Provan	−3,308	−7·5
Glasgow Rutherglen	−2,380	−4·1
Glasgow Springburn	−3,379	−6·5
Greenock and Port Glasgow	−2,878	−4·9
Paisley South	−2,239	−4·3

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the Forestry Commission to notify all local authorities of the outcome of applications for forestry planting grant within their area of jurisdiction; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the Forestry Commission's normal practice to notify local authorities of the outcome of those planting grant applications over which they have been consulted, where objections have been raised. The Commission also informs local authorities of the outcome in other cases where they have requested that this should be done. I consider this to be a fair and reasonable procedure and I am not persuaded that it would be right for me to add to the Commission's administrative costs by instructing it to notify local authorities of the outcome of all grant applications as a matter of course.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to require local authorities to prepare regional indicative forestry strategies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. My right hon. and learned Friend has already made it clear that it will be for each local authority in Scotland to decide whether or not an indicative forestry strategy is needed for its area. The situation including the potential for new planting varies considerably from one region to another.

Fishing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of imposing precautionary total allowable catches on west of Scotland plaice, monkfish and megrims; and what scientific evidence is available on stocks of these species.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Precautionary total allowable catches (TACs) are fixed for species for which there is insufficient scientific data to set a full analytical TAC, primarily to protect stocks from serious damage by over-exploitation. Concern has been expressed that some precautionary TACs may be unduly restrictive. Fisheries departments are looking at the situation and will consider whether to approach the European Commission to seek an appropriate increase in the level of precautionary TACs.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Fisheries Department expect to publish fund proposals for a revised pressure stock licensing scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fisheries departments are considering comments received from the industry in response to the consultation paper issued last year on possible amendments to the United Kingdom licensing system. The comments received raised a number of wider issues and further consultations seem likely to be necessary before final decisions can be taken.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the impact of Scottish fishermen's earnings of the quota cuts introduced in the current year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Earnings are determined by a number of factors which include the quantity and quality of landings, prices and costs. Quota cuts influence only one of these elements and it is not possible to separate out their impact.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate interest rate charges paid by the Scottish fishing fleet in the first six months of (a) 1989 and (b) 1988; and what is his estimate of the impact this has had on the financial position of the fleet.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The capital structure and sources of funding for investment in the Scottish fishing fleet reflect the pattern of share ownership and the mixture of business and way of life that characterises the fishing industry. In consequence it is not possible to estimate the level of charges or the impact on the financial position of the fleet.

Fish Processing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the current fisheries suppliers' position on the processing sector.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lower catch levels, largely associated with reduced fishing opportunities but also as a result of adverse weather conditions earlier in the year, have caused problems for the fish processing sector and for fishermen. Unlike the latter, however, the processors can make up the shortfall in supplies by purchases on the international market, much of which can be brought into the United Kingdom at concessionary rates of duty. In addition the processing sector is looking to create a wider range of added value products, taking increased quantities of pelagic fish when available and also turning to species such as farmed salmon. These are encouraging developments.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on recent employment patterns in the Scottish fish processing section and his assessment of its future prospects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The gradual shift away from highly labour intensive operations to increased mechanisation, combined with seasonal considerations and the industry's use of temporary employees, makes it difficult to draw any meaningful conclusions on recent employment patterns in the Scottish fish processing industry. The future prospects for the industry remain good and this is reflected in the fact that since 1985 investment in the industry has totalled around £20 million including EC grant aid of some £5 million.

Broadleaved Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that the Forestry Commission's review of the broadleaved woodland grant scheme will consider fully the financial aspects of grants, their means of application and purpose, and the guidelines for the management of broadleaved woodlands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The review of the policy for broadleaved woodlands is under way and covers the aspects referred to by the hon. Member.

Farm Cottages

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why Scottish farmers are receiving poll tax demands at the standard charge rate in respect of empty farm cottages.

Mr. Lang: Everybody who is liable to pay the standard charge in respect of a property will receive a demand notice from the appropriate levying authority. However, if the property is unoccupied and unfurnished and the person liable for the charge has notified the levying authority under section 10(8A)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 that this is the case, no charge will be payable in respect of that property for three months or such longer period as the levying authority has determined, subject to the other provisions of section 10 of the Act. These arrangements apply in respect of owners and long-term tenants of empty farm cottages. We have however announced our intention to remove these properties from the standard community charge arrangements and have consulted on proposals for doing so. We are studying the responses to that consultation and hope to be in a position shortly to announce what the new arrangements will be.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) what information he has on the number of seasonally let farm cottages in Scotland, (b) the average occupancy of let in terms of weeks and (c) the percentage of annual income attributable to Scottish farmers from holiday letting of farm cottages.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information sought is not available.

Prisons (Firearms)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what authority firearms and ammunition can be requisitioned by the governor of a Scottish prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 May 1989]: The carrying or use of firearms in or on prison service property is normally strictly forbidden. Permission to do so may, however, be granted—to control vermin on prison service agricultural and horticultural land—but only by means of prior written authorisation from the director of the Scottish prison service and subject to the issue by the police of a permit for the use by a named prison officer of such a firearm.

Prison Staff (Boots)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pairs of boots for staff were ordered for Glenochil penal establishments in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 May 1989]: The number of pairs of boots and shoes issued to personnel at Her Majesty's prison and the young offenders institution Glenochil over the past five years was:

	Boots	Shoes
1984-85	11	12
1985-86	7	4
1986-87	5	10
1987-88	4	5
1988-89	12	Nil

All eligible prison staff are provided with free issue footwear or are paid a boot or shoe allowance for the purchase of approved footwear.

Mrs. Margaret Sinclair (Minister's Visit)

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Information Office was involved in any way in arranging the visit and subsequent press coverage involving the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth), to the home of Mrs. Margaret Sinclair of Stirling on Sunday 14 May; and whether any member of the Scottish Information Office staff attended this visit.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 19 May 1989]: The Scottish Information Office did not arrange the visit and no member of SIO staff was present at it. The SIO arranged for media representatives to be told of the visit, and issued a press statement on behalf of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for health and education.

Dr. William Young

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if every right hon. and hon. Member representing a Scottish constituency will be able to arrange for an official from the Scottish Home and Health Department to discuss with each general practitioner in their constituency their concern for the future of the general practitioner service, following the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth), instructing an official from the Scottish Home and Health Department to contact Dr. William Young of Stirling;

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which an official of the Scottish Home and Health Department has been instructed to contact Dr. William Young of Stirling following his commenting on the proposed changes affecting general practitioners and the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 May 1989]: On 14 May it was reported in the press that Dr. Young's views on the implications of the Government's proposals for the reform of the NHS had dismayed two of his patients. They were said to be particularly alarmed by the statements attributed to Dr. Young that all GPs would be given drug budgets from 1991; that if they exceeded them the money would be clawed back the next year; and that patients requiring expensive treatment might have to come off his list on the ground of cost. I wrote to Dr. Young on 15 May expressing my concern about these reports pointing out that when indicative prescribing budgets are introduced in Scotland in 1992 they will reflect the health and age of the patients on the GPs list and that more money will be allowed for the chronically sick and the elderly. If, nevertheless, the budget turns out to be not enough for the cost of treatment which the doctor's patients justifiably require, the budget will be reviewed and the doctor will not be penalised. There should therefore be no question of a doctor being unable to prescribe for a sick person because he or she has run out of money or of removing patients from the list because of the cost of their treatment.

Because these particular events have been drawn to the attention of the general public in this way and were likely to cause widespread alarm, I released my letter to Dr. Young to the press. I also asked a medical officer in the Scottish Home and Health Department to meet Dr. Young to discuss his interpretation of the Government's plans. It will not be necessary for similar arrangements to be made in respect of every GP in Scotland as I have already been in direct contact with each of them to supply them with the full facts of the Government's plans for making the National Health Service in Scotland even better than it is at present.

Employment Training

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of trainees on each employment training scheme operating in Scotland and give the name of each scheme and the total allowances paid on each scheme.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Information about the number of people in training with individual training managers employment training in Scotland can be provided only at disproportionate cost. The names and addresses of training managers are held in the "Employment Training Directory of Training Agents and Training Managers", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. Information about the amounts of trainee allowances paid to trainees with individual training managers is not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places for trainees has each employment training scheme management agency in Scotland contracted to fill for each month since the inception of the scheme; and what percentage of these places have actually been filled in each case on a monthly basis.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of fraud his Department has detected among employment training scheme management agencies and employers in Scotland; what sums were involved; and how many prosecutions have proceeded.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: There have been no such cases.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employment training scheme management agencies and employers in Scotland have been terminated because of fraud or other malpractice.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: None.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the steps taken to ensure that employment training scheme management agencies and employers in Scotland do not continue to receive an allowance from his Department after trainees have left the scheme.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Claims for training fees submitted by training managers are subject to checks both within Training Agency area offices and at the training manager's premises. The checks include the comparison of claims with individual trainee records and information notified to unemployment benefit offices.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total moneys received by the Scottish Office from the European regional development fund in each of the past five years; and what percentage of these was spent on road improvements, listing the projects completed and projects currently under construction.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 May 1989]: The following awards have been obtained by the Scottish Office for projects and programmes in Scotland:

	Award £ million
1984	103
1985	69
1986	84
1987	93
1988	95
	444

Some £109 million, almost 25 per cent., of the awards have been for road improvements and new construction. It is not feasible to list all 250-plus roads projects but some significant examples are:

	Award £ million
Edinburgh City Bypass	6·3
Realignment of A71 near Kilmarnock	5·9
Eastern Distributor Road—Stirling	2·4
Inverness Inner Relief Road Phase 2	2·3
Northern Distributor Road—East Kilbride	2·1
A82 Improvement—Phase 1—Loch Lomondside	1·7
A836 Lairg to Auction Mart—Sutherland	0·9
A95 Broomhill Road Improvement—Grantown-on-Spey	0·5

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking in order to support increased manufacturing exports from Scottish industries.

Mr. Lang: An extensive and comprehensive package of support is available to industry in Scotland under the enterprise initiative, which is administered by my Department. This includes selective financial assistance for investment projects in the assisted areas, and the consultancy initiatives which can provide firms with financial support towards the costs of specialist consultancy in a number of key management functions. In addition, the Scottish export office of my Department provides a wide range of advice, information and assistance under the export initiative, to help Scottish companies expand into export markets or develop their existing overseas business.

Glasgow Garden Festival

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with progress on the after use of Glasgow garden festival site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Yes. The various elements of the after use plan are currently being discussed with the planning authority. I expect these to make a permanent contribution to the regeneration of Glasgow.

Press Material (Perth City Halls)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press officers from his Department were involved in the preparation and distribution of press material within the Perth city halls during the period from 10 to 12 May.

Mr. Rifkind: No press officers from my Department were involved in the preparation and distribution of press material within Perth city halls during the period 10 to 12 May.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 22 May.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 22 May. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State represented the United Kingdom in the Council and at an EC-Israel Co-operation Council later on the same day.

The council reviewed progress in the Community's negotiations with Poland on a trade and co-operation agreement and agreed on the need for further flexibility in the Community position. In particular, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State pressed for a Community proposal on phasing out quantitative restrictions, which took full account of Polish reform efforts, and for early help with management training. The Commission introduced its draft mandate for negotiations with the USSR on a trade and co-operation agreement and the council agreed to consider it further at its next meeting in June.

The council discussed the Community's trade relations with the United States. Progress on resolving the dispute over hormones in meat, and setting up GATT panels on soya and sugar, was noted. The council expressed its concern over the implementation of section "Super 301" of the 1988 United States Trade Act, and reaffirmed its intention to refer to GATT any United States action affecting the Community which might appear to be in breach of GATT obligations.

The council discussed a proposal to complete the annex to the council regulation adopted in December 1987 laying down maximum levels of radioactive contamination of foodstuffs and of feedingstuffs following a nuclear accident or other radiological emergency. A related proposal on the special conditions applying to exports of foodstuffs and feedingstuffs following a nuclear accident was also discussed.

The Commission reported on the progress in the renegotiation of the Lomé convention and on preparations for the next EC-ACP ministerial meeting in Brussels on 3-5 June.

The council adopted conclusions on the renegotiation of the international coffee agreement which will form the basis of the Community's position at the special session of the International Coffee Council in London on 5-9 June.

Remains of General Sikorski

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to refuse requests that the remains of General Sikorski be removed from the Polish war cemetery at Newark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The matter is a difficult and delicate one which divides the Polish people, both in Poland and in this country. We periodically receive representations, both for and against the transfer of the remains to Poland, and we review them in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time. The Prime Minister said in Warsaw in November that the time was not yet right for such a transfer.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vehicle Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the import content of United Kingdom exports of (i) cars and (ii) commercial vehicles in 1970, 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Maude: The information is not available.

Weights and Measures (Wine)

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to take steps to implement the voluntary code of practice on the sale of wine by the glass in licensed premises.

Mr. Forth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 16 May at column 115.

Radio

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the review of the civil use of radio frequency spectrum between 470 and 3400 MHz has been completed; and whether he will publish the report.

Mr. Atkins: The committee studying civil use of the radio frequency spectrum from 470 to 3400 MHz has completed its review and my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is today publishing the report. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

This review was initiated as part of a rolling programme recommended by the Merriman committee, to audit present use of the radio spectrum, to analyse emerging developments and to assess potential new demands. The report on the corresponding independent review of defence use of this part of the radio spectrum, chaired by Sir Kenneth Corfield, was published in June 1988.

I am sure that industry and users will welcome this report for its in-depth analysis of the current uses and future demands in this key portion of the radio spectrum. The United Kingdom is already at the forefront in exploring innovative ways of exploiting this crucial, finite, natural resource, and I believe the report makes a significant contribution to the technical base from which United Kingdom can maintain its position at the leading edge of telecommunications exploitation throughout the 1990s and beyond.

The review was conducted on the basis of existing policy regarding management and allocation of the radio spectrum, and is being published in advance of detailed consideration by Government to stimulate interest and to promote discussion.

PRIME MINISTER

Soviet Diplomats (Expulsion)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will refer the matters which led to the recent expulsion of Soviet diplomats to the Security Commission.

The Prime Minister: No.

Cabinet Office (Cash Limits)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any proposals to change the 1989-90 cash limit and running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate the cash limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Services (class XX, vote 2) has been reduced by £2,764,000 from £19,403,000 to £16,639,000. This decrease will be offset by a corresponding increase in the cash limit for the Central Statistical Office (class XIX, vote 18) and reflects the transfer of part provision between the Cabinet Office and Central Statistical Office as a result of the reorganisation of the statistical services which I announced on 5 April 1989.

The running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Services has been reduced by £2,901,000 from £20,984,000 to £18,083,000 in the main as a result of the functions transferred to the Central Statistical Office (£2,898,000) and also to provide £3,000, reclassified from running costs, as a grant in aid to the British national committee for the history of the second world war.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Operational Procedures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the implications for police operational procedures following the conviction of those involved with the killing of PC Frank Mason;

(2) if he will announce a new inquiry into police operational procedures following the conviction of armed robbers for causing the death of PC Frank Mason;

(3) whether, in the light of recent experience, new guidelines on stake-out procedures are to be issued to police authorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Police operational procedures are a matter for chief officers.

Woolwich Prison

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to his invitation to the London borough of Greenwich to suggest a name for the new Woolwich prison; what opportunities will be given to local people to put forward suggestions; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not yet received a formal response from the London borough of Greenwich to our invitation to it to suggest a suitable name for the new prison at Woolwich. We understand that arrangements have been made as is considered necessary. I shall write to the hon. Member once a formal decision has been taken.

European Elections (Electoral Registers)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct the election officers, in each of the European election constituencies, to issue to the agents of each prospective candidate a full set of electoral registers for the constituency free of charge; and if he will make a statement on the practice currently being adopted in the north Wales constituency for the June 1989 Euro-elections.

Mr, Douglas Hogg: No. The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 (as applied by the European Parliamentary Elections Regulations 1986) include the provision of two free copies of each electoral register in force to each candidate at a European Parliamentary election, and it is the duty of electoral registration officers and acting returning officers to comply with this provision. We are considering the possible need for some further guidance on this point,.

Barry McKay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Barry McKay, detained at Risley remand centre, will have his case brought to court; what information he has on (a) this detainee's dietary habits, (b) whether he has lodged any formal complaint and (c) what action has been taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Barry McKay has been at Manchester prison since 29 March and his trial will take place at Chester Crown court on a date yet to be fixed.

Mr. McKay is a practising Moslem and every effort has been made to meet his dietary requirements since the date of his reception at Risley remand centre on 12 September 1988. However, Mr. McKay refused all food from 27 March until 9 April on which day he requested, and was provided with, food in accordance with the restrictions imposed by Ramadan.

I understand that Mr. McKay has made no formal complaints about his diet and that he is now accepting food appropriate to the needs of his faith.

Women Police Officers (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of South Yorkshire as to why women police officers in the South Yorkshire police force, who have been on maternity leave or time off to attend to their young children, are reinstated at a lower rank when they return; what is the policy of other police forces in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Police Regulations 1987, women police officers have the right to return to their force after maternity leave (which is limited to nine months after the birth) without any reduction in rank. An officer who has resigned from the service will normally be considered for reappointment only in the rank of constable, although previous service counts for pay purposes.

Probation Officers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation officers have been employed in England and Wales during each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: The number of probation officers employed in England and Wales at 31 December in each of the last 10 years was:

	Number
1979	5,467
1980	5,602
1981	5,656
1982	5,801
1983	5,994
1984	6,161
1985	6,343
1986	6,471
1987	6,651
1988	6,792

This is an increase of 1,325, or 24 per cent., in the period in question.

Hull Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Hull prison was built; what was the originally intended maximum number of prisoners; what is the number on remand or serving custodial sentences there now; and for how many hours daily an inmate is confined to his cell.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's prison Hull was opened in 1870. The accommodation originally comprised 304 single cells (not including those used to house prisoners on reception and undergoing punishment). The establishment's certified normal accommodation is currently 406. On Friday 19 May 621 prisoners were held there, 354 on remand and 267 under sentence.

The daily routine varies widely as between individual inmates. On average adult inmates at Hull spend at least three and a half hours out of their cells each day for regular purposes such as exercise, ablutions, meals bathing and kit changing, canteen, association and library. The average for young inmates, who receive additional association, is at least four and a half hours. Individual inmates spend additional periods out of their cells for activities such as voluntary education and physical education, work, domestic and official visits and religious services.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people currently at Hull prison have ever been in-patients at a psychiatric hospital or clinic, showing (a) serving a custodial sentence and (b) those on remand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not readily available in respect of the total population of Hull prison and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, as records there are not yet computerised. Of the 12 prisoners in the prison hospital on 22 May, five unconvicted prisoners and two convicted prisoners have been in-patients in a psychiatric hospital.

Horse Race Reporting

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to seek power to enable him to ensure that the BBC and independent television spread out their horse racing coverage evenly throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: No. It is a long-standing principle that the Government do not intervene in programming matters. Subject to the obligations placed on them by Parliament, it is for the broadcasting authorities to decide which programmes to broadcast and from which locations.

Litter Act

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers the practicalities of introducing legislation to allow the police to levy on-the-spot fines for breaches of the Litter Act.

Mr. John Patten: We are currently considering a number of proposals for dealing with the litter nuisance. The results of the year-long fixed penalty scheme in Westminster will be available soon, and we shall want to consider these before contemplating the introduction to an on-the-spot fine regime nationally.

Latchmere House (Detainees)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on his proposals to transfer detainees from Latchmere house to Haslar in Gosport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to relocate Immigration Act detainees from Latchmere house remand centre to the prison service establishment at Haslar, Gosport as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, probably in early July.

We are taking great care to ensure that facilities at Haslar adequately meet the needs of the detainees. Haslar will offer a better regime in more suitable premises and will cater for the inmates' religious and welfare needs.

The accommodation at Latchmere house will be used to hold remand prisoners from the London area. This measure will make a substantial contribution to our aim of clearing remand prisoners from police cells.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the imposition of value added tax on pitch fees for static caravans; and if he will make it his policy to achieve consistency between the exemption from value added tax of retired people staying at hotels for periods in excess of four weeks, and such people staying at static caravans for similar periods of time.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of representations via right hon. and hon. Members and I met representatives of the British Holiday and Home Parks Association and the National Caravan Council on 3 May. There is no direct connection between the long-stay VAT relief for retired people living in hotels and VAT on static caravan pitch rentals at seasonal sites. The relief was introduced to protect retired people living in hotels as their permanent accommodation. There is no VAT at all on pitch rentals in non-seasonal caravan sites which may be used as permanent accommodation. Moreover, VAT on seasonal caravan sites applies not to the accommodation as such (the caravans are zero-rated) but only to the pitch rental —which is the right to locate the caravan on the park and have access to all the facilities of the holiday park.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of value added tax or of the shortfall on the yield of value added tax as a result of shortages in the number of VAT control officers available for service.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 23 May 1989]: In their management plan for 1989-90 published in March, the commissioners of Customs and Excise estimated that if there was no improvement in the levels of recruitment and retention of staff, and if each additional control officer could secure the average yield of existing officers some £60 million of additional tax could be at stake: around 0·2 per cent. of the total VAT yield. Although Customs and Excise have been facing difficulties in recruiting and retaining staff, continuous efforts are being made to offset any potential loss of tax by the increasingly effective targeting of available resources.

Overseas Assets

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the identified stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets; and what these represent as a share of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: An estimate of the value of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets identified at end-1988 will be included in the Pink Book in August. The latest estimate is of the order of £115 billion to £120 billion, which represents about one quarter of money GDP.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments for the first quarter of 1989.

Mr. Major: The provisional estimate of the current account balance for the first quarter of 1989 was a deficit of £4·5 billion. This is likely to be revised when the full balance of payments accounts are published on 15 June.

PSA Staff (Pay)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what local pay additions have been, or are being, negotiated with the trade union side of the Whitley council in respect of Property Services Agency civil servants employed in Cambridge; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table of any such supplementary local pay additions as are paid to Cambridge-based officials, but not Newmarket-based staff, by the Property Services Agency, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Department of Trade and Industry, Forestry Commission, Department of the Environment, and other bodies such as the National Institute of Agricultural Botany, in respect of the following grades: AA, AO, Typist, PA and EO.

Mr. Brooke: LPA payments are not a matter for negotiation with the trade union side. However, the trade union side in each Department concerned is consulted prior to their introduction.

The following local pay additions are currently being paid in Cambridge:

Administrative Assistant
DTI
£300 on entry;
£600 after 1 year; reducing to £400 on the maximum of the pay scale.
LCD
£300 after 6 months.
MAFF
£300 on entry.
PSA
£300 on entry.

Administrative Officer
DTI
£300 on entry;
£600 after 1 year; reducing to £400 on the maximum of the pay scale.

Forestry Commission
£400 after 1 year.
LCD
£300 after 6 months.

Typist
Forestry Commission
£400 after 1 year.
LCD
£300 after 6 months.
NIAB
£500 on entry;
£600 after 1 year.

Personal Secretary
DTI
£600 on entry.

Executive Officer
LCD
£300 after 6 months.

THE ARTS

Printed Matter (Preservation)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy towards the recruitment of technically competent staff able to study, develop and manage the preservation and conservation of large quantities of printed and written material in the nation's galleries and archives; and how many qualified technical staff are currently employed in (a) the British museum, (b) the Victoria and Albert museum, (c) the national maritime museum, and (d) the science museum including the national museum of film photography and television in Bradford and the British library.

Mr. Luce: Recruitment policy and staff numbers in the British library and the national museums and galleries are matters for their directors, board members and trustees. I attach great importance to the care of items in the national collections and to that end have allocated half of the £13 million increase for the national museums and galleries from 1990-91 to 1991-92 to the management of their collections. I have also set aside up to £100,000 a year for the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92 towards a national manuscript conservation fund, to be administered by the British Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Education

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schoolchildren are likely to receive some form of special education in each of the next three years; and what will be the cost of meeting those needs.

Mr. Butcher: The Department does not project the total number of school pupils likely to receive special education. The number of pupils in special schools (maintained and non-maintained) in England is projected to be:

	Full-time equivalent pupil numbers
1989	100,892
1990	98,366
1991	96,734
1992	95,852

As to costs, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 24 January at column 473. Comparable figures for the financial year 1990-91 and subsequent years have still to be determined as part of the yearly review of future needs. The total spent on special education will partly depend on decisions taken by individual local authorities about the pattern of delivery in their areas.

School Sizes

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a list showing the numbers of primary schools by size, in each region (a) in relation to pupil numbers and (b) in relation to the group size defined in the schoolteachers' pay and conditions document;

(2) if he will publish a list showing the numbers of secondary schools by size, in each region (a) in relation to pupil numbers and (b) in relation to the group size defined in the schoolteachers' pay and conditions document;

(3) if he will publish a list showing the numbers of middle schools by size, in each region (a) in relation to pupil numbers and (b) in relation to the group size defined in the schoolteachers' pay and conditions document.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following tables show numbers of primary, middle and secondary schools respectively in each region, by size according to (a) pupil numbers and (b) group size as defined in the schoolteachers' pay and conditions document.

The figures for primary schools by pupil numbers, include seven centres for teaching English as a second language. Four of these centres do not have school group numbers and therefore do not appear on the table for primary schools by group number.

Teachers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of teachers who qualify in (a) Surrey and (b) England and Wales do not go into teaching the following year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest information on the destinations of students successfully completing initial teacher training in England and Wales relates to 1988 for the university departments of education and to 1987 for the other training institutions. These data indicate that 19 per cent. of those qualifying and whose destination was known had not taken up a teaching post anywhere in the United Kingdom by the end of the same year. Some of these were still seeking a teaching post and will have entered teaching subsequently.

There are no initial teacher training institutions in the Surrey education authority area.

Small Schools

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to help maintain small schools in rural areas of the three counties of Yorkshire, and Humberside.

Mr. Butcher: It is for the individual local education authorities concerned to decide their policies in relation to small schools in rural areas; but my right hon. Friend provides an education support grant for the support of small rural primary schools. My right hon. Friend is also supporting a research project by the university of Leicester to evaluate the pilot projects with a view to making recommendations on practices which could be replicated successfully in other local education authorities.

Pupil Records (Access)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be able to make regulations providing parents and older pupils with a right of access to school records, and students with a right of access to further education records.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes shortly to make regulations about the keeping, disclosure and transfer of education records on pupils. A consultative document on access to further education student records will issue later this year.

Superannuation Contributions

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department as to the assumptions made by local education authorities concerning employers' superannuation contributions for teachers in drawing up their budgets for 1989-90; how many authorities are known to have made no adjustment at that time for the reduction in contribution rates taken into account in the block grant settlement; if he will estimate the number of authorities likely to have (a) 1·4 per cent. and (b) 0·4 per cent. reductions in superannuation contributions in hand to offset the underfunding of the school teachers' pay rise for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The local authority settlement for 1989-90, which preceded the report of the Government actuary assumed savings of about 1 per cent. in employers' contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme. We do not know how many authorities took the 1 per cent. savings into account in drawing up their budgets for 1989-90. Following the actuary's report authorities generally were able to take into account the additional saving of 0·4 per cent.

School Governors

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations about the guidance being given to school governors on their new responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Various representations have been received. In particular, many school governors and others have commended the DES publication "School Governors: A Guide To The Law".

Women Teachers (Pensions)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will exempt women teachers from the payment of additional superannuation contributions to cover equal pension rights in the period 1982 to 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. When the inequality between widows and widowers benefits was removed in respect of service after 6 April 1988, it was agreed that women teachers should be given the opportunity to pay additional contributions to cover their service before that date for widowers benefits. Contributions before 6 April 1988 did not cover service for widowers' benefits and such service must therefore be paid for.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the outcome of the meeting of Education Ministers in Brussels on 22 May including the negotiations over the Lingua programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: European Community Education Ministers reached agreement on 22 May over a Lingua programme which is expected to cost £130 million from the European Community budget over the period 1990-1994. In support of policies adopted by member states to promote increased competence in modern languages, the programme will support periods of integrated study in another member state for foreign languages students in higher education; assist teachers of foreign languages in schools and in further and adult education to extend their professional skills, particularly through periods spent in another member state; provide support in the field of language training for the existing work force; and encourage the development of exchanges with institutions in other member states for young people in professional, vocational or technical training.

The Select Committee on European Legislation, having considered my Department's explanatory memoranda dated 17 February and 8 May 1989, on 10 May recommended a debate, but it was found impossible to arrange this before the Education Ministers' meeting on 22 May. Given the possible danger of a vote being taken on the basis of article 128, which requires a simple majority, I had informed the Chairman of the Select Committee on 17 May that, if unanimity could be secured under article 235 on a proposal acceptable to the Government, I judged I should not withhold United Kingdom agreement. This proved to be the case and the programme I have described was adopted by unanimity under articles 128 and 235. I regret that in these circumstances it was impossible to complete the normal scrutiny process.

Education Ministers also agreed to negotiation of the extension to EFTA countries of the Community programme on co-operation between universities and industry in technology training. It was accepted that agreement was without prejudice to our case before the European Court of Justice, contesting the legal validity of the Council's adoption of the second phase of the programme under article 128. Ministers also agreed to resolutions on educational provision for the children of gipsies and other travelling groups.

Science Base

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what objectives the Government hope to achieve from its £1·6 billion expenditure in the current year on the science base.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The purposes and objectives of DES expenditure on research are set out in a document on the new system of resource management introduced on 1 April by the research councils, Her Majesty's Treasury and my Department. A copy has been placed in the Library but the relevant section is reproduced below:

1. The purposes of DES expenditure on research are, and should continue to be:

For the good of the United Kingdom:

to advance knowledge and technological capability;

to help produce qualified manpower at postgraduate level; and in these and other ways; to help achieve economic, social and cultural benefits.

The overall strategy objective should therefore be:

"To develop and maintain a world competitive United Kingdom Science Base in higher education and the Research Councils, characterised by creativity and vitality, which: delivers high-quality basic and strategic research output predominantly in areas with promise of commercial exploitability and other useful applications; and contributes to the preparation of the well-educated manpower which the United Kingdom economy needs."

2. The main objectives are:

Quality

(a) to increase the output of high quality research from the Science Base; and

(b) to increase the quality and utility of postgraduate education; by

(c) enhancing the research capability of the Science Base, notably through greater concentration of research activities and more selective allocation of resources;

(d) ensuring that basic research is properly and adequately sustained, so that creative scientists have opportunity to develop the original insights from which new inventions flow;

(e) increasing the responsiveness of the Science Base, having regard both to scientific opportunities and perceived national needs, and the balance between them;

(f) increasing international collaboration in science where this gives good value for money—for instance where necessary concentration cannot be achieved at the national level—and having particular regard to possibilities for co-operation within the EC.

Exploitability

In collaboration with industry and other Departments as appropriate:

(g) to move the balance of research activity towards exploitable areas, having regard both to commercial uses and to those which bring other benefits, such as in health and in the environment;

(h) to promote greater common purpose between the Science Base and its users—in industry, commerce and government;

(i) to be more selective in the choice of research activities, with particular regard to exploitability as well as quality;

(j) to increase inderdisciplinary collaboration in research and related postgraduate education;

(k) to increase the commercial exploitation and other uses of research outputs;

(l) to further commercial and other use of Science Base facilities and capabilities where appropriate.

Manpower

In addition to the manpower aspects of the preceding objectives:

(m) to secure a better match between support for postgraduate training and the needs of United Kingdom employers;

(n) to secure an adequate supply of, and better mobility for, very highly qualified manpower for research in industry and the Science Base;

(o) to improve opportunities for the most able researchers who might otherwise leave research or emigrate;

(p) to improve the management, career development and training of scientists in the Science Base.

A Coherent, Efficient and Effective System

As a means to achieving the former objectives:

(q) to bring about greater coherence between higher education and the Research Councils, by promoting shared objectives, concerted planning, and where appropriate shared resources;

(r) to develop better communication and understanding between the Science Base and the users of its outputs, notably industry and commerce;

(s) to increase the efficiency and quality of research management and administration in the Science Base;

(t) to increase accountability for the allocation and use of expenditure on research, notably in higher education;

(u) to promote further development of monitoring and evaluation of research policy and performance by the Science Base itself;

(v) to develop, monitor and evaluate policy for DES expenditure on research;

(w) to raise the level of United Kingdom understanding of, and regard for, the role of the Science Base in national life and especially in wealth creation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on developments since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I have arranged for a paper to be prepared outlining developments since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. Copies of the paper are being placed in the Library. The text is as follows:

DEVELOPMENTS SINCE THE SIGNING OF THE ANGLO-IRISH AGREEMENT

Introduction—The Agreement

1. The Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher, FRS, MP, and the then Taoiseach, Dr. Garret FitzGerald TD, signed a formal and binding agreement between their two Governments on 15 November 1985 with the aims of promoting peace and stability in Northern Ireland; creating a new climate of friendship and co-operation between the people of the two countries; and improving co-operation in combating terrorism. The agreement deals in particular with the status of Northern Ireland, (article 1), in which both Governments:

(a) affirm that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would only come about with the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland.

(b) recognise that the present wish of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland is for no change in the status of Northern Ireland.

(c) declare that, if in the future a majority of the people of Northern Ireland clearly wish for and formally consent to the establishment of a united Ireland, they will introduce and support in the respective Parliaments legislation to give effect to that wish.

The agreement also provides for the establishment of an intergovernmental conference in which the Irish Government put forward views and proposals concerning stated aspects of Northern Ireland affairs and in which the promotion of cross-border co-operation is discussed and in which determined efforts are made to resolve any differences between the two Governments.

2. Since the signature of the agreement a number of measures and new arrangements have been introduced affecting the lives of both sections of the community in Northern Ireland. While it is true that some of these were already in hand before the agreement was signed, it is clear that there has been great benefit from the new and substantive co-operation and dialogue between the British and Irish governments established under the agreement.

The work of the Intergovernmental Conference and its Secretariat

3. The intergovernmental conference was set up, under article 2 of the agreement, to deal, on a regular basis, with political matters; security and related matters; legal matters (including the administration of justice); and the promotion of cross-border co-operation. It has provided a valuable framework for the conduct of Anglo-Irish relations with particular regard to Northern Ireland. The conference, supported by the secretariat, has provided a forum which has enabled Ministers and senior officials of both sides to maintain close and frequent contact, which has given them a greater awareness of the political and other realities against which the other side has to operate. It has thus reduced the risk of misunderstandings arising over particular incidents and increased the likelihood of problems being resolved in a spirit of co-operation and without acrimony. It has enabled each side to take decisions within its jurisdiction with greater knowledge and awareness of the likely impact and reactions on the other side. It has also been welcomed internationally, where it has been recognised as establishing a better relationship between the British and Irish Governments and as making a very positive contribution to addressing the fundamental problems of Northern Ireland.

4. The conference has met frequently since its first meeting on 11 December 1985. The issues discussed by the conference have been summarised in the joint statements published after each conference meeting. The continuing effort to improve cross-border security co-operation is an important and regular item on the agenda of conference meetings. A wide range of other matters has also been considered; and the discussions in the conference are helpful, among other things, in ensuring that minority concerns are taken into account in subsequent policy decisions by the Government. Thus, for example, the Government's proposals which have led to the introduction of further fair employment legislation for Northern Ireland have been discussed at many conference meetings. Other subjects which have benefited from regular discussion include the enhancement of confidence in the system of justice and relations between the community and the security forces. The outcome of many of these discussions is reflected in the body of this paper.

5. Another area in which discussions have proved valuable is the "Making Belfast Work" project launched by the Government in July 1988. The project is aimed at increasing progress in tackling the problems in the disadvantaged areas of Belfast; additional resources have been provided and the "Strategy for Action" was published in January 1989. A detailed programme of further action planned in these areas in the financial year 1989-90, amounting to £15 million in government expenditure, was announced in March 1989. An initiative to stimulate the regeneration of Londonderry was launched in December 1988.

6. Article 3 of the agreement states that:

A Secretariat shall be established by the two Governments to service the Conference on a continuing basis in the discharge of its functions as set out in this Agreement."

The secretariat is responsible for making the arrangements for conference meetings. This includes the holding of preparatory discussions between officials, agreeing the agenda between the two sides, recording the discussions at the conference itself, and, as appropriate, ensuring that work agreed on at the conference is taken forward.

7. The Secretariat was established at Maryfield outside Belfast. It is headed by British and Irish joint secretaries, with a small supporting staff. As agreed by the two Governments at the first meeting of the conference, the secretariat has functioned as a continuing channel of communication between the two sides on all matters covered by the articles of the agreement. It enables messages to be passed promptly and potential problems to be swiftly addressed. It has also served as a forum for each side to explain the broad aspects of its security policy and as a channel to convey to the British authorities at high levels the views of the Irish Government in respect of the interests of the nationalist community.

8. The secretariat is not a "complaints bureau" nor does it have executive or operational responsibilities.

9. Set out below is a summary of the progress made under each main area of activity of the agreement.

Rights and identities of the two traditions; human rights and the prevention of discrimination.

10. Progress has been achieved in the following areas:

(i) Legislation has been enacted ending the anomaly whereby "I" voters have been unable to vote in district council elections. (The Elected Authorities (NI) Act 1989).

(ii) The Flags and Emblems Act (NI) 1954 has been repealed.

(iii) The Fair Employment (NI) Bill which has been introduced in the current parliamentary Session provides for further measures to eliminate religious discrimination and promote equality of opportunity in employment, including:

(a) compulsory monitoring of religious composition of workforce and periodic review of employment practices;

(b) establishing a new, and strengthened Fair Employment Commission (and a new Fair Employment Tribunal with wide enforcement powers);

(c) economic sanctions—those in breach of statutory obligations ineligible to tender for public sector business or for Government grants;

(d) a new code of practice to be drawn up by the new commission;

(e) The commission may issue enforceable directions obliging employers to take affirmative action measures and may issue notices relating to goals and timetables.

(iv) The police have been given greater powers to control parades and marches which are likely to give rise to provocation. (Public Order (NI) Order 1987);

(v) The law on prevention of incitement to hatred has been strengthened. (Public Order (NI) Order 1987).

(vi) Irish Language

Irish views on the place in the curriculum of the Irish language were taken into account during the formal consultation on education reform in Northern Ireland;Gpidance has been issued to Government Departments on the use in official business of Irish personal names and on the handling of correspondence in Irish;Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland (OSNI) has produced and published a dual-language map and gazetteer of Northern Ireland;

A question on the Irish language will be included in the 1991 census.

Role and Composition of Public Bodies

11. The British side has provided the Irish side with briefing on the arrangements for public appointments in Northern Ireland and provides information about forthcoming vacancies, and has considered any suggestions made by the Irish side.

Security Policy, Relations between the Security Forces and the Community, and Prisons Policy

12. The Government believe that creating wider and stronger public support for the police and the armed forces in Northern Ireland is as essential as progress in political, security and economic policies. Security force commanders seek to ensure through training and briefing that the security forces treat members of the public with the highest standards of courtesy at all times. The conference has devoted considerable attention to ways of improving relations between the security forces and the community. The Irish side have put forward a number of proposals in this area. Measures taken include:

Explicit confirmation of the policy pursued since 1984 that, wherever possible, patrols by the armed forces that are likely to come into contact with the public should be accompanied by a member of the RUC;

Improvements in the procedure for handling complaints against the police, including the establishment of an independent commission for police complaints. (Police (NI) Order 1987);

The RUC has made considerable efforts to increase the level of recruitment from the minority community;

The RUC Chief Constable has introduced a new code of conduct for all RUC officers (placed in the House of Commons Library on 15 March 1988);

The Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the Chief Constable of the RUC have jointly written to district councils proposing a widely representative scheme of police/community liaison committees based on police sub-divisions;

The forthcoming Police and Criminal Evidence (NI) Order will introduce a statutory requirement for the police to liaise with the local community;

The Army has introduced new procedures to ensure that, wherever possible, allegations of misbehaviour against members of the armed forces will be resolved with a response to the complainant within three to four weeks;

A committee of British officials has been established to keep under review the number and nature of allegations of misbehaviour by members of the security forces and the speed and effectiveness with which they are handled.

13. In June 1988 the Secretary of State announced a special review of all the remaining special category life sentence prisoners, and shortly afterwards a special review of the remaining Secretary of State's pleasure prisoners who had served more than eight years. Details of the initial results of the SOSP review were made public shortly before Christmas, and the initial results of the special category review were announced in March.

Legal matters, including the Administration of Justice

14. A number of improvements have been made in the system of justice in Northern Ireland, which help improve the confidence of the minority community in that system. These include:

Making all arrest powers exercisable only on the basis of reasonable suspicion—Northern Ireland Emergency Provisions Act (EPA) 1987

Reducing the maximum period that a suspect can be held without further ministerial authority from 72 to 48 hours (EPA 1987)

Establishing a statutory right of access to a solicitor within 48 hours of arrest (EPA 1987)

Providing that suspects are entitled at the time of their arrest to inform a friend or relative of their arrest and whereabouts (EPA 1987)

Instituting annual independent reviews of the Emergency Provisions Acts, and establishing a fixed term of five years on those Acts (EPA 1987)

Statutory changes to the admissibility of confession evidence, to make clear that confessions obtained by the use or threat of violence are not admissible and that confessions can be excluded in the interests of justice (EPA 1987) new powers for scheduled offences to be heard outside Belfast. (EPA 1987).

regular publication of statistics on the operation of the EPA.

a number of measures have been taken in recent years to reduce the delay between first remand and trial, which for most cases has been significantly reduced since 1985.

under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (Amendment) Order 1986, a number of offences were added to those which the Attorney-General is capable of certifying out of the scheduled mode of trial.

And in the near future

the Police and Criminal Evidence (NI) Order will, subject to the approval of Parliament, provide the same safeguards for persons detained for police questioning under the ordinary criminal law as are provided in England and Wales in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

a guide to the exercise of emergency powers will be publishd and made widely available.

15. There has been continuous discussion of extradition and related matters to ensure that fugitive offenders are brought to justice. The conference is concerned with policy aspects of extradition and extraterritorial jurisdiction as between north and south and its discussions have improved the understanding of the relevant authorities on these matters. This has helped to ensure that agreement on the need for fair and effective procedures for extradition and for the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction is matched by understanding of the procedural and other requirements. Significant developments have been the ratification by the Irish Government of the European convention on the suppression of terrorism, and the narrowing down of the political offence exception, initially by the Irish courts. The two Governments have also reaffirmed the importance of making use of the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976 and the Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 in appropriate cases. To try to ensure effective procedures for dealing with the problem of fugitive offenders, a wide range of issues concerning extradition law and procedure have been kept under review. These have included the provision for arrest and detention, the arrangements for the transfer of prisoners where extradition is ordered, and the procedural and other requirements which must be satisfied before extradition can be ordered.

Security Co-operation

16. The conference has provided the framework through which security co-operation has been developed and extended. Much of the detail must obviously remain confidential but progress has been made in each of the areas identified in the agreement including joint threat assessments, the exchange of information, liaison structures, technical co-operation, training and operational planning. As well as the provision for regular ministerial discussion of security matters at the conference, there is now a series of regular meetings between the two police forces at headquarters and operational levels under the direction of the Chief Constable of the RUC and the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana with whom the operational responsibility lies. These meetings are concerned with a wide range of operational, technical and communications matters to improve the day to day co-operation between the two forces. Among the procedures agreed is one for close co-operation in dealing with suspect terrorist devices located near the border. This procedure has been used on a number of occasions and has proved of great benefit to the bomb disposal experts on both sides. It is the firm intention of both police forces to achieve further improvements in co-operation using the new structures which have been established under the auspices of the conference.

Cross-Border Co-operation on Economic, Social and Cultural Matters

17. The most significant achievement in the field of economic and social co-operation under article 10 has been the establishment of the International Fund for Ireland. This has already received contributions of more than $120 million from the United States, Canada and New Zealand. The fund has also received the bulk of the first instalment of the European Community contribution of 15 million ecu a year (about £10 million). By the end of February 1989 the fund had approved support of over UK £52 million to over 1,000 projects, which hold out the prospect of some 4,500 new permanent jobs, the preservation of 1,500 more, and the provision of 4,000 jobs in specific construction projects. The work of the fund has involved close, practical cross border co-operation at many levels. As it moves into its second phase the fund is devoting a greater proportion of its resources to the areas of greatest need, both in Northern Ireland (which receives 75 per cent. of the resources disbursed by the fund), and in the six border counties of the Republic: of the grants approved by end-February 1989, some two thirds are located in areas of greatest need. The fund has also established investment companies in both Northern Ireland and the Republic to provide venture capital, either through equity or loan, on the basis of structly commercial criteria.

18. There has also been discussion, under the auspices of the agreement, of further cross-border co-operation on tourism, roads, transport, water quality, fisheries, education and social welfare, as well as consideration of social and economic problems in the north-west. In the field of health, Ministers have introduced arrangemets for referrals for certain specialised treatments between Belfast and Dublin; undertaken co-ordinated health promotion and immunisation campaigns; and ensured exchange of contracts and plans to deal with major accidents. The possibilities of joint investment in specialised equipment and of co-operation in procurement of supplies are being pursued.

19. This paper concerns the main areas of activity of the conference. It shows that, under the agreement, there have been constructive and useful exchanges on a wide range of matters. The review of the working of the conference, now being completed, looks to the further development of co-operation within the framework of the agreement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Payroll Giving

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was raised for charity through the payroll giving scheme in (i) 1987-88 and (ii) 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: The amounts raised through the joint payroll giving schemes solely of the Departments of Health and of Social Security were as follows:

Year	Amount £
1987-88	[1]1,582
1988-89	45,624

[1]The scheme became operational from 1 March 1988.

Residential Care

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is open to him to ensure that the necessary funds are available to provide residential care for the severely handicapped when top-up funding from the local authority is not available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is available to help people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes meet the fees they pay. The same help is available to temporary residents as to permanent ones.

Homelessness

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies have been done to monitor the effects of changes in social security benefits on the number of homeless living rough in London and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are not aware of any study specifically of this issue. The causes of living rough are complex and we believe it would be difficult to isolate the effects of any single factor.

Pensioners

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men and women who have reached retirement age before 1 October will fall outside the scope of the abolition of the retirement pensions earnings rule.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The earnings rule only applies for the first five years after pension age (65 for a man and 60 for a woman). Individuals aged over 70 (men) and 65 (women) have always been able to earn as much as they wish, with no reduction in state retirement pension; and they will continue to be able to do so after 1 October. There are approximately 7·7 million retirement pensioners aged over 70 (men) and 65 (women) who will not be affected by the abolition of the retirement pension earnings rule.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the community care grants budget for each of the Liverpool Department of Social Security offices for each of the past two years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the social fund budget allocations for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are in the Library.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will extend the scope of the community care grants; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to allow persons on invalidity benefit who have been institutionalised to receive community care grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 16 December at columns 750-51.

Social Fund

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has established any procedures for monitoring claimants who apply for social fund payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have commissioned the social policy research unit at the university of York to carry out research into the operation of the social fund. This research will include studies of samples of social fund applicants.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to start the social fund consolidation training courses for social fund officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Consideration is currently being given to deciding what further training might be required by social fund officers and what form such training might take. At present, social fund officers receive a comprehensive three week training course covering all aspects of the social fund.

Computers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the current use and effectiveness of the microcomputer projects in his local offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The microcomputer projects have been in daily use in local offices for some time. The micros help calculate new income support claims, help process social fund applications, automate bulk payments of claimants' fuel bills, collate management information statistics and aid the speedy location of claimants' files. Since their introduction, significant enhancements have been added to improve performance.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of occasions on which there has been a breakdown of micro-computers used in all his local offices since the inception of the social fund; and if he will make a statement on the effects of such breakdowns on the efficiency of the service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

A11 LOMP systems: The number of breakdown faults reported to the LOMP central help desk for the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 was 2,161 for all LOMP systems. Contingency arrangements for ensuring the efficiency of the service exist for all systems and these were complemented when necessary.

Social Fund System: The number of breakdown faults reported to the LOMP central help desk for the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 was 992 for the social fund system. Contingency arrangements for ensuring the efficiency of the service exist for social fund and these were implemented when necessary.

Disability

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to receive and publish the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys reports to his Department relating to the potential demand from persons with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In the period up to July 1989 the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is publishing a series of reports on the findings of the surveys of disability in Great Britain carried out between 1985 and 1988. Three reports have already been published covering the prevalance of disability among adults, the financial circumstances of disabled adults in private households and the prevalence of disability among children. The remaining reports will cover further aspects of the circumstances of disabled adults, including use of services, transport and employment; the financial circumstances of families with a disabled child living in private households and further aspects of the circumstances of disabled children, including use of services, transport and education. Taken together, the six reports will provide the most comprehensive and detailed information ever collected about disabled people in this country.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the disability benefit system; and what plans he has to consult on this.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 17 April 1988 at columns 10-11 and 22 May 1988 at column 428.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints have been received by his Department concerning doctors' conduct in examining claimants for disability benefits; how many have been removed from approved Department of Social Security lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Doctors working on behalf of the Department conduct almost 700,000 medical examinations each year on claimants for disability benefits. Although a central register is not kept on the number of complaints received concerning the conduct of doctors in examining claimants, those which are received are all thoroughly investigated and represent but a very small fraction of the total numbers of medical examinations undertaken. Very occasionally it has proved necessary to cease using a doctor whose conduct continues to provoke complaints, but, again, no central register is kept of the numbers.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will tabulate the number of successful applications for the review of attendance allowance and break down these figures into those who sought review because they were dissatisfied with the original decision and those who did so because their condition had deteriorated; and if he will give the figures for 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Number of decisions reviewed and revised by the Attendance Allowance Board and its delegates by reason for review 1985-88

Year	Number of decisions reviewed and revised	Reason for review
		Dissatisfaction	Relevant change of circumstances
1985	30,101	12,737	17,364
1986[1]	30,248	13,644	16,604
1987[2]	43,123	19,190	23,933
1988[3]	39,513	17,473	22,040

[1] To 14 November 1986.
[2] From 15 November 1986 to 8 January 1988.
[3] From 9 January 1988.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average cost per claim for attendance allowance per year for each year since 1985 for those claims that were (a) granted, (b) granted on review and (c) refused on review; and if he will break this down into the costs of arbitration and of fees;

(2) what is the average cost per claim for mobility allowance per year for each year since 1985 for those claims that were (a) granted, (b) granted on review, (c) granted on appeal and (d) refused on review; and if he will break this down into the cost of administration and doctors' fees.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what methods doctors are recruited to examine claimants for attendance and mobility allowances; how their performance is monitored; if he has any plans to recruit other suitably qualified persons to perform this role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Claimants for the attendance allowance and mobility allowance are examined by doctors selected and trained by the regional office senior medical officer (ROSMO) from registered medical practitioners who will have either made an application to be considered for this role or been nominated by their peers for this task.

The doctors selected are usually recruited from among general practitioners within the locality who will have demonstrable knowledge of local socio-economic conditions, established experience in general medical practice and evident expertise in conducting medical examinations. Before a doctor undertakes examinations on claimants for the attendance and mobility allowance guidance is given by the ROSMO, or regional office medical officer (ROMO), on the background of, and requirements for, that particular benefit. This instruction is supplemented by written guidance notes for reference. Initially, the performance of the examining doctor is closely monitored by the ROSMO who will institute further training sessions as appropriate; thereafter, there is some monitoring of reports by the ROSMO to identify any further need for guidance. The form, nature and pattern of such monitoring may vary and are dictated by the individual ROSMO.

By their very nature the medical examinations required for the purpose of determining eligibility for these allowances need the expertise and experience possessed by general medical practitioners who are able to provide a consistency of advice across a wide range of disabilities and age groups. In the small number of cases where a specialist opinion is required to determine diagnosis, or assist in resolving complex cases, an independent report is solicited from a consultant clinician who would possess the necessary specialist knowledge applicable to the individual case. Moreover, the Attendance Allowance Board or its delegate in the case of attendance allowance, or an independent adjudicating officer in the matter of mobility allowance, has access not only to the examining doctor's report but other evidence considered necessary, such as psychological, head teacher's and hospital's reports and so on. The present arrangements thus allow for suitably qualified persons to be approached, as necessary, in an individual case.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of registered disabled persons for the latest date available.

Mr. Scott: The total number of physically disabled persons registered with local authorities in England at 31 March 1987 was 1,230,632.

Loans and Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number and percentage of (a) budgetary loans and (b) community care grants awarded to the 15 client groups defined by his Department for (i) Great Britain, (ii) the northern Department of Social Security region and (iii) each of the departments of Social Security serving the Tyne and Wear area for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Provisional estimates for the year 1988-89 based on data for the period June 1988 to March 1989 are as follows:

National Insurance Contributions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent estimate of the cost to the national insurance fund of the 2 per cent. inducement under sections 1 and 7 of the Social Security Act 1986 in 1989-90 and subsequent years; and how much of the cost in 1989-90 relates to contributions in respect of 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Precise information is not yet available on the number of persons who will be eligible for incentive payments in 1989-90. The latest estimate is that incentive payments paid in 1989-90 will be £850 million, of which £350 million relates to 1987-88 and £500 million to 1988-89.

Unemployment Insurance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews are planned within the next five years to consider unemployment insurance being handled by the private sector.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such reviews are planned.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for (i) Great Britain as a whole, (ii) the north-east region and (iii) each of the four offices serving the Bradford metropolitan area, for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1989, c. 496-98]: I regret that the reply given has been found to contain an error. The information requested with the amended figures is as follows.

DEFENCE

Military Accidents

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the key statisics for military aircraft accidents over the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to tables 5.8 and 5.9 of the recent Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 675-II) and to successive Statements since 1980, in which are to be found the relevant information about military aircraft accidents.

Land (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has any plans to acquire more land for the use of the armed forces in Wales.

Mr. Neubert: We are determined that the defence estate should be no larger than necessary. But we continue to seek to acquire additional land particularly on the periphery of existing training areas to meet the increased needs of the armed forces, and to accommodate the large safety areas which modern weapons demand.

Radiation (Compensation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce new compensation arrangements for British ex-service men who have suffered radiation ailments arising from their duties.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to the hon. Member.

Night Flying

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the six-month trial of the revised military night-flying system introduced in October 1988.

Mr. Neubert: A revised military night low level flying system was introduced last year on a six-month trial basis. The trial period has now ended and the operation of the revised system has been reviewed. The review concluded that the revised arrangements were successful in increasing the co-ordination of activity at night and improving deconfliction procedures and that, with some refinements to improve utilisation, the revised system should therefore be retained. It is planned that the further refinements, which include centralising the co-ordination of the system and the responsibility for deconfliction at the tactical booking centre at RAF West Drayton, will be introduced from 1 June this year.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress is being made in developing the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to the hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

New Business

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his Department is planning to spend in the next financial year to encourage new business development in Scotland; and what was the comparable level of planning five years ago.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive figures in the form requested are not available. A wide range of programmes operated by my Department are designed, either in whole or in part, to promote business development in Scotland. However, planned provision for regional assistance schemes, which are directly linked to industrial development and wealth creation among businesses, for 1990-91 is £120 million. The Government's public expenditure plans published each year include provision for three forward years. The level of provision planned three years ago for regional assistance schemes in 1990-91 was £110 million.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the outstanding debt on the Erskine bridge to be finally paid off.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to specify a date.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current toll charge on the Erskine bridge; when it was last increased; and to what figure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Current toll charges, which have been in operation since November 1981, are as follows:

	Pence
Motor cycles	10
Cars and light goods vehicles	30

159. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total debt on the Erskine bridge for the year 1979-80; and what it was for each succeeding year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Total outstanding debt for 1979-80 and succeeding years is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	15·49
1980-81	19·90
1981-82	24·92
1982-83	30·50

Community Charge (Advertising)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total budget allocated to the Scottish Information Office for the production, broadcasting and publishing of adverts relating to eligibility for community charge rebates; and how much has been spent on (a) TV advertisements and (b) press advertisements to the latest available date.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Expenditure on television public information campaigns on the community charge rebate scheme was £308,000. The rebate scheme was also featured in press advertisment campaigns on the community charge, particularly in the autumn 1988 and the spring 1989 campaigns, the cost of which totalled £181,000.

WALES

Middle Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing the numbers of middle schools by size (a) in relation to pupil numbers and (b) in relation to the group size defined in the school teachers' pay and conditions document.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There was one middle school in Wales in January 1988. It had 78 pupils and was group 4 under the school teachers' pay and conditions document criterion.

Secondary Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing the numbers of secondary schools by size (a) in relation to pupil numbers and (b) in relation to the group size defined in the school teachers' pay and conditions document.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information in respect of January 1988 is as follows:

Ambulances (A55)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the implications for patients in Gwynedd needing emergency hospital treatment, arising from the road works on the A55 road holding up ambulances en route to hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Temporary traffic restrictions on the A55 in Gwynedd to allow completion of trunk road improvements have been imposed in close co-operation with the emergency services. The administration of contingency plans is the responsibility of each service involved. However, I am advised that patients who require urgent treatment at a district general hospital will be taken to Bodelwyddan if there are difficulties in reaching Bangor. Should it prove necessary the medical services can call on helicopters from RAF Valley for assistance.

Felinheli Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what date the Felinheli bypass on the A48 was first put into the Welsh Office roads preparation pool; when the first draft bypass plan was put out for public consultation; when the most recent plan was put out to public consultation; whether his most recently favoured route has now been confirmed in detail; what is the latest target date for commencing that work; and when is it planned that the bypass will open.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Felinheli bypass was first put into the Welsh Office preparation pool in 1971. A feasibility study into various routes for a bypass was carried out in 1971 and the selected route was protected for planning control purposes in December 1972. There has been no public consultation but an exhibition of the revised protected route was held in December 1985. Draft orders were published in November-December 1987 and, as a result of objections received, a public inquiry was held in May 1988. The inspector's report has been received and is under consideration. The scheme is programmed to start in the medium term, ie April 1991-March 1994 as shown in the recently published edition of "Roads in Wales", and will take two years to construct.

Plant Breeding Station (Aberystwyth)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of the Welsh plant breeding station, Gogerddan, Aberystwyth.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh plant breeding station is part of the Agricultural and Food Research Council's Institute for Grassland and Animal Production and, as such, is the responsibility of that research council. The council has been supportive of the station in the past, and I would expect it to be so in the future.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the operation of the set-aside scheme in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: There were 35 applications for set-aside in 1988-89; 31 of these have been approved and four were withdrawn.

The scheme will be reopening for the 1989-90 season shortly.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

94. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the environmental impact study being undertaken for British Rail of the high-speed rail link through Kent meets the requirements for such studies as defined by the European Community.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail and its consultants are in consultation with the Government to ensure that these requirements are met.

Humber Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the Humber bridge authorities concerning outstanding debt; whether any amount has been written off; and when he expects the overall debt on the bridge to be finally paid off.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been no recent discussions, and no debt has been written off. The date at which the debt is written off will depend on various factors, including future toll levels. When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State reaches a decision on the inspector's report, following last year's inquiry into proposals to raise tolls, we shall discuss the debts of the bridge with the bridge board.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the repair and renewal work on the Severn bridge will be completed; and what is the current estimated total cost of this work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recently awarded contract for the resurfacing should be completed around the end of next year. The estimated total cost of the repair and renewal work for the strengthening of the crossing is £69·1 million.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inspector who conducted the inquiry into the Government's proposal to increase toll charges on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a matter for the inspector, who is working on his report.

Central London Rail Study

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made a decision about the options contained in the central London rail study; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Further work on the proposed options is currently taking place. We hope to make a decision on the way ahead later in the year.

Highways (Costs)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the drainage cost of public highways in Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No general statistics are kept of the cost of draining public highways. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 13 December last Official Report column 520, for the latest figures of the cost in England of maintaining road drainage. It falls to highway authorities to meet the costs of providing and maintaining drainage within the highway and to water authorities to meet the costs of dealing with the surface water discharged from it.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the cost of lighting public highways in Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current and capital expenditure by central and local government on public highways lighting in Great Britain in 1987-88 is estimated to have been some £225 million.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spends on environmental and safety measures included in new trunk road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is committed to minimising the impact of new roads on the environment and to enhancing road safety. These are two of our main objectives in building roads and form an integral part of our planning and design process.

Possible measures to mitigate the impact of the road such as use of sensitive design, banks to screen traffic, planting, choice of materials and colour of structures are all taken into consideration when preparing the detailed design.

In some exceptional circumstances, special features such as tunnels may be incorporated.

Safety features such as lighting, signing, safety barriers and special provisions for pedestrians and cyclists are considered when drawing up the detailed design; and all contribute to the overall safety of the road.

Because environmental and safety measures are integrated into the design and construction of schemes, their cost cannot in general be identified separately.

Information can be given for some illustrative examples.

On the A12 Hackney-M11 link road, we estimate that overall some £50 million will be spent on environmental measures, including some tunnelling. This represents about 40 per cent. of the total scheme cost.

The A69 Newcastle Western bypass is to pass under rather than over the Metro line at an additional cost of £3 million.

On the A361 North Devon link road well over £1 million was spent on environmental measures including nearly three miles of Devon hedgebanks.

Planting is only implemented after a road scheme has been built. The expenditure involved can be more readily identified.

In the last financial year the Department spent £2·2 million on planting and associated works.

A total of 1·4 million trees and shrubs were planted. Typical schemes are A35 Dorchester bypass where almost 70,000 plants are being provided at a cost of £150,000 and the A626 Stocksbridge-M1 link where £111,000 is being spent on over 60,000 plants.

With regard to safety aspects, the cost of central reserve safety barriers can be identified. New dual carriageways are generally provided with central reserve safety barriers at the outset.

For example, over £0·5 million was spent on this on the south Woodford to Barking relief road completed in December 1987 and over £1 million on the Newcastle Western bypass currently under construction.

In addition the Department has a rolling programme to a value of some £10 million per year to install central reserve safety fencing on existing roads.

For 1989-90 this represents almost 150 miles of safety fencing. The provision and renewal of safety barriers is also carried out as part of major maintenance contracts.

Drink Driving

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the current year, the transport and road research laboratory will be continuing its programme of roadside surveys of drinking and driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. This year the survey procedure will be simplified, costs reduced and more survey sites covered.

Vehicle Weight Limits

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the ending of the United Kingdom's derogations from the European Community vehicle weight limits; and if he will make it his policy to agree only to an end-date which takes full account of the time needed to strengthen United Kingdom bridges.

Mr. Channon: As I explained to the House on 8 March, my aim is to resist attempts to end the United Kingdom's derogations in 1993 or at any other premature date. I shall therefore be negotiating at the June Transport Council for an end-date which takes proper account of the need to strengthen our bridges.

HEALTH

Drug Safety

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the Medicines Control Agency is making in the licensing and control of medicines in preparation for 1992.

Mr. Mellor: Officials from the Medicines Control Agency are engaged with the Commission and other member states in discussion on various issues relating to the establishment of a single EC market in medicines by 1992. These include the development of draft technical regulatons and guidelines relating to the safety, quality and efficacy required before medicinal products can be marketed as well as broader discussion about the system for licensing and control of medicines after 1992. These discussions are intended to lead to the formulation by the Commission of proposals for a definite system for the free movement of medicinal products within the Community, to be submitted to the Council of Ministers by the end of the year.

Hospital Treatment (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of hospital beds in the Bolton area taken up by people with heart disease and related illnesses.

Mr. Freeman: The hospital activity records for 1987-88 have not yet been analysed to produce information about beds occupied in individual districts by patients with specified diagnoses. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the district health authority, who may be able to provide the information.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the total number of beds available daily in the United Kingdom and (b) the number unoccupied in the NHS for each of the years 1979, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Information for England is given in the table.

Beds in NHS hospitals, England, 1979, 1986 and 1987-88

Year	Average daily available beds	[1]Average daily occupied beds	Average daily unoccupied beds
1979	361,670	293,272	68,398
1986	315,714	254,597	61,117
1987-88	297,342	[2]240,000	57,342

[1] Bed occupancy figures are based on a midnight count and do not reflect the use of beds by patients who do not stay overnight.
[2] Estimated.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what income has been derived by the Huddersfield health authority from pay beds in the latest year for which figures are available and in the preceding eight years; and how that income has been used.

Mr. Mellor: The table lists the information requested from 1982-83 onwards. Prior to 1 April 1982, the authority's predecesssor health district formed part of an area health authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.

Income from private in-patients (under section 65 of the NHS Act 1977)

Year	£
1982-83	61,962
1983-84	156,764
1984-85	191,590
1985-86	71,107
1986-87	9,745
[1]1987-88	16,354

[1] Latest available—annual accounts for 1988-89 are not due for submission to the Department until 30 June 1989.

Health authorities are free to retain such income, which by its nature is bound to vary from year to year, as a supplementary source of funds in order to meet their total annual expenditure. We do not collect information centrally on the specific purpose to which such monies have been put.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what means counterfeit medicines imported into the United Kingdom from elsewhere within the European Community will be detected when inter-community custom barriers are removed in 1992.

Mr. Mellor: Detailed arrangements affecting the importation of pharmaceutical products after 1992 have not yet been decided.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to take action under article 36 of the treaty of Rome, on the grounds of public safety, to control the quality, efficacy and safety of parallel imported medicines in view of the recent instances of counterfeit medicines being found in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans at present to do so. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 3 May at column 150.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings have been achieved by the Huddersfield health authority by putting ancillary services out to competitive tendering in the latest year for which figures are available and in the preceding eight years; and how have any savings achieved been used.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information in the form requested centrally. Savings achieved in 1988-89 amounted to £675,000. The total since the initiative started in 1983 is of the order of £1·85 million. Such savings contribute to the total resources available to the district; they are not attributed to specified developments.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the total directly employed staff in the National Health Service, in the United Kingdom (a) the number of persons and (b) full-time equivalents, for 1979, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is shown in the table.

Total directly employed staff in the National Health Service at 30 September of each year: United Kingdom

	Number[1,2]	Whole-time equivalent[1,2]
1979	1,171,700	976,900
1986	1,217,400	1,018,400
1987	1,222,400	1,016,400
1988	n/a	n/a

[1] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 100.
[2] Includes medical and dental locums and nursing and midwifery agency staff.
n/a = Not available.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for (i) domestic staff, (ii) porters, (iii) catering staff and (iv) other ancillary staff in the Oxford district; for how long such vacancies are advertised on average before they are filled, and what was the percentage turnover of all ancillary staff in the Oxford district in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Oxfordshire health authority for the information that he seeks.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the results of the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985;

(2) what has been the cost to his Department of water fluoridation since the Water (Fluoridation) Act came into effect;

(3) what new estimate he has made of the cost effectiveness of further fluoridation in view of the general decline in dental cavities in children's teeth in the 90 per cent. of the population not in receipt of artificially fluoridated water;

(4) whether he is prepared to offer an indemnity to private water undertakers who are liable to be sued for harm resulting from fluoridation of their drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985 did what it was intended to do and put beyond doubt the power of water undertakers to add fluoride to the water supplied to them when asked to do so by health authorities. No new fluoridation schemes have been introduced since the Act came into force though a number of schemes are at various stages of preparation.

The central funds allocated to health authorities for the implementation of water fluoridation schemes amounted to £262,000 in 1986-87; £433,000 in 1987-88 and £1,168,000 in 1988-89. The 1988-89 figure reflects the commitment in the Government's White Paper "Promoting Better Health" to increase the amount of money made available to Health Authorities to fund fluoridation schemes. £2,075,000 is allocated for 1989-90.

A recent survey comparing the dental health of young children in fluoridated south Birmingham and non-fluoridated Bolton (C. M. Mitropoulos et al., Br. Dent. J. 1988) confirms that further reductions in caries levels in children's teeth are undoubtedly achievable over and above the general decline in caries that has occurred. These benefits are particularly cost-effective where caries levels are otherwise high and in the less privileged social classes where the highest incidence of caries is found.

A copy of the model agreement which provides the basis of discussion between health authorities and water undertakers on the terms under which fluoridation of domestic water supplies may be carried out, including a copy of the terms of indemnity provided for water authorities and private water companies operating fluoridation schemes was placed in the Library on 16 January 1989. We will continue to provide an indemnity to water undertakers after privatisation of the water industry; the terms of this indemnity are being considered in the light of representations made by the water authorities and the water companies associations.

GPs (Remuneration)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the effects of the proposed changes in the remuneration of general practitioners on the gross income of those who do not opt for their own budgets; and what is the intended effect of the new arrangements in terms of (a) the number of patients per doctor and (b) the number of staff employed by doctors, and their remuneration.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown), for Slough (Mr. Watts) and for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) today. Under the proposals for GP practice budgets set out in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", and Working Paper 3, practices which opt to become budget holders may invest any savings on their annual budget in improving the services that they offer to patients. The review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration will continue as now to recommend the average net income and indirectly reimbursed expenses of all GPs, whether budget holders or not. Other expenses incurred by GPs are reimbursed directly.

We expect the number of staff employed by GPs to increase as a result of our intention to invest more in practice teams, and to remove the present restraints on their number and the range of qualifying duties. By enabling family practitioner committees to target funds on areas of greatest need, the deployment of practice team staff will become more cost-effective.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research and Development

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those agricultural research and development projects from which funding was withdrawn during 1988.

Mr. Ryder: 1. The resources devoted to agricultural research and development by and for my Department were increased in 1988-89. The cost rose from £81·7 million in 1987-88 to an estimated £85·6 million in 1988-89. The majority of the work is included in rolling programmes commissioned with the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service and the Agricultural and Food Research Council. Other ad hoc projects are performed by a variety of contractors under short term contracts.

2. The rolling programmes of commissioned research are under constant review and adjustment, in the light of changing priorities and the prospects for useful results. A number of individual experiments and studies in each programme will have ceased in 1988-89 to be replaced by new work. It would not be possible to list such adjustments except at disproportionate cost. The following short-term contracts were completed during 1988-89; none was terminated prematurely.

Gas Prices

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the implications for gas prices for horticulturalists resulting from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas tariffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have so far received 10 letters, including two from the National Farmers Union, making representations about the new price schedules being introduced by British Gas and the likely impact of these on growers.

My officials have subsequently met NFU horticultural representatives to discuss the problem and have asked, to be kept informed urgently of progress in the discussions which they are having with the Office of Gas Supply.

New Nitrashell

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the make up and side effects of using or storing the fertiliser New Nitrashell; what safety recommendations have been issued about it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: New Nitrashell is a propriety fertiliser based on ammonium nitrate manufactured by Kemira Ince Ltd, Ince, Chester, and according to the manufacturer contains more than 28 per cent. nitrogen and as such complies with EC directive 80/876.

The Fertilisers Regulations 1977, as amended by the Fertilisers (Amendment) Regulations 1984, require ammonium nitrate fertilisers, such as New Nitrashell to meet minimum safety standards which include limits on inorganic additives, heavy metals, the percentage of combustible material and minimum particle size.

Ammonium nitrate is an oxidising agent which is not itself combustible but can be detonated under conditions of heat and confinement of severe shock. It is therefore controlled under the United Kingdom Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984 and the United Kingdom Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984. These regulations are enforced by HSE, which also issues guidance note CS 18 on storage and handling of ammonium nitrate.

The Fertilisers Manufacturers Association and Kemira Ince Ltd issue full safety advice for the storage, handling and transportation of ammonium nitrate fertilisers.

Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) payments under the common agricultural policy and (b) payments from the Exchequer to United Kingdom farmers for each crop and type of livestock since the financial year 1969-70 together with his estimate for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr Donald Thompson: Expenditure on market regulation under the CAP and on price guarantees up to 1988-89 is set out by main commodity in the publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1988", and the annual reviews of agriculture which preceded it. Forecasts for 1989-90 are contained in the Supply Estimates

Food Quality

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the outcome of the informal Agriculture Council meeting in Spain on 16 May on food quality.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Time permitted only brief and very gneral discussion at this meeting. It focussed mainly on the Commission's suggestion, in its document "The Future of Rural Society", that Community law might provide for certain food designations to be reserved for foods of a particular composition or produced by specified methods or originating in a specific geographical area.

A wide range of views was expressed. Some believed that such measures would improve food quality, discourage "substitute" products, and help raise farmers' incomes. Others, like me, felt that consumer choice and freedom of trade could best be maximised by allowing producers to respond freely to demand, while ensuring that consumers where fully informed about the nature of the goods offered to them. The Council is likely to return to the subject on a future occasion.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office Savings Bank (Savings Limit)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to monitor the new rules concerning the Post Office savings bank, particularly the new limit of £5 savings; what representations he has received on the effect of the rules on children and pensioners saving small amounts of money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 May 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

National savings monitors the performance of all national savings products. The increase from £1 to £5 in the minimum for deposits into the National savings ordinary account from 1 January 1989 has reduced the number of deposits transactions by around 20 per cent. So the measure has achieved its aim of reducing the number of very small deposits, which are as expensive to process as larger deposits. Since Girobank and other financial institutions provide a wide range of savings facilities for very small amounts of savings, I am satisfied that this change has not had a negative effect on children and pensioners.

Representations have been received from many hon. Members and from the members of the public to whom I have explained the reasons for the change.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total number of appeals against refusal of asylum heard by the immigration appellate authorities in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 19 May at column 321.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General how many people resident in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland have appeared before a social security commissioner in each of the past five years; and if he will separately distinguish the location where those hearings were held.

The Attorney-General: The numbers of cases heard by social security commissioners in each of the past five years are listed in the tables, broken down according to the location of the hearings. The breakdown of individual residential locations requested is not reasonably practicable.

EMPLOYMENT

Availability for Work

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list from the 1988 labour force survey, by region, including Greater London and by male and female, the numbers of people who were (a) without jobs and who looked for work in the four weeks before their LFS interview and were available to start work within two weeks, who wanted full-time jobs, the number who wanted part-time jobs and the number who had no preference (b) unemployed according to the standard LFS definition who were looking for full-time jobs and the number looking for part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (c) in part-time jobs who were looking for a different job with longer hours or looking for an additional job, (d) looking for a different job with shorter hours, (e) claimants not unemployed by the definition using broad ILO guidelines on the grounds that they were employed, and (f) claimants not unemployed by the conventional LFS definition on the grounds that they were employed.

Mr. Lee: Available estimates from the preliminary results of the 1988 labour force survey are shown in the following tables:

It is estimated that there were some 100,000 male and 60,000 female claimants employed in Great Britain in Spring 1988. However, a reliable analysis of these figures by region is not available, mainly because of the sampling errors involved.

Job Introduction Scheme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made for grant aid under the job introduction scheme; and how many have been awarded for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: The information requested about the number of applications made for grant aid under the job introduction scheme is not available. The numbers of grants authorised for each of the past five years were:

	Number
1984-85	2,033
1985-86	1,828
1986-87	1,460
1987-88	1,629
1988-89	2,091

Skill Shortages

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what review he has made of the effectiveness of industry training boards in tackling the level of skill shortages or training needs in their sectors; and what were the results of the review for each training organisation.

Mr. Nicholls: The effectiveness of each industry training board is reviewed every three years at the time of reconstitution. Many industries covered by these boards continue to report skill shortages.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what review he has undertaken of the effectiveness of non-statutory training organisations in tackling the level of skill shortages or training needs in their sectors; and what were the results of the review for each training organisation.

Mr. Nicholls: The effectiveness of non-statutory training organisations was last reviewed during a Manpower Services Commission research study in 1987. The criteria used included monitoring and reviewing key skill requirements and training needs. The report showed that 56 were rated effective and a further 23 partially effective against the full range of the criteria. The report did not rank organisations against each criterion.

Non-statutory Training Organisations

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which areas the level of effectiveness of non-statutory training organisations has improved since production of the Manpower Services Commission study "The Full Fact Finding Study of the NSTO System".

Mr. Cope: There has been no overall study of the effectiveness of non-statutory training organisations since the Manpower Services Commission research report in 1987.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many non-statutory training organisations currently meet the standards laid down in the Manpower Services Commission publication "The Effective NSTO"; and what steps he is taking to secure compliance with those standards by the remaining non-statutory training organisations.

Mr. Cope: Since the Manpower Services Commission research report in 1987, many non-statutory training organisations have taken steps to improve their effectiveness. The Government continue to provide financial support to help effectiveness improvements in these organisations. "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm. 540) noted the Government's welcome for the establishment of the voluntary National Council for Industry Training Organisations, and the Training Agency is assisting the council in producing a code of practice for members. Further research will be commissioned in due course.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current level of resourcing and support to non-statutory training organisations from employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The majority of non-statutory training organisations command the support of the employers in their industries and have adequate resources to be effective in carrying forward the remits for industry-level training organisations set out in "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm 540). The Government continue to assist the less effective and new bodies.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in the light of the finding of the Manpower Services Commission study "The Full Fact Finding Study of the NSTO System" that 79 per cent. of employers would not contribute more resources to training organisations, what steps he is taking to ensure that the industry-level training organisations proposed in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" will attract sufficient industry support.

Mr. Cope: The great majority of employers in Great Britain support vocational education and training for their employees; a very small proportion of that support goes to finance the voluntary and independent non-statutory training organisations. All proposals for new organisations are required to detail the level of support being obtained from employers in the relevant industry.

Competent Persons (Prosecutions)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many competent persons have been prosecuted in each year since 1965.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Power Presses

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many injuries and deaths there have been at power presses for each year since the Power Presses Regulations were introduced in 1965.

Mr. Nicholls: Power presses are not separately identified in the Health and Safety Executive's current databases of reported injuries at work. Available information is taken from annual surveys which were discontinued after 1974, but comparable data was collected in 1979 and 1983. The results are shown in the table.

[1] Reportable injuries notified to Her Majesty's factory inspectorate; severity is not recorded.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many competent persons have been prosecuted in each year since 1965 in relation to the 1965 Power Presses Regulations and any other legislation relevant to power presses.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. The HSE records do not specifically identify proceedings taken against competent persons.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 2 December 1987; how many were employed in each of the grades of inspector II, inspector 1B, inspector 1A, deputy superintending inspector, superintending inspector, area director, senior area director, deputy chief inspector and chief inspector, respectively; what are the latest totals in each of these categories; and how many in each of the categories for both dates were in the field.

Mr. Nicholls: The breakdown by grade of number of factory inspectors employed in HSE is as follows. Staffing figures are recorded on the first of each month.

Grade	1 December 1987		1 May 1989

Following the latest in a series of recruitment competitions, a number of successful candidates have been or will be offered employment as factory inspectors. A further recruitment competition is currently under way.

Agriculture Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of agricultural inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 2 December 1987; how many were employed in each of the grades of assistant inspector, inspector, principal inspector, principal inspector 1, deputy superintending inspector, deputy chief inspector and chief inspector, respectively; what are the latest totals in each of these categories; and how many in each of the categories for both dates were in the field.

Mr. Nicholls: The breakdown by grade of the number of agricultural inspectors employed in HSE is as follows. Staffing figures are recorded on the first of each month.

Grade	1 December 1987 Number	(of which in the field force)	1 May 1989 Number	(of which in the field force)

Construction (Safety)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will investigate the reasons for the differences in death, serious injury and ill-health rates on construction sites with the highest and lowest rates.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) does not record fatal accident, serious injury or ill-health rates for individual construction sites and, therefore, the sites with the highest and lowest rates cannot be identified.

However, the "Blackspot Construction" report published by the HSE in June 1988 analysed the circumstances of 739 deaths in the construction industry between 1981 and 1985 and showed that 70 per cent. could have been avoided by positive management action.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report provisional figures for 1988-89 giving (a) the number of fatalities and (b) the number of major injuries (i) in the London region and (ii) nationally for the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for 1988-89 are in the process of compilation but are not yet available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the reasons why death and serious injuries in local authority direct labour buiding works are lower than in private industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Comparisons of the kind the hon. Member has in mind would be meaningless, even if reliable and comprehensive figures were available, since the work performed by organisations of different types and size in the construction industry differs substantially.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his statement in the House on 11 April, Official Report, columns 833-34, on the correlation between firms with good safety standards and those that are successful, he will publish in the Official Report the names of the successful companies giving examples of their good safety record and stating whether the companies recognise trade unions.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. As I pointed out in my statement to the House on 11 April, the correlation between good safety standards and other positive aspects of firms' performance is based on the experience and observations of HSE inspectors.

Release for Training Scheme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made for grant aid for the release for training scheme; and how many have been awarded for each of the past five years.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Personal Reader Service Scheme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made for grant aid under the personal leader service scheme, and how many have been awarded for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: I take it that the hon. Member's question refers to my Department's personal reader service scheme.

Information about the number of applications made for grant aid under this scheme for the last five years is not available.

The number of new beneficiaries receiving grants in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1984-85	75
1985-86	80
1986-87	62
1987-88	107
1988-89	116

Employment (Special Aids)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been awarded for grant aid for the special aids to employment; and how many have been awarded for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: The information requested about the number of applications made for grant aid under the special aids to employment scheme is not available. The numbers of grants authorised for each of the past five years were:

	Number
1984-85	1,640
1985-86	2,386
1986-87	2,630
1987-88	3,041
1988-89	4,242

Fares to Work Scheme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made for grant aid under the fares to work scheme; and how many have been awarded for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: The information requested about the number of applications made for grant aid under the assistance with fares to work scheme is not available. The numbers of grants authorised for each of the past five years were:

	Number
1984-85	390
1985-86	434
1986-87	536
1987-88	553

Adaptations to Premises and Equipment

47. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been made for grant aid under the adaptations to premises and equipment scheme; and how many have been awarded for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: The information requested about the number of applications made for grant aid under the adaptations to premises and equipment scheme, is not available. The numbers of grants authorised for each of the past five years were:

	Number
1984-85	145
1985-86	165
1986-87	253
1987-88	252
1988-89	247

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conclusions the internal review on the employment practices for disabled persons has reached on altering or retaining the quota system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Consideration of the issues being examined in the internal review of my Department's services for people with disabilities has not yet been completed. The review will be completed and the results published as soon as possible.

Disabled Workers (Quotas)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of permits issued exempting employers from the quota obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: The table gives information about the number of employers issued with permits some of whom may have received more than one permit during the years shown.

Number of Employers who were below quota on 1 June but who had been granted bulk permits during the previous 12 months

	Number

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of bulk permits issued exempting employers from the quota obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lee: The table gives information about the number of employers issued with bulk permits (some of whom may have received more than one permit) during the years shown.

Employment Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount spent on employment rehabilitation centres for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: The total expenditure for the employment rehabilitation service (which includes employment rehabilitation centres) was as follows:

	£ million
[1]1988-89	20
1987-88	23
1986-87	22

Disabled Workers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have been instigated for contravention of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 for each of the past five years; and what has been the total amount paid in fines.

Mr. Lee: There have been no prosecutions under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 in the last five years.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what publicity initiatives have been taken by his Department regarding the uptake of grants by employers for the employment of disabled persons, for the last three years; and what has been the total expenditure.

Mr. Lee: Publicity initiatives about schemes and services for the employment of disabled people during the last three years have included ongoing promotion of the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people and the associated videos "It Worked Fine" and "It Can Be Done". In 1988 a new series of leaflets for employers and people with disabilities was introduced. In 1989, additional leaflets about specific disabilities, the disablement resettlement officer service and jobhunting for people with disabilities were provided. Publicity material is displayed at appropriate conferences, exhibitions and so on. The Disablement Advisory Service provides information about such schemes and services as part of its advisory role to employers. The total expenditure for the three years was approximately £651,500, excluding staff costs which are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people with disabilities are employed by his Department (a) as a total number, and (b) as a percentage of the total work force.

Mr. Lee: The Employment Department group employs 1,502 registered disabled staff; they represent 2·5 per cent. of permanent staff in the group. In addition, the group employs a number of other people with disabilities who choose not to register.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the total number of part-time female employees in employment in Scotland and for each of the years June 1979 to June 1988;

(2) what was the total number of part-time male employees in employment in Scotland for each of the years June 1979 to June 1988;

(3) what was the total number of full-time male employees in employment in Scotland for each of the years June 1979 to June 1988;

(4) what was the total number of full-time female employees in employment in Scotland for each of the years June 1979 to June 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 May 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is shown in the table. Estimates of the number of part-time male employees are not available for each year, but the censuses of employment record some 0·06 million male part-time employees in employment for each of the years 1978, 1981 and 1984.

Notes:
(1) These estimates may be revised when the results of the 1987 Census of Employment become available.
(2) Not adjusted for seasonal variation.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people in (a) full-time employment and (b) part-time employment, by sex, for each of the standard regions, for each of the years 1983 to 1988 based on the labour force survey.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the table:

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people aged over 16 years who are (i) full-time employees, (ii) part-time employees, (iii) self-employed and (iv) on Government employment and training schemes, based on the labour force survey, in each of the standard regions and Wales, for each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr Lee: Estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the following table.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the revised numbers of approved places allocated under employment training; what are the area budgets for the programme; and what are the allocations of supplementary grant, for each training agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: Up to 265,000 employment training places have been allocated for 1989-90. Detailed area plans have yet to be finalised.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of employment training places occupied, by sex, in each of the standard regions and Wales at the latest date for which the information is available.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Information about the numbers of men and women on employment training is not available separately. The number of those entering the programme and the proportions of men and women are given in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

12. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost for each urban development corporation so far in relation to the relocation of firms under the following headings (a) compensation for land and buildings, (b) disturbance and removal costs and (c) additional payments.

Mr. Trippier: A full, detailed breakdown is not readily available. But total expenditures to date on relocation of firms are as follows: LDDC £8·4 million, black country DC £3·4 million, Trafford park DC £1·4 million, Merseyside DC £0·7 million, Leeds DC £0·2 million.

Empty Residential Properties

13. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the number of empty residential properties owned by his Department.

Mr. Chope: Yes. As at 1 April 1989, 38 of the 433 residential properties owned by the Department of the Environment were empty. Of these only 13 are surplus to requirements and these are in process of disposal on the open market.

25. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek guidance from local authorities and housing associations on the use of empty residential property possessed by his Department.

Mr. Chope: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) earlier today.

59. Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will issue guidance to Government Departments on the use of Government-owned empty residential property.

73. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to bring empty Government-owned residential property into use.

89. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on Government policy concerning empty residential property in its possession.

Mr. Chope: My Department takes every opportunity to advise other Government Departments on the best use of their residential property and to draw to their attention the need to bring empty residential property back into use as early as possible.

75. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of empty properties belonging to his Departmenst is suitable for use as temporary accommodation by homeless people.

Mr. Chope: At present there are no empty properties owned by the Department of the Environment suitable for use as temporary accommodation for the homeless. Should empty residential properties not be required for further Government use and they cannot be sold because of legal restrictions or sold within six months they are offered first to the local housing authority and then to a housing association.

90. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation has been empty for more than six months.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) earlier today. The 38 empty properties represent 8·7 per cent. of the total residential property owned by my Department.

92. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a list of all the empty residential property owned by his Department.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will provide a table showing by region of England and Wales the number and percentage of empty residential property owned by his Department.

Mr. Chope: A list showing all empty residential property owned by the Department of the Environment by region, number and percentage of total stock as at 1 April 1989, is set out.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to release property belonging to his Department, which has been empty for more than a year and is suitable for residential accommodation, for use by young people who are at present homeless.

Mr. Chope: At present there are no empty properties suitable for residential accommodation owned by the Department of the Environment which could be made available for use by homeless young people.

Empty residential properties owned by my Department for which there is no further Government use are put on the open market for sale. If, because of legal restrictions, they cannot be sold or sold within six months they are offered first to the local housing authority and then to a housing association.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek guidance from the local authority organisations on how best to use the empty property owned by his Department.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) earlier today.

Empty Public Sector Housing

18. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding empty public sector housing.

Mr. Trippier: Apart from occasional correspondence, we have received some recent representations on empty public sector housing in the context of our homelessness review. They emphasise the contribution these properties could make to the relief of housing pressures and the need for all public sector landlords to manage their stock efficiently.

Green Lanes and Bridleways

19. Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to protect green lanes and bridleways from use by motorised vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is already unlawful, by virtue of section 34 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, to drive a motor vehicle on a bridleway. I am aware, however, of concern about legal, but irresponsible and inconsiderate, use by motor vehicles of byways and green lanes. Powers are available to highway authorities to prevent this but my Department is monitoring this situation closely and I will consult my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport if I consider further legislation necessary.

Water Authority Land

20. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the rights of access, by members of the public, to water authority owned land.

Mr. Ridley: After enactment of the Water Bill, the National Rivers Authority and the water and sewerage companies will be under the same statutory duties as the present water authorities in respect of public access and amenity on water industry land.

CFCs

21. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects that the inessential use of chlorofluorocarbons in aerosols will be phased out in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Members of the British Aerosol Manufacturers Association have stated that by the end of this year 90 per cent. of aerosols in this country will be free of chlorofluorocarbons. The remaining 10 per cent. is accounted for by medical and some industrial aerosols for which suitable substitutes are not yet available.

74. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the labelling of aerosol cans as ozone friendly.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I welcome the decision of the British Aerosol Manufacturers Association to recommend to its members that all aerosols be labelled, so as to indicate whether or not they contain ozone-damaging chlorofluorocarbons.

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what facilities there are in the United Kingdom for destroying chlorofluorocarbons in an environmentally safe way; and whether he has any plans to improve upon present arrangements.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 22 May 1989]: There are very limited facilities currently available in the United Kingdom for incineration of liquefied chlorofluorocarbons and, as yet, no practical methods for destroying foam in an environmentally satisfactory method. The best way forward is to encourage industry to minimise the use of CFCs, and to recycle where practicable. I shall keep disposal arrangements under review in the light of further consideration by the parties to the Montreal protocol.

Community Charge

22. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of pensioner households he estimates will gain under the community charge.

Mr. Ridley: I estimate that nearly 70 per cent. of pensioner households will pay less with the community charge than they would with rates, and 83 per cent. of single pensioner households will pay less.

Football Spectators Bill

23. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the president of the Football League to discuss the Football Spectators Bill.

Mr. Ridley: My hon. Friend and I met the chairman of the Football Association and the president of the Football League this morning to discuss the question of all-seater stadiums.

Shared Equity Housing Schemes

24. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the removal of the right to buy out the freehold from shared equity housing schemes.

Mr. Trippier: I have received a number of representations, mainly from local authorities and housing associations.

Greater Manchester (Housing)

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the condition of housing in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Trippier: Responsibility for the condition of housing in Greater Manchester, as elsewhere, rests with the owners. For properties in private ownership, grants may be available to help to improve them. Where the owner is the local authority, my Department's estate action unit continues to provide significant assistance in improving housing conditions on rundown estates.

East Lancashire Railway

27. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will pay an official visit to Ramsbottom in order to examine the impact of the east Lancashire railway on the development of the local economy.

Mr. Trippier: I visited Summerseat, near Ramsbottom, in February of this year to speak at the launch of the "Irwell Valley Adventure" in which the east Lancashire railway features as a major tourist attraction. I am pleased both with the progress of the railway restoration project itself and the impact it is having on the local economy.

Unleaded Petrol

28. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of new cars are now capable of running on unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that 80 per cent. of new cars registered in Great Britain in 1988 could be using unleaded petrol. Of these 33 per cent. could use unleaded petrol straight away and the remaining 47 per cent. after adjustment. Estimates for January 1989 indicate that more than half of the cars currently being registered can now use unleaded petrol without adjustment.

38. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for demand for unleaded petrol.

45. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in demand for unleaded petrol since the Budget; what proposals he has for encouraging the wider use of lead-free petrol; and what has been the response of other EEC member states to Britain's initiatives to promote lead-free petrol.

47. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intendes to promote further measures to encourage the use of unleaded petrol.

51. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's campaign to increase the use of unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are firmly committed to the speedy changeover to unleaded petrol. Last year the average uptake of the fuel amounted to only 1 per cent. of the total petrol sales. Following the significant duty differential introduced by the Chancellor in his Budget this year together with the ongoing work of the unleaded petrol group, which I chair, our recent major television advertising campaign and a range of publicity initiatives by the Department, uptake is estimated to have risen to over 15 per cent. We shall continue to campaign vigorously to increase sales still further.

We led the way in securing agreement in the EEC on the introduction of this environment-friendly fuel. Britain now has the second largest duty differential in favour of unleaded petrol within the EEC and is in the top four countries for uptake.

The changeover to unleaded petrol now is important. It is good for the environment, it makes good financial sense and it paves the way for the introduction of stricter EC vehicle emission standards to which we are committed.

Water Industry

29. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has given about the most effective way of transferring the water industry into the private sector.

Mr. Howard: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission stated in its report on Southern water authority in April 1985 that it did not regard the existing private statutory companies as a useful model for the privatised industry. It took the view that the statutory form of regulation, which limits profits and dividends, conspicuously failed to provide adequate safeguards for the consumer and a profit incentive to management to reduce costs and increase efficiency. I am confident that the Water Bill's chosen route to privatisation on plc lines offers a far more attractive future for the industry, the consumer and the investor.

Housing Estates

30. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for those estates no longer included in the housing action trust proposals; and if he will make a statement.

44. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will release money to those areas originally designated to be part of a housing action trust, which are not now to be included.

Mr. Trippier: It is for the local authorities concerned to decide, in consultation with their tenants, what future action to take on these estates. The work done by the HAT consultants will assist the Department in assessing any bids for HIP resources.

Water Privatisation

31. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a deputation from the Ramblers Association to discuss the maintenance of free accessibility to land for the general public following privatisation of the water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I met the Ramblers Association to discuss these matters on 6 March 1989.

32. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the alleged illegality of the water authorities' advertising campaign.

Mr. Howard: I have been unable to trace any representations on this point.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Cumbria county council and the Lake District planning board on the privatisation of water authority assets.

Mr. Howard: We have received a number of representations from the Lake District planning board about the composition of the regional rivers advisory committees of the National Rivers Authority, consultation arrangements between the national park authorities and the water industry, and the sale of non-operational land. The board's views have been carefully considered. I am not aware of any representations from Cumbria county council.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how it intends to finance the main flotation costs of the privatisation of the water authorities.

Mr. Howard: Token provision for this new service has been sought in the main supply estimate for class X vote 9. A supplementary estimate will be presented when the sale has been completed and the final costs are known. Pending approval of these estimates, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

New Towns

33. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received regarding the seven new town submissions affecting Appleton Cross and Grappenhall Heys; and what proportion of them were in favour of the developments.

Mr. Trippier: I have received 2,095 proformas and letters about these submissions, most of which were opposed to the proposals. I have also received three petitions against the proposals containing in total some 7,000 signatures.

52. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many county councils in England currently include in their proposed revised structure plan schemes for building new towns in excess of 10,000 people on existing green belt land; and if he will list them.

Mr. Chope: I know of no such schemes, other than that proposed in the south-east Dorset structure plan first alteration, of which my hon. Friend will be aware. My right hon. Friend hopes to publish modifications to the South-East Dorset alteration shortly.

Right to Buy

34. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the use of the delay procedure, since its introduction in March, by tenants wishing to exercise their right to buy their council home.

Mr. Trippier: A large number of tenants exercising the right to buy and held up by their landlord have sought advice on the delay procedure, and over 15,000 forms have been sent out, both to tenants direct and to hon. Members and tenants' advisers. But we have no precise information since there is no requirement to inform the Department when delay notices are served.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against valuations under the right-to-buy scheme were made by Greenwich council tenants during (a) 1988 and (b) the first three months of 1989; and in how many cases the original valuation was reduced on appeal.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 369 tenants of the council requested determinations of value by the district valuer in 1988, the value determined being lower than the council's in 360 cases. Two hundred and eleven tenants have requested determinations in the first three months of this year, the determination being lower than the original valuation in all the 114 cases dealt with so far.

Water Charges

35. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the provisions for the future control of water charges set out in the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on Monday 22 May 1989.

Green Belt

36. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total area of land which has been removed from the green belt during the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: The precise information requested is not available, but the extent of approved green belt in England has more than doubled from 1·8 million acres to 4·5 million acres since 1979.

77. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions he has given to planning authorities to prevent erosion into the green belt; whether the importance of presumption against development in the green belt still applies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Local planning authorities are expected to have regard to the very restrictive planning policies that continue to apply in the green belt, as set out in the Department's planning policy guidance note 2, published in January 1988: a copy is in the Library. As the guidance makes plain, there is a general assumption against inappropriate development in the green belt.

93. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the need for local housing authorities situated within the green belt to make provisions, on an exceptional basis, for low-cost housing in their rural area; and what advice he has offered.

Mr. Trippier: In the first instance it is for local authorities to decide where new housing can be accommodated, taking account of existing planning policies and, where applicable, the relaxation I announced on 3 February for small developments to meet local needs in rural areas. The Government have made provision for a substantial increase in the total resources available to housing associations for subsidised rented housing and for low-cost home ownership, and an increased share of that total will be allocated to smaller rural communities and to those areas where high house prices make access to owner-occupation more difficult.

Low-cost Housing Scheme

37. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he proposes to recommend to local authorities and housing associations to ensure that the initial benefit of a reduced price available to the purchaser of a house under the low-cost housing scheme can be passed on to subsequent purchasers.

Mr. Trippier: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside recently announced that we have in mind a scheme where housing associations will have a pre-emptive right to buy back a shared ownership property at full market value when the owner sells:

(i) where the house is in a rural area where replacement of a shared ownership dwelling may be difficult; or
(ii) where a private landowner has contributed a site on condition that it be retained for low-cost housing.

This repurchase arrangement enables the association to resell with the benefit of a reduced price, without restricting the right of the shared owner to become the full owner of his home.

Montreal Protocol

39. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many countries have agreed to sign the Montreal protocol following the ozone conference in London held in March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the "London saving the ozone layer conference" 20 countries said that they would become parties to the Montreal protocol, and a further 14 said that they would give serious consideration to doing so.

Pollution Inspectorate

40. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the proposed re-organisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received some representations mainly from or on behalf of local authorities. They have been concerned primarily with the need to maintain existing lines of communication with inspectorate staff following implementation of the reorganisation proposals.

One of the objectives of the proposed reorganisation is to produce a more effective deployment of resources. The importance of effective links with local authorities is recognised and maintaining communication with them will be an essential element in developing the reorganisation proposals.

Young Persons (Housing)

41. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that advice is available to a young person without a parental home looking to be housed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: I can answer only for England. In the current year my Department will provide grants totalling nearly £700,000 to over 20 voluntary housing advice agencies. Many of these provide assistance to young people without a parental home.

European Council of Environment Ministers

42. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the business of the forthcoming meeting of the European Council of Environment Ministers, which is to be held on 8 June.

69. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the business of the forthcoming meeting of the European Council of Environment Ministers, which is to be held on 8 June.

84. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the business of the forthcoming meeting of the European Council of Environment Ministers, which is to be held on 8 June.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for the Spanish presidency to decide on the agenda for meetings of the European Council of Ministers. It has not yet confirmed an agenda for the European Council meeting of Environment Ministers on 8 June.

Local Authority Housing

43. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses and how many flats are owned by local authorities; and what new proposals he has to extend the opportunity for them to become owner-occupied.

Mr. Trippier: In April 1988 local authorities in England owned some 4·5 million dwellings, about a third of them flats or maisonettes. Following the new discount scale for flats introduced in January 1987 sales of flats increased from 9 per cent. to 17·6 per cent. as a proportion of all sales. Tenants of both houses and flats have recently been helped to buy their homes by an increase in the maximum discount to £50,000 and by a new power to have rent deducted from the purchase price if the landlord delays the sale.

Lambeth (Council Housing)

46. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses owned by Lambeth council are currently empty.

Mr. Trippier: At 1 April 1988, the latest date for which figures are currently available there were 1,156 empty properties owned by the London borough of Lambeth. There are no separate figures for houses alone.

50. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants in Lambeth were waiting for their applications to buy their homes to be processed at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: On 30 April 1989, according to figures supplied by Lambeth, 2,086 applicants were waiting for the council to take the next step in processing the sale of their homes, either by confirming the tenant's right-to-buy or providing a valuation.

Water Bill

48. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what aspects will be covered in further leaflets on the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: Possible subjects for future leaflets on the Water Bill are land, access and recreation; and bathing waters.

63. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to amend the Water Bill so that privatisation of the industry is based on the statutory water companies model.

Mr. Howard: No. The 1986 White Paper "Privatisation of Water Industry in England and Wales" explained that we had rejected the statutory company model because it was an outdated method of operating a business. The controls on dividend and reserves do not give any incentive to achieve greater efficiency. We firmly believe that the plc company model with controls on prices and standards of service will provide a better and more efficient service, and will enable the privatised companies to develop in ways that will benefit their customers and investors alike.

Control of Pollution Act 1974

49. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action was taken to implement part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 (a) between its enactment and May 1979 and (b) since May 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The main provisions of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 were implemented between July 1984 and October 1986. These provided for more effective protection of inland surface and underground waters, the extension of controls to cover all coastal and estuarial waters and public involvement, for the first time, in the water pollution control system.

These provisions are to be re-enacted, and where appropriate, strengthened, in the Water Bill.

Prior to May 1979, only five relatively minor sections of part II were brought into force.

Housing (Ballots)

51. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce a timetable for ballots in proposed housing action trust areas.

Mr. Trippier: Ballots will not take place until we are satisfied that tenants have had time to consider fully the consultants' reports on the areas and to put forward their own ideas for improving their estates.

Sports Facilities (Urban Areas)

53. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department is monitoring the number of outdoor recreational sports facilities in the urban areas of England.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. However, the regional offices of the Sports Council maintain records on the major sports facilities within their regions and the Sports Council is in the process of building up a sports facilities database for England.

Rent Arrears (Lambeth)

54. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of council rent arrears in Lambeth at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: A table showing the rent arrears outstanding to all English local authorities as at 1 April 1988 is in the Library.

Home Ownership

55. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage home ownership has increased since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Estimates of numbers and proportions of dwellings in owner occupation in England in December 1979 and December 1988 appear in Table 2·22 of "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 2", volume 36, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Developments (Restrictive Covenants)

56. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on covenants to restrict development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend receives three or four applications each year under schedule 24 to the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to discharge or modify agreements made under section 34 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1932 which restrict the planning, development or use of land; some of these applications are opposed.

Sewage Treatment Works

57. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of sewage treatment works failed their discharge consents (a) in May 1979 and (b) at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: Information on sewage treatment works failing their consents was not collected by the Government in May 1979. Numbers of sewage treatment works in each water authority area in England and Wales that have numerical discharge consent conditions, numbers tested and non-compliance in 1986 and 1987, together with the figures returned by authorities for 1988 are as follows.

Water authority	Number			Number tested			Works in breach of consent Number			Percentage of works tested

Water Quality (Barnsley)

58. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has recently received regarding the quality of water supplies in the Barnsley area.

Mr. Howard: None.

Structure Plans (White Paper)

60. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Oxfordshire concerning the White Paper on structure plans.

Mr. Howard: Representations have been received from Oxfordshire county council and South Oxfordshire district council, suggesting some minor modifications to our proposals for the future development plans. These comments will be considered, along with those received from other organisations and authorities, as draft legislation is prepared to implement the White Paper proposals.

Rating Reform

61. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of the relative effect of (a) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax and (b) the community charge on an average ward sister.

Mr. Gummer: Last year ward sister's earning £13,000 and living in properties valued at £40,000 would have paid on average about £450 in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax compared to £246 with the community charge.

78. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had any representations to introduce a local income tax instead of the rating system and the community charge; and what would be the amount payable in local income tax by a man on average earnings.

Mr. Gummer: Not surprisingly I have received hardly any representations in favour of a local income tax. Based on 1988-89 figures for local authority spending, the average local income tax rate needed in England would have been 6·4p in the pound. If the tax were at that level in a particular local authority area, the payment for a person on male average earnings, with only the single person's tax allowance, would have been about £650.

Football Identity Card Scheme

62. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with Lord Justice Taylor regarding the introduction of his Bill on football club membership cards.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Atmospheric Lead

64. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of lead in the atmosphere is caused by lead in petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 1 January 1986 the permitted lead content of petrol was reduced from 0·4g per litre to 0·15g per litre. The Warren Spring laboratory has been monitoring the effects of the reduction on the concentration of lead in the atmosphere for the Department. Its estimate, based on this work, is that currently 75 per cent. of the lead in the air is derived from lead in petrol.

Sewage Works Discharge Consents

65. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the number of applications by water authorities for the relaxation of sewage works discharge consents.

Mr. Howard: On 7 December at column 199, I announced a capital programme costing around £1 billion to bring sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents by March 1992. Water authorities may apply for time-limited discharge consents for these works to regularise current performance while improvements take place. Some 785 such applications have been received from English water authorities. A list of those sewage works for which these applications have been made has been placed in the Library of the House.

Plastic Packaging

66. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to discourage the use of non-recyclable plastic packaging.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for industry to develop products that meeet the requirements of consumers, bearing in mind energy use, the need to protect goods and prevent wastage.

Housing Action Trust, Sunderland

67. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his most recent proposals concerning the designation of a housing action trust in Sunderland.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend announced on 16 March that detailed consultation would be carried out with tenants on the proposal to designate a housing action trust in Sunderland. This consultation process is under way.

Sports Facilities (Privatisation)

68. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the effect of the privatisation of the management of sports facilities upon the public use of swimming baths and playing fields.

Mr. Moynihan: A number of local authorities have put the management of their leisure facilities out to competition. My Department does not have complete information on the impact of those decisions. However, to take one example, after eight months of private sector management at three leisure centres owned by Westminster city council, public use has increased on average by over 60 per cent.

Local Authority Housing Programme

70. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received about the proposed new arrangements for capital receipts and the impact these will have on local authority housing programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Over 450 responses were received to my Department's consultation paper "Capital Expenditure and Finance" and a number of further representations have been received following the introduction of the Local Government and Housing Bill. More than half of these have commented on the proposed arrangements for capital receipts in the new capital finance system. Those arrangements will ensure prudential provision for debt redemption when local authority assets are disposed of. They will also allow the Government to target resources efficiently on need, including the need for local authority housing programmes.

Tin Cans (Recycling)

71. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of tin cans are currently recycled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that about 8 per cent. of the United Kingdom's consumption of tinplated steel cans was recycled in 1988.

Air Pollution

72. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits and inspections were carried out by the air pollution inspectors during the year 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the year 1988-89, the air pollution inspectors made 8,542 visits and inspections.

Airport, Tinsley Park

76. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will change his decision not to call in for his determination the proposal for a STOL airport at Tinsley park, Sheffield.

Mr. Chope: No. The matter was given full and careful consideration before the Secretary of State reached his decision.

Countryside (Access)

79. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with organisations concerned about rights of access to the countryside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 10 January I met a delegation from the Ramblers Association at which a range of topics relating to access to the countryside were discussed. I also met representatives of the Country Landowners Association on 21 February. Officials are in regular contact with all the organisations concerned with countryside access.

Sports (Drugs)

80. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage the eradication of drug taking by British sports competitors.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council funds the drug control and testing centre and conducts doping controls on behalf of and in co-operation with the governing bodies. In April 1988, following a report by Sebastian Coe and myself, the council introduced more rigorous procedures for doping control requiring random testing of competitors. This includes testing out of competition and collection of samples by independent sampling officers. I have proposed a European convention on the use of drugs in sport based on these procedures. This will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of European Sports Ministers in Reykjavik on 31 May and 1 June.

Sport (Private Investment)

82. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by the Sports Council in seeking to attract private sector investment into sport.

Mr. Moynihan: Private sector investment in sport in 1988-89 was £180 million. The Sports Council has played an important role in promoting the development of sponsorship.

Environmental Research

83. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what amount spending by his Department on environmental research has increased over the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: Spending by my Department on environmental research, covering research on environmental protection, water, planning and local government, has increased by £7·8 million from £21·8 million in 1984-85 to £29·6 million in 1988-89.

Recreational Land

85. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the amount of recreational land currently available for general community use; what was the comparable figure 10 years ago; and what steps he is taking to monitor the situation and ensure that the local authorities are able to provide for increased public participation in sport and recreation.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. However, some local studies have been undertaken and these suggest that in a number of areas gains in provision outweigh losses. The regional councils for sport and recreation work with the local authorities to increase participation in sport and to monitor the provision of recreational land. The regional councils seek to ensure that well used recreational land is retained for that purpose.

Marine Nature Reserves

86. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many areas have been identified by the Nature Conservancy Council as suitable for marine nature reserves; and when these reserves will be established.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council has identified seven sites that, in its opinion, have the potential to be designated as marine nature reserves. One of these sites, Lundy Island, was designated as a marine nature reserve in November 1986. In view of the further scientific work that will be required, and the extensive consultation procedures that form a necessary part of the designation process, it is not possible to forecast when the other reserves might be established.

8. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many marine nature reserves have been established since the enactment of the Countryside and Wildlife Act 1981.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One marine nature reserve at Lundy Island, has been designated under the 1981 Act so far. Proposals for a second MNR, at Skomer and the Marloes peninsula, are currently being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Planning and Development Policies

87. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to review planning and development control policies for the conurbations of England and Wales with a view to possible legislative adjustments.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

Denis Wild-type Houses

91. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce progress in encouraging building societies to advance mortgage loans on Denis Wild-type houses.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 April at column 584.

Schools (Sports)

92. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the changes in the numbers of schools participating in swimming and sports activities in recent years.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Allotments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by year for the last 10 years, how many hectares of (a) statutory and (b) temporary allotment sites have been granted outline planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: This information is not available.

Archaeological Investigations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of Government funding is set aside to fund archaeological investigations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for English Heritage to determine, within its overall resources of grant-in-aid from this Department and other sources of income. In its budget of £72,399 million for the current financial year it has allocated £7·2 million for archaeological investigations and recording.

Ancient Monuments

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites where ancient monuments have been covered by planning decisions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has no comprehensive information about the details of planning decisions made by local planning authorities. Information about planning decisions made by the Secretary of State, or decisions on scheduled monument consent applications, which have led to archaeological sites being covered by development could only be assembled at disproportionate cost.

Housing Action Trust, Lambeth

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much open space is included in the proposed HAT area in Lambeth; and how much public open space will remain if the consultants' proposals for the HAT in this area are implemented.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants' proposals are illustrative only and were developed simply to give an indication of what could be done to the estates and at what cost. Once established, a trust would be under a duty to consult those who live in its area about its proposals.

There is an estimated 5.0 Ha of open space in the proposed trust in Lambeth comprising approximately 2·7 Ha of public open space and approximately 2·3 Ha of semi-private open space. The illustrative proposals would increase the area of public open space to a total of approximately 3·3 Ha and provide additional private gardens.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to publish amended reports correcting the errors in the documents published by his department in March from the consultants appointed to study the proposed HATs in Southwark, Lambeth, Tower Hamlets and Sunderland.

Mr. Trippier: If the hon. Member knows of any errors in the consultant's reports about the proposed housing action trust areas in Southwark, Lambeth, Tower Hamlets and Sunderland published on 16 March, I should be grateful if he would write to me.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his answer to the hon. Member for Hammersmith of 23 March, Official Report, column 780, what further expenditure on consultancy or other work related to the proposed HAT areas he has agreed to; what are the briefs given to the consultants; which consultants have been appointed; and what is the estimated cost of the work they have been commissioned to do in (a) Lambeth, (b) Southwark, (c) Sandwell, (d) Leeds and (e) Sunderland.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has appointed consultants to discuss the proposals contained in the reports of the proposed trust areas published on 16 March. The objectives of the consultation exercise are:

(a) to explain to tenants, residents and other local interests the findings in the consultants' reports and the illustrative proposals put forward for improving the areas of the proposed trust estates.

(b) to consult tenants, residents and other local interests to establish their own views, ideas and suggestions about what could be done to improve their estates, including their reactions to the proposals contained in the reports.

(c) to produce reports in the form of commentaries on the key proposals contained in the original reports indicating tenant priorities; their attitudes towards the proposals, including their own suggestions for improvement; and the effect they would have on the prospects for achieving the primary objects of a Trust as set out in section 63 of the Housing Act 1988.

The consultants are led by Peat Marwick McLintock in Sunderland, by PIC Ltd. in Lambeth and Southwark and by PIEDA in Leeds. In Sandwell, the further study of the Cape Hill area by a consortium led by Price Waterhouse announced by my right hon. Friend in his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 16 March at column 322 is still under way. The costs of the contracts will remain commercially confidential until they have been completed.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to amend section 55 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to provide that specified internal fixtures, including mirrors, be protected by the listing of a building.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under section 54(9) of the Act any object or structure fixed to a listed building either internally or externally is protected by the listed building controls in section 55, in so far as its removal, alteration or extension would affect the character of the building as one of special architectural or historic interest. We have no plans to extend the controls to cover moveable objects.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his reply of 13 April, Official Report, column 667, he will ask working group I of the United Nations environmental programme/world meteorological organisation inter-governmental panel on climate changes to make an interim report on the climatological consequences of felling and burning of rain forest in the Brazilian state of Para and eastern Amazonia in the first four months of 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Government do not seek to interfere with the group's scientific work plan and reporting schedule agreed internationally by the inter-governmental panel on climate change. However, I understand that the hon. Member's particular concern about deforestation in eastern Amazonia is being addressed by the working group, which will report to the world climate conference in the autumn of 1990.

Domestic Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 18 May to the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), Official Report, columns 262-64, he will publish a table showing in descending order the average domestic rate bill payable in each London borough in 1983-84 and 1989-90.

Planning

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of planning appeal decisions for each of the last five years; and on which occasions he over-ruled the advice of his inspectors.

Mr. Howard: In the last five years a total of 81,992 planning appeals have been decided—78,669 by inspectors and 3,323 by the Secretary of State. In only 114 were the inspectors' recommendations not accepted.

Archaeology Investigations

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on archaeology and development.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to developers to accommodate archaeological investigations in development briefs.

Mrs. Bottomley: Recent archaeological discoveries in London have highlighted the growing interest in our archaeological heritage.

Very considerable progress has been made in recent years. In 1986 a code of practice was agreed between archaeologists and developers which led last year to developers voluntarily contributing some £14m towards archaeological investigations.

The Government and English Heritage for their part must ensure that all those involved—local authoritities, local people, developers, businesses—have adequate information on the existing sources of expertise and on the relevant statutory and planning framework. We are proposing to issue new guidance this summer which will set out, amongst other things, guidelines on how archaeology should be handled in development plans and in development control decisions, the scope for prior archaeological evaluation before development, and the appropriate use of planning conditions for archaeological excavations.

Chicken Farm, Stokeham, Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approve the article 4 direction served on him in relation to the proposed erection of buildings at the chicken farm, Start Point, Stokeham, South Devon.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment approved the article 4 direction in relation to land at Hambrook, Stokeham on 24 May and has informed South Hams district council.

Drinking Water (House of Commons)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the date and details of the most recent analysis of drinking water supplied in the House of Commons, and the European Community maximum admissible concentration levels for sulphate, fluoride, potassium, sodium, magnesium, iron, manganese, nickel, conductivity and turbidity.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Drinking water in the Palace of Westminster is taken direct from the Thames water authority's main supply. Sampling is therefore undertaken only when a specific need arises. The most recent testing on 14 March 1989 followed a complaint about an unpleasant taste in the water. The laboratory of the Government chemist's tests confirmed that the samples were chemically and bacteriologically suitable for drinking.

The concentration levels requested from the samples were as follows:

Substance/condition	Source of sample		EEC
	Members' cafeteria sink	Members' cafeteria drinking water machine	Maximum admissible concentration
Sulphate as SO_4 (mg/e)	66	64	250
Fluoride (ug/l)	200	180	1,500

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentially, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 22 May 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 15 May. The September 1984 television advertising referred to, formed part of an overall information campaign to ensure council tenants in England and Wales knew about extensions of their rights under the Housing Act 1980, introduced by the Housing and Building Control Act 1984. The television campaign in the first two weeks of April this year was aimed at motivating motorists to adjust their cars in order to be able to use unleaded petrol.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Education

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the provision of special education in Cheshire.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has seen the petition which my hon. Friend submitted to him earlier this month concerning special education provision in Cheshire and in particular the LEA's arrangements for individual tuition.

The Department is currently making inquiries of the Cheshire LEA and I shall send a full reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Teachers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of mathematics and science teachers in (a) Surrey and (b) England are not trained in the subjects they teach.

Mr. Butcher: Estimates of the numbers of teachers of mathematics and science without a qualification in these subjects, and of the amount of tuition they provide, can be derived from the 1988 secondary school staffing survey of maintained schools in England. The figures are as follows:

	Percentage of teachers teaching the subject who do not have a post A-level qualification in it	Percentage of all tuition in the subject provided by teachers without a post A-level qualification in it
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Mathematics	27	13
Biology	18	9
Chemistry	20	10
Physics	31	19
General science[1]	17 (71)	11 (67)
Other sciences[1]	23 (69)	16 (55)

[1] Figures exclude teachers (and tuition by teachers) with a post A-level qualification specifically in biology, chemistry or physics as well as those with general or other science qualifications. The bracketed figures show the result if this exclusion is not made.

No information is available in respect of Surrey—the survey sample is too small to permit reliable estimates for individual education authorities.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many city technology colleges are presently operating within the United Kingdom; and which are clearly scheduled to open in September 1989 and September 1990.

Mr. Butcher: Kingshurst CTC opened in September 1988, Nottingham and Teesside will open this September, and Dartford, Bradford, Gateshead and the London school for performing arts and technology will open in September 1990.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much capital money has been identified for development of city technology colleges between their inception and the year 2000.

Mr. Butcher: A total of £13·3 million has been incurred on city technology college capital expenditure between the inception of the programme and the end of the 1988-89 financial year.

Planned public expenditure to 1991-92, as published in Cmnd. 612, is £106·6 million. The balance of expenditure between capital and recurrent costs will depend on a number of factors, including the nature and condition of premises acquired and the speed at which sponsors' plans are implemented.

Plans for future years have yet to be considered.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much capital money has been provided by the Government to those city technology colleges in existence or scheduled to open shortly.

Mr. Butcher: Capital grants made to city technology colleges open or scheduled to open are as follows:

	£ million
Kingshurst	3·53
Nottingham	5·94
Teesside	3·34
Gateshead	0·30
Bradford	0·63
Dartford	0·24

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how the running costs of city technology colleges will be met; and what the anticipated source or sources of the revenue funding will be;

(2) whether the running costs of a city technology college will be broadly comparable with similar costs associated with maintained schools.

Mr. Butcher: All normal running costs will be met through our recurrent grant to city technology colleges. The basis of this grant will be expenditure by local education authorities on maintained schools in similar areas. It will be open to city technology colleges, as it is to all schools, to raise additional funds from other sources.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the travel expenses of children who live over 3 miles away from a city technology college will be met; and how the costs of uniform grants and other similar benefits will be met.

Mr. Butcher: Our recurrent grant to city technology colleges will be comparable to expenditure by local education authorities on schools in similar areas, including expenditure on home to school transport and on pupil support generally. It will be for the city technology college to decide how to meet these costs in specific cases.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what firms or other commercial interests have so far agreed to sponsor an entire city technology college and what are the names of these firms or other commercial interests.

Mr. Butcher: None has been asked to do so. The capital costs of all CTCs will be shared between the Government and private sector sponsors and thereafter normal running costs will be met by annual grant from my right hon. Friend. Sponsors have already pledged £36 million towards the establishment of CTCs across the country—an unprecedented response to an education initiative.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how long the period of consultations with parents and governors prior to the decision by the governing body to submit an application to become a city technology college was at (a) Sylvan high school, (b) Haberdashers Aske's schools, Hatcham and (c) Riverside school.

Mr. Butcher: Consultations on the future of the Sylvan high school, which is a county school, were undertaken by Croydon education authority; and the authority subsequently published proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 to cease to maintain the school, so that a CTC might be established in its place. In the case of Riverside, also a county school, consultations were held on its future, but Bexley education authority subsequently decided against publishing section 12 proposals. The period for consultation was approximately three months and two months respectively. Our expectations on what public consultations should take place in these circumstances were set out in circular 3/87.

The Haberdashers' Aske's are voluntary schools and I understand that the governors are considering seeking our leave to give notice of their discontinuation under the provisions of section 14 of the Education Act 1944. That section carries no requirement for public consultations to take place. Nevertheless, we have made clear in my right hon. Friend's statements on 28 July 1988 and 23 January this year that in considering any application for leave under section 14, where the intention is to establish a CTC, we expect that there shall have been prior public consultations.

School Trips

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received on the subject of charges for school trips.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received 540 letters on the subject of charges for school trips since the issue of the Department's draft circular of guidance in October 1988.

School Discipline

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps he has taken to establish a working group to develop serious incidents reporting systems in response to recommendation 132·1 of the Elton report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools;

(2) what steps he intends to take to clarify the legal basis of a teacher's authority over pupils in response to paragraph 73 of the Elton report on discipline in schools.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend announced on 13 March immediate Government action to follow up recommendations in the report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools. He is considering the recommendation on the legal basis of a teacher's authority and the recommendation, which was also directed to local education authorities, that a working group on serious incidents reporting systems be established.

Student Grants

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average unit of funding for a university student assumed to be in the 1988-89 University Grants Committee settlement; by what percentage this assumed average unit was increased in real terms in the 1989-90 UFC settlement; and what assumptions were made for inflation in this increase.

Mr. Jackson: The public funding of universities is not determined on the basis of unit costs. The forecast level of inflation at the time of last year's Autumn Statement was five per cent. Including the additional funding for 1989 pay settlements, overall funding will increase by eight per cent. between 1988-89 and 1989-90. Student numbers are expected to increase by three per cent.

Under-Secretary of State (Engagements)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the official engagements undertaken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for higher education since the beginning of May.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Since the beginning of May, I have had the following official engagements to date:

2 May
Meeting: delegation from China; Oral Parliamentary Questions; address: the Council for Industry and Higher Education; address for design awards dinner.

3 May
Meeting: Professor Ihsan Dogramaci, Chairman of Turkish Higher Education Council; dinner and address: Presidents of Research Councils of Europe, Japan and the USA.

5 May
Address: Careers Research and Advisory Centre Conference.

8 May
Visit: Liverpool University.

9 May
Address: The Centre for Policy Studies; meeting: Mr. Bill Stubbs of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

10 May
Lunch: Geoffery Melling of the Further Education Staff College.

11 May
Interview: Time Magazine; address for the Opening of the Medical Research Council Radiobiology Unit; address: Industry/Education Seminar (Oxfordshire County Council); meeting: Professor Stuart of the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

13 May
Telephone call to Bertel Haarder, Danish Education Minister.

15 May
Visit: Rycotewood College; dinner and address for Sir Ralph Dahrendorf and senior academics at St. Anthony's College, Oxford.

16 May
Address: The General Synod Further and Higher Education Committee; dinner and address for the Reform Club Political Committee; telephone call to Willem Deetman, Dutch Education Minister.

17 May
Meeting: Lord Chilver and Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer of the Universities Funding Council.

18 May
Address: conference for Continuing Professional Development; meeting: the Association of Metropolitan Authorities; meeting: The Campaign for Public Sector History; telephone call to Juergen Muellemann, German Education Minister.

19 May
Lunch and address for Professor Brewer and senior academics at Emmanuel College, Cambridge; 25th anniversary dinner at Darwin College, Cambridge.

20 May
Telephone call to Javier Solana Madariaga, Spanish Education Minister.

23 May
Address for the National Information Services Conference.

24 May
Address: the Building Industry Council Conference; meeting: the Institute of Chartered Accountants; meeting: Dominique Perben, Depute (MP) and Mayor of Chalon-sur Saone; address: European Agricultural Research Initiative (EURAGRI) Conference; meeting: Richard Hodges, Director of the British School in Rome.

25 May
Meeting: Sue Whittle, President of the Mature Students Union; meeting: Professor Sloane, Aberdeen University; hosting: Reception for the British/French Colloquium on Educational Exchange.

26 May
Visit to the Institut Laue-Langevin and the European Synchrotron Radiation Facility (ESRF) in Grenoble.

In addition, I hold daily meetings with officials of the Department and maintain informal contact with a variety of people from the world of education and science.

Cash Limits

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any changes to the cash limits for his Department's votes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limits for the following votes will be revised as follows:

Vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised Cash limit £
Class XII Vote 1	493,133,000	+1,003,000	494,136,000
Class XII Vote 2	3,101,271,000	+22,490,000	3,123,761,000
Class XII Vote 5	824,368,000	−8,493,000	815,875,000

Additional provision is sought as follows:

(a) £25 million to make annual maintenance grants for expenditure on staff salaries and other running costs for schools which I have approved as grant maintained from September 1989 and from January 1990. This increase will be fully offset by recoupment, under section 81 of the Education Reform Act 1988, from the local authorities formerly maintaining the schools.

(b) £1,003,000 for the professional, industrial and commercial updating programme to enable the selective funding of PICKUP activities in local authority colleges to proceed.

(c) £23,493,000 towards the increased cost to universities, the Open university, the Royal college of art and the Cranfield institute of technology of employing non-clinical academic staff.

Provision for grant-in-aid to the Natural Environment Research Council is reduced by £8,493,000 because expenditure on the construction of a new research vessel for the British Antarctic Survey has been deferred to 1990-91.

The net increase of £15,000,000 will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Boards of Governors

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those people appointed by him to be independent members of the boards of governors of higher education corporations.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today published in the Official Report a list of the people I appointed as independent members of the boards of governors of the higher education corporations.

I was impressed by the high calibre of many of the candidates who were willing to put themselves forward for appointment as governors. It is heartening to see that so many able people from a wide variety of fields want to be associated with these higher education institutions. Governors have been drawn from across the spectrum of industry and commerce, from major companies to individual entrepreneurs and from all the professions. This will help to give the new sector the best possible start.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Growth Rates

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing for each of the past 15 years United Kingdom growth rates, the growth rate of each of the United Kingdom's partners in the European Commission, and world growth rates, respectively.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for United Kingdom GDP can be found in the United Kingdom National Accounts Blue Book and in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. For EC countries growth rates for the years 1974 to 1987 can be found in the latest OECD Economic Outlook. Provisional figures for 1988 are given in OECD Main Economic Indicators, published monthly. Figures for world growth are given in the International Financial Statistics Yearbook and in the latest World Economic Outlook, both published by the IMF. All these publications can be obtained from the Library of the House.

EC Goods (Fast Lane Clearance)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made on the introduction of a fast lane clearance system for European Economic Community goods.

Mr. Lilley: Customs and Excise is developing two fast lane schemes as interim measures to speed up the clearance of freight in the period leading to completion of the single market. They depend on the use of computer systems to facilitate rapid clearance and to simplify requirements for most kinds of goods imported from the Community.

The first scheme is planned to start nationally on 1 August 1989, from which date the Customs computer will be able to grant immediate clearance to the majority of Community goods upon arrival. The necessary paper documentation will be processed after clearance of the goods. The fast lane facility will not, however, remove the need for essential preventive checks in the case of drugs and other prohibited or restricted goods.

The second scheme will also allow immediate clearance for the same kinds of goods but the detailed information will be provided by importers later in the form of schedules transmitted to Customs electronically. This system will make use of recent developments in technology and will be used this winter on a trial basis before becoming generally available next year.

In consultation with the trading community Customs and Excise is also reviewing export procedures to see whether there is further scope for simplification in order to speed exports to other member states in the Community.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of premium savings bond sales in January were in denominations of less than £100.

Mr. Lilley: The number of premium bonds sold in January 1989 in denominations of less than £100 was 172,000. These bonds accounted for only about 12 per cent. of the total value.

Government Actuary

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to change the 1989-90 cash limit and running costs limit for the Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for class XIX, vote 4 will be increased by £25,000 from £548,000 to £573,000, and the running costs limit by £178,000 from £2,510,000 to £2,688,000, to provide for recently implemented pay increases for actuarial staff, and the completion of the conversion of a major pension programme to in-house microcomputers. The increase in the cash limit will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Close Investment-Holding Companies

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the provisions in the Finance Bill concerning close investment-holding companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have received a number of representations.

The purpose of the provisions concerning close investment-holding companies is to enable the highly complex and lengthy legislation about close company apportionment to be abolished while preventing the avoidance of tax on investment income and capital gains by an individual placing personal investments in a closely controlled investment company. There is general agreement on these objectives.

The approach of the provisions in the Finance Bill is to tax CICs like individuals, so far as possible. However, although there have been some misunderstandings of the effect of the provisions, we are persuaded that this approach has its own difficulties and could place some close companies at a competitive disadvantage in comparison with non-close competitors. This was not the intention. We therefore propose to bring forward amendments.

We have no doubt that the right approach remains to abolish apportionment and replace it by an appropriate tax charge on the company. We now propose that CICs will continue to be taxed like other companies, with the normal reliefs for interest and expenses. But, whatever the level of their profits, they will no longer receive the benefit of the small companies rate and so will be taxed at 35 per cent. This approach will result in rules that are simpler than both the old apportionment provisions and the provisions in the Bill. And it will protect the Exchequer since under existing law there is a further tax charge if an investor withdraws accumulated profits from a company or sells his or her shares.

We also propose to amend the definition of a CIC. No trading company (including a dealing company) will be a CIC. The existing apportionment provisions recognise that property investment companies may need to retain income for the purposes of the business and in practice these companies are little affected by apportionment—so these too will not be CICs. These changes will give a more simpler regime for taxing CICs, while guarding against tax avoidance.

An Inland Revenue press release is being issued today giving further details of the proposals. The necessary amendments for the Committee stage of the Finance Bill will be put down as soon as possible.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the financial provision will be in 1989-90 for the enlarged Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Lawson: A new Estimate (class XIX, vote 18) will be presented to Parliament, in the summer Supplementary Estimate round, to provide for expenditure by the new department from 31 July 1989. The provision sought will be offset by corresponding reductions shown in Revised Estimates for the Cabinet Office (class XX, vote 2), of £2,764,000, the Department of Trade and Industry (class V, vote 3), of £8,533,000, and the Department of Employment (class VII, vote 2), of £2,430,000 (which is part of the overall reduction on that vote), which will be presented to Parliament on the same day. It will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The cash limit for the new Central Statistical Office vote is £13,727,000 and the running costs limit is £10,804,000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Community

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which presidencies the enlargements of the European Community were legally concluded.

Mrs. Chalker: The treaty of accession of the United Kingdom, Denmark and Ireland was signed in January 1972 during the Luxembourg presidency, and entered into force on 1 January 1973. The treaty of accession of Greece was signed in May 1979 during the French presidency, and entered into force on 1 January 1981. The treaty of accession of Spain and Portugal was signed in June 1985 during the Italian presidency and entered into force on 1 January 1986.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which member states in their capacity as president have represented the European Community at ministerial level meetings in the general agreement on tariffs and trade, Uruguay round.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom spoke as the President of the Council at the meeting in Punta del Este in 1986, Greece at the meeting in Montreal in 1988. The European Commission negotiated on behalf of the Community and its member states.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many shipments and what weight of ivory have been seized by the Hong Kong authorities to date in the current year; and how many shipments and what weight of ivory have been imported from CITES approved sources in the same period.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong Government have seized 15 consignments of illegal ivory so far this year, weighing a total of 0·5 tonnes. In the same period, 249 shipments of ivory, total weight 55·5 tonnes, have been imported from CITES approved sources.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to the establishment of a Pan-African animal task force to monitor and protect endangered species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are working to protect endangered species by strengthening the rules of organisations in this field. On 23 May we announced our support for a change in the rules of the convention on international trade in endangered species which would have the effect of banning trade in new ivory. We have not heard so far of a proposal for a Pan-African animal task force, but we are willing to consider new ideas.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has regarding the involvement of Renamo forces in the poaching of elephants in Mozambique; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has regarding the involvement of UNITA forces in the poaching of elephants in Angola; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representation he has made to the South African Government regarding their acceptance of ivory from UNITA forces in Angola in exchange for military and other assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There is extensive poaching of elephants for their ivory in Angola and Mozambique, as in other parts of Africa. We have no conclusive proof of the involvement of UNITA or Renamo in poaching. We utterly condemn poaching, whoever perpetrates it.

The United Kingdom will be calling for concerted European support for a total ban of trade in new ivory at the next Council meeting of Environment Ministers on 8 June in Luxembourg.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to give consideration to applications from non-governmental organisations with a central interest in nuclear proliferation, for funds to support their attendance at the 1990 fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The draft rules of procedure for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference adopted at the 1st preparatory committee (held in New York from 1-5 May) will allow representatives of non-governmental organisations to attend plenary sessions and main committees of the review conference, and to receive the documents of the conference. However, it is not our policy to subsidise their attendance.

Disarmament Initiatives

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what unilateral disarmament initiatives in nuclear, conventional, or chemical weapons, and in troop deployments have been made by the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Treaty Organisation since May 1979; and what response the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation has made to these initiatives.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Soviet Union and its Warsaw pact allies have, since 7 December 1988, announced unilateral conventional force reductions which, if implemented, would reduce their conventional superiority over NATO in tanks and artillery from 3:1 to 2·4:1 and in aircraft from 2·1:1 to 1·8:1. Details are set out on page 226 of the first report of 1989 of the Foreign Affairs Committee on Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. These reductions do not call for any unilateral NATO response: a sizeable conventional imbalance would remain after their implementation. But NATO has made proposals at the conventional arms control talks in Vienna for more far-reaching reductions leading to an outcome of parity between the two sides in key items of equipment.

The Soviet Union has stated that its conventional reductions in Europe will involve the withdrawal of 24 out of its 1,608 short-range nuclear-capable missile launchers. On 11 May it also announced the withdrawal from the countries of Eastern Europe to the Soviet Union (but not the elimination) of 500 Soviet theatre nuclear warheads. NATO has 88 short-range nuclear missile launchers. It has reduced its stockpile of nuclear warheads in Europe from 7,000 in 1979 to 4,600 now. The Soviet Union announced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing on 29 July 1985. This ended on 26 February 1987, when a Soviet nuclear device was exploded.

The Soviet Union has claimed that it ceased chemical weapons production in 1987 but we doubt this. The Soviet Union has stated that it intends to begin destruction of its existing chemical weapon stocks in 1989, but has yet to give details of the quantities and time scale.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of Council of Ministers meetings since 1979, and indicate at which the Scottish Office was present in a Civil Service capacity in support of a United Kingdom Minister.

Mrs. Chalker: There were 652 meetings of the Council of Ministers from 1980 until the end of 1988.

The United Kingdom delegation to all meetings of the Council of Ministers represents the Government of the United Kingdom as a whole.

ENERGY

Generating Turbines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many privately operated electricity generating turbines are installed on rivers in England and Wales; if he will list them by location; and which Government Department has responsibility for permitting and overseeing their operations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of privately operated electricity generating turbines installed on rivers in England and Wales is not known to the Government.

The National Association of Water Power Users has a membership of some 250. The association states that about half its members operate power generating turbines.

The appropriate local water authority has responsibility for permitting and overseeing the operation of water turbine users. To remain within the existing law, each user has to obtain a water abstraction licence from the relevant local water authority.

My Department has commissioned a study by Salford university of all potentially feasible and operating small-scale hydro energy sites in the United Kingdom. The report of this study is expected to be published shortly.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal was imported into the United Kingdom for the latest year for which he has figures; what strategic planning he has forecast for the next five years by year; and if he will make a statement on what reviews have been carried out or are planned with respect to the importation of coal and closure of deep-mined pits in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In 1988, coal imports into the United Kingdom were 11·993 million tonnes[1], 7·390 million tonnes of which was coking coal. The Government do not make forecasts of coal imports. Decisions on the future of individual deep-mine pits are a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

[1] Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. This is a provisional rounded figure, which may be subject to marginal adjustments, but is expected to be confirmed later this year.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total cash provision to date in electricity industry accounts for the costs of decommissioning nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The 1987-88 Central Electricity Generating Board accounts include provisions of £568 million for the decommissioning costs of the board's nuclear power stations.

Electricity Connections

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has obtained any further information from the Electricity Council regarding the number of households not connected to the electricity grid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the industry and I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to initiate negotiations with the European Commission, Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency towards the deletion of article 14 of the tripartite safeguards agreement of August 1978 permitting the withdrawal of nuclear materials from safeguards for reasons of national security.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table in the Official Report giving the amounts of carbon dioxide released in the production of (a) coal for fossil fuel fired power plants and (b) nuclear fuel for nuclear power plants in the present United Kingdom generating plant stock.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 February 1989, at column 470.

Civil Nuclear Fuel Cycle

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out those areas of information in regard to the civil nuclear fuel cycle, from uranium import, processing, fuel manufacture, fuel load, reactor operation, fuel unload, spent fuel store at reactor, spent fuel transport to Sellafield, and reprocessing and store of plutonium, uranium and radioactive waste products by British Nuclear Fuels plc about which it is his policy for reasons of commercial confidentiality or national security not to publish full details in the Official Report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information supplied on all these matters has to be restricted to some degree for reasons of commercial confidentiality or national security.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit or running costs limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 3 will be increased by £2,290,000 from £35,599,000 to £37,889,000. This extra provision is sought to meet an increase of £2,190,000 in the cost of the Piper Alpha technical investigation and public inquiry. It will also include £100,000 to cover the cost of setting up the Office of Electricity Regulation prior to the appointment of the Director General of Electricity Supply as head of the Office of Electricity Regulation, expected to take effect from 1 September 1989. This latter amount will increase the Department of Energy's running costs limit from £38,022,000 to £38,122,000. It will be offset by a corresponding decrease from £30,000,000 to £29,900,000 in the cash limit for class VI, vote 6, where this provision was originally included.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 7, which is a new vote providing for expenditure by the Office of Electricity Regulation, will be £7,796,000, of which £6,320,000 will be the running costs limit.

Expenditure on vote 7 and the appointment of the Director General of Electricity Supply are both subject to the passage of the Electricity Bill currently before Parliament.

These increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Coroners' Officers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any studies have been undertaken into coroners employing their own officers;

(2) why coroners' officers have to be employed by a police force.

Mr. Hurd: Home Office circular 93 of 1985 drew attention of county councils to a review of the work and methods of coroners' officers carried out by the Home Office organisation and methods branch and recommended that in consultation with coroners and chief officers of police they should review their own arrangements for the provision of coroners' officers. A copy of the circular and of the review are in the Library. The review had studied inter alia areas where, at that time, civilianisation had taken place. There is no requirement that civilian coroners' officers must be employed by a police authority, although that is the option we prefer.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 6 March, Official Report, column 383, how information technologies involving the provision of information to the public is being used to combat crime; if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in this field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The police service applies information technology extensively in the fight against crime. Many of these applications involve providing information to the public. For example, as part of the process of detecting crime, information technology is used to assist the public to identify suspects and to build up a photographic image of a suspect from witnesses' descriptions.

More generally, work is well advanced in the implementation of a new police national computer system, incorporating the latest software and hardware technology, which will come into operation by the end of 1990. This is the first step in a programme of development of police national information services which the Department is drawing up in collaboration with the Association of Chief Police Officers and which is aimed at applying information technology to police operational needs.

Firearms

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in discussions on the draft directive on the mutual recognition of firearms certificates; whether the proposals fall to be considered by majority vote or by unanimity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No discussions have been held by the European Commission since last June on its proposal for a Council directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons. The Commission has based this proposal on article 100A, which would enable its adoption by majority voting. The United Kingdom has registered the view that the directive should be founded, like other frontier measures, on article 235, which requires unanimity. We have entered a formal reserve about the legal basis and will continue to press the Commission to accept our view.

We understand that the Commission intends to issue shortly a revised version of the draft directive. When this has been received we will consider it carefully.

Malcolm Booth (Car Keys)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communications it has received from Malcolm Booth, alias Ian Ross, who originally traded as M. B. Locksmiths and is now trading as Westway Locksmiths, about the keys he claims will open 95 per cent. of British and foreign cars; what discussions his Department has had with Tameside trading standards departments about these keys; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that Mr. Booth has recently been committed for trial on a number of charges. In the circumstances, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates making a decision on the applications for transfer to a gaol in Northern Ireland from prisoners (a) 851715, John McComb, (b) 463799, Ronald McCartney, (c) 119034, Paul Holmes and (d) 3369204, Thomas Quigley.

Mr. Hurd: I am aware of no recent applications for transfer from Mr. McComb or Mr. Quigley. The applications by the other two inmates named will be answered as soon as possible.

Passports

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average length of time taken to issue a full passport from the time of application at each of the main issuing offices; and what was the average time taken in 1979, 1983 and in the last five years.

Mr. Renton: Passport applications are processed according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases. As a result, processing times in a given period vary considerably, and averages are not recorded.

The current maximum processing times for straightforward non-urgent postal applications at the six United Kingdom passport offices are shown in the table, together with those of the corresponding periods of the last four years. I regret that information for earlier years is not available.

Passport office	Time between receipt of application and issue of passport
	21 May 1989	22 May 1988	22 May 1987	23 April 1986	24 May1985
London	25	55	62	24	10
Liverpool	68	15	22	15	6
Peterborough	38	32	19	14	11·5
Newport	45	20	44	25	12
Glasgow	50	33	33	30	10
Belfast	4	4	7	5	4

Most applications are processed well within these maximum periods.

A sharp increase in demand early this year has led to a general increase in processing times. Staff at Glasgow and Liverpool are having to adapt to a new computerised system of passport issuing, and accommodation changes at other offices have also affected output. Additional staff have been employed to help deal with the backlog, and a system of free two-year extensions to the life of expired passports submitted for replacement has been introduced at Liverpool to help relieve the immediate problem there.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for the Liverpool passport office the average length of time it takes to process a correctly completed passport application form for the most recent convenient period for which figures are available, and the comparable figure for the previous year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Passport applications are processed according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases. As a result, processing times in a given period vary considerably, and averages are not recorded. Straightforward non-urgent postal applications are at present being processed at the Liverpool passport office within a maximum 63 working days, compared with 18 last year. Most applications are processed well within this period.

A sharp increase in demand early this year has increased processing times at Liverpool, where staff are also having to adapt to a new computerised system of passport issuing. Additional staff have been employed to help deal with the backlog, and, as I announced to the House on 11 May, at column 978, a system of free two-year extensions to the life of expired passports is being introduced to help relieve the immediate problem.

Foxes and Deer

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement summarising the proposals made by the European Parliament for the control and restriction of the hunting of foxes and deer; and whether the EEC Commission has plans to present proposals on the implementation of these proposals.

Mr. Hurd: I am not aware of any such proposals.

Firearms Consultative Committee

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet able to announce the name of the chairman of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Mr. Hurd: I am pleased to announce that Lord Kimball, former chairman of the British Fields Sports Society, has been appointed chairman of the Firearms Consultative Committee. The names of the other members of the committee will be announced shortly.

Hull Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners from the Doncaster area were being held at Her Majesty's prison, Hull, on the latest date for which he has figures; if he will show in his answer the ages of these inmates; and if he will list the figures for one year; five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Hurd: On 19 May there were in Hull prison 28 unsentenced prisoners whose home addresses were recorded as in Doncaster. The table shows their ages at the time of reception into custody.

Age	Number of prisoners

Comparable figures for one year ago are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Comparable figures for five and 10 years ago do not exist, as unsentenced prisoners were not held at Hull prior to February 1986.

Immigration

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors to the United Kingdom in the last five years have been refused entry because of (a) homosexuality and/or (b) being HIV seropositive.

Mr. Renton: These are not of themselves grounds for refusal of entry.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions have been given to immigration officials to question visitors to the United Kingdom about the sexual orientation or their HIV antibody status.

Mr. Renton: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that immigration officials do not discriminate against (a) homosexual visitors and (b) HIV seropositive visitors to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Immigration officers are aware of the need to apply the normal requirements of the immigration rules to all visitors.

Criminal Justice Bill

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he intends to introduce a Criminal Justice Bill.

Mr. John Patten: The Government keep the operation of the criminal justice system under regular review, and will bring forward proposals for legislative changes where these appear necessary, and when parliamentary time permits.

Hillsborough Inquiry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his present estimate of the cost of the Hillsborough inquiry which will be borne by the police authority of South Yorkshire; and what is his estimate of the amount per head which this will involve.

Mr. Hurd: It is not clear at this stage what the total additional costs of the Hillsborough police inquiry will be. South Yorkshire police authority has made representations which my noble Friend Earl Ferrers, the Minister of State, will be discussing with the authority shortly.

Homosexuality

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to implement the Law Commission proposal to lower the age of consent for buggery between men.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 May 1989]: Yes.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of the draft criminal code Bill published by the Law Commission, he has any plans to introduce legislation on the age of consent for homosexual acts between males; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 May 1989]: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tropical Rain Forests

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects that are currently being undertaken to reduce the destruction of the tropical rain forests.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 15 May, at column 21.

Africa

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent in aid payments to countries in the African subcontinent, in total, in the last five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the last five years for which firm figures are available—1983 to 1987—gross bilateral aid to Africa totalled £1·39 billion. Including the estimated United Kingdom share of multilateral aid this figure rises to some £2·5 billion.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any requests for assistance have been received from countries attempting to safeguard elephant populations.

Mr. Chris Patten: There have been no recent requests for such assistance; but we are already actively assisting the Government of Kenya and stand ready to discuss further support for wild life conservation, including the safeguarding of elephant populations, with the Governments concerned.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is now being given to African countries to combat the poaching of elephants; and what is his latest information about current levels of the elephant population in Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: In Kenya we are currently funding a wildlife adviser and two game wardens in the wildlife department as part of our technical co-operation programme with the Government of Kenya. Nineteen lorries for use in anti-poaching activities have also been provided. The possibility of further assistance with the rehabilitation of vehicles, equipment and training for conservation activities is under discussion.

We are also providing assistance for wildlife conservation under the joint funding scheme with British voluntary agencies in Cameroon, Liberia, Zambia and Nepal; and we are contributing £1 million to the World Wide Fund for Nature to assist the fund in activities to conserve natural resources including wild life.

There are no reliable figures for the current elephant population in Africa. In 1979 the estimated total population was 1·3 million. In the last decade this is thought to have fallen to 750,000 or fewer. According to some estimates the figure lies between 300,000 and 400,000.

Non-governmental Organisations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the official bodies and organisations outside the United Kingdom that make grants to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations engaged in overseas development; and what was the amount of grant given to each United Kingdom non-governmental organisation by such bodies in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is not available.

Lomé IV

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on the negotiations for Lomé IV.

Mr. Chris Patten: Work on the renegotiation of Lomé IV has continued at official level since the first ACP/EC ministerial negotiating meeting in February. I expect to attend the second ACP/EC ministerial negotiating meeting in Brussels in early June, where I hope further progress will be made.

Bophuthatswana

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer any assistance by way of education or technical training to Bophuthatswana; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In common with every country except South Africa we do not recognise the "independence" of Bophuthatswana. Our training and scholarships programmes are available to individual applicants from Bophuthatswana as from elsewhere in South Africa.

WALES

Brussels

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times (a) in the last 12 months and (b) since June 1987 he has visited Brussels; and what were his discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I visited Brussels in February 1988 and met Commissioner Varfis to discuss proposals for integrated development operations in Wales.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to visit Brussels on behalf of the Welsh agriculture industry during this Session of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am ready to go to the Council of Agriculture Ministers should the need arise.

Research and Development

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the agriculture industry in Wales about the future of research and development in agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has had discussions with various sectors of the farming industry, including the farming unions, about the Government's proposals to withdraw public funding from near market research and development. My officials have also had contacts with the farming unions.

Inspectors of Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of Her Majesty's inspectors practice in Wales; and how many work in each of the sectors of the education service in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are currently 56 of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Wales. Each Inspector usually operates in a number of the education sectors—primary, secondary, further and higher education—and is not confined to any one.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to increase the number of Her Majesty's inspectors in Wales to cope with the operation of the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of inspectors in Wales is kept under review in the light of the demands of the work needing to be done.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales await kidney transplants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of Welsh patients awaiting kidney transplantation at hospitals in England and Wales is not available centrally. However, it is understood that 81 patients are awaiting kidney transplantation at the Welsh regional centre at Cardiff royal infirmary. Consideration will be given to further ways of improving the supply of organs to increase the number of kidney transplants performed each year at the Cardiff centre once the Asscher report on renal services in Wales has been studied in detail and the outcome is known of the Medical Reseach Council funded study of factors determining the supply of cadaver organs for transplantation which is being conducted in Wales.

Welsh Language Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified teachers of the Welsh language are employed in each of the counties of Wales in both primary and secondary sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available in the form requested. However, I am able to provide the following:

	Qualifications in Welsh held by teachers in primary schools[1]		Qualifications in Welsh held by teachers in secondary schools[2]

Column (c) Any post A-level qualifications held by teachers with Welsh as the main or subsidiary subject of study.

We are currently estimating the number of teachers required to meet the needs of Welsh within the national curriculum.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take special measures to increase the number of teachers of the Welsh language in the local education authorities of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Arrangements are already being put in place to facilitate the retraining of teachers to teach Welsh as a second language. Officials are estimating what numbers of teachers of Welsh will be needed and will be consulting with local education authorities.

Higher Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students there were in higher education in Wales in the last year for which figures are available and in each of the establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is given in the following tables:

The total number of students in higher education in Wales has increased by 28 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1987-88. The increase in the university sector has been 10 per cent. an in the public sector 56 per cent. in that period.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to meet Alyn and Deeside council to discuss its objections to caravan sites under the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate how many protests he has received from residents in (a) Clwyd and (b) Deeside concerning likely caravan sites; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of caravan sites for which he has made orders under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 since 1980 in Wales; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Grist: One district in Wales—Arfon—has been designated under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to indicate which caravan sites will be designated in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Grist: Under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 it is the duty of county councils in Wales to provide adequate accommodation for gypsies residing in or resorting to their area. Identification of suitable sites in Clwyd is a matter for the county council in consultation with the relevant district councils.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Connah's Quay town council, Shotton county council, Sealand county council, Queensferry county council, Saltney council, Hawarden county council, Kinnerton county council and Penyffordd county council to discuss their concern regarding the potential implementation of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No.

Church-aided Schools (Capital Projects)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to review his Department's policy in respect of funding of capital projects for Church-aided schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Voluntary-aided schools remain an important part of total education provision and it remains the Government's policy to grant-aid necessary capital projects at such schools. Resources are targeted to those projects where needs are greatest.

NHS Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate which community health councils in Wales will merge on the proposed reorganisation of the National Health Service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The proposal contained in the White Paper is for the establishment of one community health council in each district health authority area in Wales. However, no decisions have yet been taken and a consultation document on the matter will be published in the summer.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales which (a) he has earmarked for, (b) he has received representations for or (c) fulfil his criteria for self-governing status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office officials are engaged in discussions with health authorities officers about the concept of self-governing hospitals. No hospitals have been identified as candidates for self-governing status at this stage.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he proposes to meet the chairmen of family practitioner committees in Wales to discuss the White Paper "Working for Patients";

(2) when he last met family practitioner committees in Wales to discuss health matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met chairmen of family practitioner committees on 15 May to discuss the White Paper "Working for Patients". I meet chairmen from time to time to talk about a range of health matters. The last such meeting was on 11 December 1987.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the implications of the new general practitioners' contracts for rural practices in Wales.

Mr. Grist: During discussion with representatives of GPs on 4 May a number of modifications to the new GP contract were agreed which are of special relevance to rural practices for example the 26-hour rule, payment for minor surgery and the criteria for payment of basic practice allowance. Furthermore, it was agreed that the operation of the rural practice payment scheme should be referred for review to the central advisory committee on that scheme. This agreement makes clear that Health Ministers have taken account of the concerns expressed by the profession not least in respect of rural areas, and implementation of the contract as proposed will be an important step towards achieving our objectives of raising even higher the standard of the family doctor service and the care patients can expect to receive.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of the written representations he has received concerning the National Health Service reform proposals from Alyn and Deeside, he will undertake to meet both the Clwyd area health authority and the Clwyd family practitioner committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I met the chairmen of both Clwyd DHA and FPC in the company of their DHA and FPC chairmen colleagues on 15 May to discuss the NHS review White Paper.

"New Roads by New Means"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implications for Wales of the consultation paper "New Roads by New Means".

Mr. Peter Walker: The consultation paper has been widely circulated in Wales and I await the comments of interested parties, including the Welsh counties and the local authority associations. An assessment of the implications for Wales of the proposals in the Green Paper will depend on the responses from consultees, including the private sector.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of how safely health authorities in Wales handle and dispose of clinical waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: District health authorities in Wales are responsible for the safe handling and disposal of their clinical waste. The criteria for good operational practice were laid down in "The Safe disposal of Clinical Waste" (Health and Safety Commission: Her Majesty's Stationery Office 1982) which was circulated to health authorities in Wales in 1982. A further circular is shortly to be issued reminding authorities of the criteria and seeking confirmation that the guidance is being followed. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is not aware of any incidents involving improper disposal in Wales in the last year.

Nursery Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of nursery school places per 1,000 children in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of children in each county in nursery school or in a nursery class in a primary school per 1,000 of 3 and 4-year-olds is as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	416
Dyfed	261
Gwent	344
Gwynedd	235
Mid Glamorgan	446
Powys	280
South Glamorgan	302
West Glamorgan	566
Wales	372

As at January 1988.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what measures he will take to increase the number of nursery school places in the local education authorities of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is for individual local education authorities to decide whether they wish to increase the numbers of nursery school places, in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Welsh Water Authority plc

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to make a statement about the capital structure of WWA plc.

Mr. Grist: Decisions on the capital structure of the successor company will be taken nearer to the date of flotation.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional funding is to be made available for roads in Wales in the 1990s in addition to that announced in Roads in Wales, published earlier in the current year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The funding provision up to March 1992 for the programme described in "Roads in Wales 1989" is set out in the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 617) and in the accompanying Welsh Office commentary. Public expenditure provision is reviewed annually.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dairy herds in Clwyd are subject to the use of bovine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Bovine somatotropin is currently under test in a limited number of field trials. Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 prohibits the disclosure of information supplied by applicants for product licences and test certificates. It is therefore not possible to divulge the number or the location of the herds involved in the trials.

Midwives

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many midwives there are in Wales; how many claims for regrading he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: As at 31 March 1989 it is estimated there were 1,368 qualified midwives of all grades in post. Some 1,345 of these posts were regraded under the new clinical grading structure and I have received 10 representations from or on behalf of midwives about the grades they were allocated.

Under the NHS Whitley procedures appeals against gradings are a matter for the health authorities.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve breast cancer screening in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Breast screening is currently being introduced into the NHS in Wales with the objective of covering the whole of the Principality by 1990. This timetable, which is the same as that for England, is the fastest at which this entirely new service can realistically be implemented in a safe and effective way. A total of £1·8 million has been made available for the service in the current financial year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve cervical cancer screening in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Cervical screening is the responsibility of district health authorities. In order further to improve the service a recurring sum of £600,000 has been made available in Wales this financial year in addition to the £800,000 a year which has been allocated to health authorities in previous years.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial television advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The total expenditure on advertising and publicity, including TV advertising in the last five years, is set out in the table:

1984-85	434,889
1985-86	617,914
1986-87	804,638
1987-88	820,226
1988-89	1,145,033
TOTAL	3,822,700

Broadleaved Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total area of land in Northern Ireland entered into the broadleaved woodland grant scheme between 1985 and 1988; and what is the area approved for each of the following operations: (a) thinning, (b) selective felling, (c) clear felling, (d) natural regeneration under 20 years of age, (e) neglected woodland under 20 years of age, (f) restocking by replanting, (g) restocking by natural regeneration and (h) new planting.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 23 May 1989]: The total area of land in Northern Ireland approved under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme between 1985 and 1988 was 181·30 hectares.

The areas approved for each of the categories is as follows:

	Area
1. Thinning	Nil
2. Selective felling	Nil
3. Clear felling	Nil
4. Natural regeneration under 20 years	Nil
5. Neglected woodland under 20 years	1·3 hectares
6. Restocking by replanting	Nil
7. Restocking by natural regeneration	4·2 hectares
8. New planting	175·8 hectares

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electromagnetic Compatibility

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications of the European Community directive on electromagnetic compatibility; and how he proposes to draw the attention of the United Kingdom electrical and electronics industry to them.

Mr. Atkins: As part of the Department's single market campaign, we have issued much material drawing industry's attention to the implications of the EMC and other "new approach" directives, and we have consulted companies and trade associations regularly on the negotiations. Now that the directive has been agreed, we shall issue shortly a booklet on its terms, and later this year a consultative document on its implementation.

Industry must prepare itself for the implementation of the directive, and we are planning a major awareness campaign to ensure that companies are aware of the opportunities, as well as the technical requirements. We have already commissioned a study by W. S. Atkins (Management Consultants) on the availability of accredited test facilities, and the results show a considerable shortfall in the capacity which will be needed. The awareness campaign will address this problem.

Director General of Telecommunications (Report)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department has yet received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1988, as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. The fifth report by the Director General of Telecommunications was published on 23 May. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1988. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Cash Limits

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit and running cost limits for 1989-90.

Mr. Newton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimates, the case limit for class V vote

2 (support for industry) will be reduced by £1,830,000 from £580,467,000 to £578,637,000, and the cash limit for class V vote 3 (administration, regulation of domestic trade and industry, and consumer protection) will be reduced by £8,533,000 from £251,763,000 to £243,230,000. The running cost provison for class V vote 3 will also be reduced by £7,930,000 from £185,620,000 to £177,690,000, giving a revised total running cost limit for the Department of £304,760,000.

The decrease in the cash limit for class V vote 2 results from a reduction of £3,175,000 in grant in aid provision for the English Industrial Estates Corporation, reflecting reduced estimates of capital expenditure on the managed workspace programmes. Consequential changes have been made to tables 3 and 4 to reflect this. These tables also reflect matching reductions of £11 million in capital expenditure and receipts which have no effect on the level of grant in aid. The reduction in grant in aid is partially offset by an increase of £1,345,000 in provision to meet the initial United Kingdom contribution to the first account of the common fund. The fund will form part of the framework for international commodity policy agreed by the United Nations conference on trade and development. The necessary resources will be found from the agreed PES provision for overseas aid. Provision for inward investment promotional expenditure is being increased by £526,000, and provision for regional enterprise grants is being reduced by the same amount. The opportunity is also being taken to reallocate provision between the Department's research establishments.

The decrease in the cash limit for class V vote 3 (and the running cost limit) reflects a transfer of provision for the Business Statistics Office and other statistical sections to class XIX vote 18 (Central Statistical Office), in line with the announcement by the Prime Minister on 5 April 1989 (at column 190-191 of the formation of an enlarged Central Statistical Office.

These changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Post Office

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Post Office will publish the results from its new end-to-end monitoring system for letter delivery performance.

Mr. Newton: The Post Office, jointly with its users council POUNC, has today published the first results from its new independent end-to-end monitoring system based on the time taken from collection of letters to their actual delivery. Thus performance will now be measured in a way which reflects users' actual experience of the postal system.

The Post Office has also announced, with the endorsement of POUNC, new targets for improving the performance revealed by the figures, and a number of other steps to improve its service, including improved transport arrangements and the provision of better information to households about the best time to post for particular destinations.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on imports into the United Kingdom of (a) worked and (b) raw ivory by weight and value in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1988 imports of raw ivory were recorded as 12·1 metric tonnes valued at £470,000; information prior to 1988 is not available. Imports of worked ivory are given in the following table:

United Kingdom imports of worked ivory

	Metric tonnes	£'000s

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the import of (a) worked and (b) raw ivory into Hong Kong in each of the last five years by weight, value and country of origin.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the following tables:

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to his reply of 27 April, Official Report, columns 614-15 concerning gross output of finished manufactures and imports of semi-manufactures, intermediate products and basic materials, whether he will provide comparable figures for manufactures less food, drink, tobacco, paper, printing and publishing; and if he will add figures for 1973 and for exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures are estimated to be as follows:

Estimated Gross Output (£ billion, 1985 prices)

	Finished manufactures	Finished manufactures less food, drink, tobacco. Paper, Printing and Publishing
1970	129·5	n/a
1973	145·8	96·2
1979	144·5	92·7
1988	156·6	101·2

1988	23·8	14·2	2·2

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to his reply of 27 April, Official Report, columns 614-15, concerning gross output of finished manufactures and imports of semi-manufactures, intermediate products and basic materials, whether he will provide an estimate for the increase in the United Kingdom content of United Kingdom exports of finished manufactures between (i) 1970 and 1979 and (ii) 1979 and 1988 on the assumption that the United Kingdom content of exports was the same in each year as the United Kingdom content of United Kingdom output, leaving out of account food, drink and tobacco as well as paper, printing and publishing.

Mr. Alan Clark: The question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Telecommunications

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Director General of Telecommunications to discuss premium rate telephone services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 May 1989]: Both my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I meet the Director General of Telecommunications from time to time to discuss a range of telecommunications issues. The last such meeting was in January when our discussion included premium rate telephone services.

Air Transportation (Delays)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will undertake consultations as to the costs to United Kingdom trade of delays in the handling of air transportation in the air over the United Kingdom and on the ground at major United Kingdom airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We keep in regular contact about these matters both with the Department of Transport and with representatives of the business community. As my hon. Friend will be aware, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is at present awaiting advice from the Civil Aviation Authority on the adequacy of United Kingdom airport and airspace capacity, through to 2005.

Microchips

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what revisions are planned to the programme of financial support for the development of gallium arsenide microchips following the withdrawal of the major United Kingdom industrial participation.

Mr. Newton: Earlier this year we initiated a review of the gallium arsenide advanced technology programme in the light of the slower development of the market for these devices than had been expected. I understand that the recently announced closure of the Plessey Three Five Group represents only a partial withdrawal from gallium arsenide microchip technology, and that the company will continue to manufacture gallium arsenide integrated circuits at its existing facilities situated in the Plessey research and technology complex at Caswell.

SCOTLAND

Sand Eel Fishing

75. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the licensing of sand eel fishing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A number of representations have been received in response to the consultation paper issued by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on 4 April 1989. These are currently being considered and an announcement about licensing arrangements for the fishery will be made shortly.

Teachers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ascertain the numbers of teachers in Scotland who came from minority ethnic groups along the lines of similar surveys being carried out in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no plans to conduct similar surveys in Scotland.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of teachers who qualify in Scotland do not go into teaching the following year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A survey conducted by colleges of education in March 1988 indicates that over 20 per cent. of teachers who qualified in June 1987 had not entered teaching by that date. Results from a March 1989 survey are not yet available.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the costs to his Department of official participation in the opening of Torness power station on 13 May, including security.

Mr. Lang: The total cost to the Scottish Office of official participation in the opening of Torness power station on 13 May was £358. There was no cost to the Scottish Office in respect of security which was provided by Lothian and Borders police, as part of their normal responsibilities, and by the South of Scotland Electricity Board for security within the station.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the cost to the South of Scotland Electricity Board of the opening ceremony for Torness power station.

Mr. Lang: This is a matter for the South of Scotland Electricity Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

School Records

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to make regulations providing parents and older pupils with a right of access to school records, and students with a right of access to further education records.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We are currently examining the points raised in consultation and will make regulations as soon as possible.

Internal Market

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the Scottish Office civil servants who have advised or assisted the European Commission in its formulation of policy initiatives towards the internal market in the particular areas of (a) public procurement, (b) excluded sectors proposals, (c) compliance directives, and (d) the mutual recognition of professional qualifications;

(2) if he will list the Scottish Office civil servants by grade and rank who have provided the European Commission with technical or other advice on the following major framework directives: (a) pressure vessels, (b) toys, (c) construction materials, (d) electromagnetic compatibility, (e) machine safety, and (f) food law;

(3) if he will list the Scottish Office civil servants by grade and rank who have advised the European Commission on (a) the non-life insurance directive, (b) the liberalisation of audio-visual services, (c) the directive liberalising long term capital movements, and (d) the directive liberalising short term capital movements.

Mr. Rifkind: Scottish Office officials give policy, technical and other advice to the European Commission, both in conjunction with colleagues in other United Kingdom Departments and direct, as appropriate, on a whole range of issues including many of those referred to by the hon. Member.

Industrial Production

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the index of industrial production by market sector, with 1979 = 100.

Mr. Lang: These figures are regularly published by the Scottish Office and are updated each quarter. Current figures are based with 1985 = 100, and a statistical bulletin is shortly to be published showing annual market sector indices back to 1958.

The market sector indices for 1988, rescaled to 1979 = 100, are as follows:

	1988 Index (1979 = 100)

Cash Limits

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits and running cost limits for 1989-90 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I intend to make changes to four of the cash limits within my responsibility.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 14—prisons, hospitals and community health services, etc, Scotland—will be increased by £15,758,000 from £1,987,631,000 to £2,003,389,000. Most of the increase, £16,000,000, follows the decision to implement the recommendations on pay of the review bodies in respect of doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives and health visitors, and professions allied to medicine as announced on 16 February 1989. This is partially offset by a reduction of £322,000 following the transfer of responsibility for radiography training from Greater Glasgow health board to Queens college, Glasgow. A corresponding increase will be made to class XVI, vote 15. In addition £80,000 has been transferred from class XVI, vote 17 to cover the cost of appointing dental practice advisers.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 15 education, arts, libraries and social work, Scotland—will be increased by £322,000 from £215,327,000 to £215,649,000 to meet the costs of running the Glasgow school of Radiography following transfer of responsibility from Greater Glasgow health board to Queen's college, Glasgow. This is being offset by a corresponding reduction in class XVI, vote 14.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for the Scottish Office administration vote, class XVI, vote 21 will be increased by £148,000 from £120,210,000 to £120,358,000 to meet the cost of processing data for England and Wales in connection with the beef special premium scheme. As a consequence the running costs limit for the Scottish Office will be increased by £148,000 from £205,717,000 to £205,865,000. This increase will be offset by corresponding reductions in the cash limits and running cost limits of the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce, class IV, votes 5 and 2.

Cashblock SO/LA2, which covers mainly housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by new towns and presently stands at £327,500,000, is to be decreased by £600,000 to £326,900,000. Subject to parliamentary approval of the Supplementary Estimate for class XVI, vote 9 (new towns and the urban programme), this amount will be used to meet increased requirements for the urban partnership initiatives.

These changes represent a net charge on the Reserve of £15,678,000 and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Forfar Bypass (Accidents)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any recommendations, following the consultations between his Department and Tayside region, about accidents on the Forfar bypass; if the monitoring of traffic and the study of junction design lay-out by his Department, Tayside region and Tayside police has led to recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 May 1989]: An analysis of road accidents on the Forfar bypass prepared by Tayside regional council has recently been received and has been considered by the Scottish Development Department. As a result, the regional council has been asked to prepare urgently short-term measures to improve safety that can be implemented quickly. They have also been requested to look at options for a more major upgrading of the junctions.

Advertising

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide as much information as possible about his Department's expenditure on commercial televison advertising, without breaching commercial confidentiality, over each of the past five years.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The expenditure was as shown in the table:

Year	£
1984-85	161,218
1985-86	101,176
1986-87	82,275
1987-88	115,791
1988-89	474,844

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much advertising air time his Department purchased with each commercial television company in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind [holding answer 15 May 1989]: Information on television advertisements in the form requested is commercially confidential.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding the number of community insulation projects which are likely to terminate on 31 May at the end of the three month extension to the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the applicability in Great Britain of the action for community employment scheme run by the Department of Economic Development in Northern Ireland, with particular reference to the future of insulation projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No assessment has been made because employment and training conditions in Northern Ireland are different from those in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Cash Limits

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1989-90.

Mr. Fowler: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary summer Supplementary and Revised Estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit on class VII, vote 1 (training programmes) will be increased by £155,522,000 from £2,467,895,000 to £2,623,417,000, due to organisational changes within the Employment Department group resulting in responsibility for some enterprise and small firms functions and other activities transferring to the Training Agency from the Department of Employment. The majority of this increase is offset by a reduction in class VII, vote 2 (employment programmes and central services).

The cash limit on class VII, vote 2, will be reduced by £151,893,000 from £785,824,000 to £633,931,000. This is a net result of the transfer of £155,522,000 to the Training Agency (class VII, vote 1) of some enterprise and small firms functions and associated running costs and other administrative costs; an increase in provision of £5,873,000 to make payment to the Department of Social Security (class XV, vote 7) in respect of work done by that Department in connection with payments to employment training and youth training scheme participants; a net transfer of £1,326,000 in provision to the Central Statistical Office (CSO) (class XIX, vote 18), due to the transfer of some statistical work relating to the retail prices index and the family expenditure survey from the Department of Employment to CSO; receipts of £1,104,000 from CSO (class XIX, vote 18) in respect of the statistical and administrative support work which the Department of Employment will carry out on a repayment basis; £11,000 additional receipts for work carried out by the Department of Employment for other Government Departments; a transfer of £244,000 from the Department of Social Security (class XV, vote 7), following the change in responsibility for accommodation costs at Reading and Livingston; and a net decrease in provision of £47,000 for payments to seconded Employment Department group staff.

There will be a new cash limited vote, class VII, vote 5, to facilitate the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency (STA). This new token vote of £1,000 includes provision for expenses to be incurred by the Department of Employment in connection with the privatisation of STA. The Secretary of State for Employment announced the intention to privatise to the House of Commons on 13 March 1989, at column 23.

These changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

There will be a decrease of £193,000 in the Employment Department group's overall running costs to £960,532,000. This is the net result of changes in the running costs limits on class VII, vote 1 and class VII, vote 2. The running costs limit on class VII, vote 2 will be reduced by £7,021,000 from £649,165,000 to £642,144,000. This is the net result of transferring £6,828,000 to class VII, vote 1 to cover the staffing of the small firms service and the enterprise allowance scheme; transferring £437,000 to the Central Statistical Office (class XIX, vote 18); and increasing provision by £244,000 from the Department of Social Security (class XV, vote 7) for accommodation costs. The running costs limit for class VII, vote 1 will correspondingly be increased by £6,828,000 from £204,799,000 to £211,627,000.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of persons (a) entering and (b) leaving the employment training programme since its inception (i) for each month and (ii) cumulatively.

Mr. Nicholls: The information required is given in the following table.

Employment Training entrants and leavers

	Entrants	Leavers (estimated)
September	21,500	1,000
October	31,100	5,000
November	35,200	7,000
December	28,900	7,000
January	36,700	11,000
February	43,800	19,000
March	42,200	26,000
April	36,300	n/a
Cumulative total	274,900	76,000

n/a—Not available.

Note: The total of the monthly entrants figures does not equal the cumulative total because of rounding and later adjustments.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of employment training places available on the latest date for which information is available in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 May 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

In May 1989 there were 34,900 contracted employment training places in Scotland.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of employment training places occupied on the latest available date for which information is available in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 May 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

On 12 May 1989 there were 22,000 people participating in employment training in Scotland.

Graduates

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of graduates in employment, and as a percentage of all in employment, in each of the standard regions and Wales for each of the years 1983 to 1988;

(2) what was the total number and percentages of graduates in employment in each of the standard regions and Wales in each year from 1983 to 1988.

Wages Councils

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which of the wages councils a majority of the employer bodies supported abolition of wages councils in the recent public consultation.

ENVIRONMENT

Community Charge Leaflet

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to provide minority language versions of the community charge leaflet which is being sent to all households in England during May.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made to translate the leaflet "The Community Charge (the so called Poll Tax): How It Will Work for You" into other languages.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. The leaflet is being translated into Bengali, Cantonese, Gujerati, Hindi, Punjabi, Turkish, Urdu and Vietnamese. The translated versions will shortly be available free of charge. My Department will send them to councils and community associations, and will take advertisements in selected newspapers, to ensure that their availability is widely known.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 3 May, Official Report, column 129, whether he will describe the circumstances when the police security services, Inland Revenue, or Customs and Excise will be able to obtain personal data, originally collected in relation to the football membership scheme, for purposes unconnected with the operation of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I can envisage no circumstances in which the organisations mentioned would have access to the information collected for purposes unconnected with the national membership scheme for football supporters. Discussions with the data protection registrar have taken place and will continue as the scheme is drawn up by the Football Membership Authority.

Urban Aid (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount that Bolton has received in inner urban aid funding over the last 10 years; how much funding is being made available for next year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Bolton borough council has received £34 million in urban programme resources since 1980. Decision on the urban programme allocations for local authorities next year will, as usual, be announced in the Autumn Statement.

Drinking Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location in the county of South Yorkshire (a) which Government and local authority buildings do not meet the European economic Community guide levels and maximum admissible concentration levels for pollutants in their drinking water supply and (b) the pollutants concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Information about supplies to individual Government and local authority buildings is not held centrally. In the county of South Yorkshire Government buildings are supplied by the Yorkshire water authority. Information on the quality of such supplies is available from the Yorkshire water authority.

West Midlands (Strategic Guidance)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to monitor the implementation of the strategic guidance for the west midlands published by his Department in respect of (a) the pace and scale of urban regeneration and efforts to stimulate industrial and housing development and to improve the environment, (b) trends in the factors affecting housing provision in the metropolitan district,

(c) the rate at which high technology firms are attracted to sites on the periphery, (d) the outward growth of built-up areas and development in innner city areas, and (e) the effects of shopping development outside town centres on those centres and on the shopping public.

Mr. Ridley: The seven metropolitan boroughs in the west midlands, acting jointly, have recently published a monitoring report on the 1988 strategic guidance entitled "Planning Trends in the West Midlands: 1988 Annual Monitor". This covers many of the points raised by my hon. Friend. I am arranging for a copy to be sent to him.

Community Housing

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to assist community housing and starter homes.

Mr. Trippier: The Government support a wide range of initiatives designed to provide housing for local people and those who are seeking to establish a home for the first time. these include:

—the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for housing associations. Over the next three years, the number of new homes for rent approved by the Corporation is set to rise by 50 per cent. (to 24,000) while the low cost home ownership programme should nearly double in that period; —subsidised shared ownership schemes provided by local authorities and housing associations which allow the shared owner to buy out the remainder of the equity, thus providing a route to full home ownership; —assistance to tenants in the housing association and local authority sectors who wish to form housing co-operatives or other types of local management initiatives. In addition, there is a growing number of co-ownership societies constructing new homes in which members either have an equity stake or can buy outright; and —assistance by local authorities, in their role as enablers, to other landlords in their area using powers in section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Community Charge

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North of 22 May, he will give the notional community charge for the London borough of Ealing for the year 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 25 April, Official Report, column 532.

Noise

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give consideration to providing a code of practice to local authorities on the action to be taken with regard to noise nuisance in order to establish a common standard for each action.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Secretary of State has approved a number of codes of practice on noise from various different sources which are designed to help local authorities to take a reasonably consistent approach to similar problems, while retaining the flexibility necessary to deal with local problems in a realistic way.

Endangered Species

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report, the submission of the United Kingdom to this October's meeting of the CITES; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The form of the United Kingdom submission to these conferences is normally finalised at the conference itself. Proceedings of conferences are regularly and routinely published by the CITES secretariat.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representation he has made to the CITES organisation regarding its retrospective approval of ivory cargoes initially detained in the United Kingdom due to documentation discrepancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In accordance with CITES controls on raw African ivory, the Department consults the CITES secretariat ivory unit on all import and export applications. No import of ivory is permitted without its concurrence.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what stage has been reached in his Department's consideration in conjunction with CITES of an import licence for approximately 1025 kilos of ivory exported from Zaire without a licence in June 1988 by Mr. Shivaz Virji of Ealing; what information he has regarding the ultimate proposed destination of the ivory; and what steps he has taken to determine whether it originated from elephants slaughtered illegally.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received no such application for an import licence.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that Britain is not used as a transit route for poached ivory.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department complies fully with the controls of the convention on international trade in endangered species on trade in ivory. Import and export permits for trade in raw African ivory are granted only with the approval of the CITES secretariat ivory unit, and if all other requirements of EC regulation 3626/82 are met.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those 18 African countries where the EEC considers the elephant population is no longer capable of sustaining commercial exploitation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are currently 19 African countries where the EEC considers that the elephant population is incapable of sustaining commerical exploitation as follows: Benin, Burkina Faso, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Ghinea, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Togo, Uganda, Somalia.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further restrictions on the import of ivory are due to be announced by the European Commission.

Mrs. Bottomley: The Department has no information on further restrictions on the import of ivory to be announced by the European Commission other than those included in my answer to the hon. Member's question on 15 March 1989.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why an import licence was granted by his Department for 1,464 kilos of raw ivory which arrived from Zaire on a British Airways flight on 21 October 1988 with false tusk numbers; to whom in the United Kingdom the tusks were delivered; what information he has regarding the ultimate destination of the ivory; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why his Department allowed the 252 tusks which arrived at Gatwick airport on 21 October 1988 to be renumbered; and what steps were taken to ensure the ivory was not from elephants slaughtered illegally.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Details of individual import and export applications are confidential and cannot be released. However, following confirmation from the CITES secretariat ivory unit that a particular consignment had been legally exported and on being satisfied that the requirements of EC regulation 3626/82 were met, the Department granted import licences for ivory from Zaire. The circumstances were that on arrival in the country it was discovered that the ivory had been incorrectly marked at its port of origin. After clarification and confirmation from the CITES secretariat that the cargo was legal, an official of the Zaire Government was authorised to re-mark the ivory. I understand that this ivory remains in Customs and Excise control.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the current number of ivory dealers in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has no information on the current number of ivory dealers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the level of funding received by the CITES organisation from ivory dealers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: According to the CITES secretariat ivory unit budget for 1989, a total of 35,000 US dollars is being contributed to the unit's funding by private concerns. Contributions from Governments including the United Kingdom, and conservation organisations, total 108,500 US dollars.

Community Charge Leaflet

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made to produce versions of the leaflets "The Community Charge (the so called Poll Tax): How It Will Work for You" in Braille and moon for the blind and deaf-blind people.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is currently discussing with the Royal National Institute for the Blind ways in which the leaflet might be adapted for the visually handicapped.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made to translate the leaflet "The Community Charge (the so called Poll Tax): How It Will Work for You" into British sign language, on video, for profoundly deaf people whose only language is BSL.

Mr. Gummer: I am currently considering whether such arrangements might be necessary.

Roman Baths (Huggin Hill)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made to safeguard the Roman bath complex at Huggin hill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Hammerson Group announced last week that it had decided to redesign its building to preserve and protect the Roman remains, under the close supervision of English Heritage. In the circumstances this is a good solution to a difficult problem, and is the result of all parties working constructively together.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to contact the Rocky Mountain Institute in Snowmass, Colorado, in order to evaluate the policy options researched by the institute to combat the greenhouse effect in the energy sector.

Mr. Ridley: In studying the energy sector's contribution to the greenhouse effect and in participating fully in the work of the intergovernmental panel on climate change, we take account of all published work in this field including that of the Rocky Mountain Institute.

Birds

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what opinions have been put by the EEC Commission to Her Majesty's Government on the extent to which the shooting of crows, rooks, jays and magpies, as covered by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, is consistent with the EEC birds directive 79/409; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on this issue.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Commission has suggested that the provisions of the directive require that the killing of the species listed on schedule 2 part II to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 by authorised persons should be subject to a strictly controlled system of individual licensing. We consider that this would represent an unnecessary bureaucratic burden on farmers and landowners, would be costly to administer and would bring no conservation benefits. We have supplied the Commission with scientific data that shows that the population of none of the species concerned are endangered by present United Kingdom practices. We are trying to secure an amendment to the directive which would clarify the position on sensible pest control.

Wildlife Conservation

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the response of Her Majesty's Government to the resolution of the EEC Parliament entitled "Conservation of European Wildlife and Natural Habitats" with particular reference to the proposals for the management and control of hunting and the prohibition of the use of lead shot, document A2-179/88; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have noted the European Parliament's views as expressed in the motion for a resolution calling for a ban on the use of lead shot in shooting, including clay pigeon shooting, and for controls on bag limits.

Current evidence does not provide justification for a national ban on the use of lead shot. The situation is being kept under review. The Nature Conservancy Council is consulting all interested parties to assess any potential danger to wildlife and its habitats. A working group of the British Association for Shooting and Conservation is co-ordinating research into all aspects of lead shot, with environmental issues as one of its main priorities.

Flags

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is spent annually on putting up flags from Government buildings for visiting dignitaries from overseas.

Mr. Chope : The flying of flags on Government buildings on the ceremonial route and on Raleigh green at each ceremonial state visit, organised by the Lord Chamberlain's office on instructions from the Government, cost approximately £15,700 inclusive of labour and material for framework supports, flying of flags and hire of flagpoles.

Football Grounds

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the weekly attendances at football grounds; how many arrests have taken place in football grounds over the last 12 months; and how many complaints about the proposed membership scheme for those attending football grounds he has received over the last five months.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer, 23 May 1989]: The Football League estimates that the weekly attendance at Football League matches is of the order of 450,000.

The Association of Chief Police Officers collate the figures for the total number of arrests at Football League matches after the end of each season. Figures for 1988-89 are not yet available but in the first two months of the season there were over 1,700 arrests. The total for 1987-88 was 6,106.

I have received 2,673 representations against the proposed national membership scheme for football supporters since 1 January.

Leaflets

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many information leaflets were published by his Department in each of the past five years; and what was the total cost each year.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 24 May 1989]: The numbers and cost of new information leaflets and new editions of existing publications produced by my Department in each of the past five years were:

1984-85 17 at a cost of £710,686 (approx)
1985-86 28 at a cost of £252,281
1986-87 19 at a cost of £321,195
1987-88 30 at a cost of £216,147
1988-89 37 at a cost of £615,932

In addition:

1. The Royal Parks and Palaces Division produced leaflets aimed at the United Kingdom and overseas tourist market to the value of:

1985 6 at a cost of £10,605
1986 6 at a cost of £37,040
1987 7 at a cost of £11,645
1988 7 at a cost of £39,180

2. The Property Services Agency has produced the following new leaflets and new editions:

1984-85 None
1985-86 2 at a cost of £15,487
1986-87 7 at a cost of £77,641
1987-88 13 at a cost of £38,964
1988-89 18 at a cost of £148,145

Air Pollution

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the target number of inspections and vists to be undertaken by the air pollution inspectors will be in the year 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 12 May 1989]: A target of 6,000 visits, to or in connection with registered works, is proposed for HMIP inspectors involved in air pollution control. This is a realistic estimate taking into account the need for significant amounts of inspector-time in developing a new system for registrations that will provide more information for the public.

Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 742, he will state whether the chairmen and chief executives of the remaining water authorities are to receive an annual bonus giving the amount paid as a percentage of annual salary.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 30 January 1989]: No. None of the chairmen or executive members of the Anglian, South West or Thames water authorities received bonus payments for the financial year 1987-88.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated cost for each of (a) Calshot, (b) Milford-on-Sea, (c) Christchurch bay, (d) Colwell bay, (e) Gurnard, (f) Cowes, (g) Ryde, (h) Seagrove, (i) St. Helens, (j) Bembridge, (k) Whitecliff bay and (l) Ventnor of (i) a long sea outfall, (ii) full sewage treatment works with a short sea outfall and (iii) full sewage treatment works with a long sea outfall to enable them to comply with EEC bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; and when the appropriate solutions will be in place, giving the estimated date of commencement and completion.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Lead Water Pipes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of households which will need to replace or will be required to replace lead water pipes during the next (a) five and (b) 10 years; and what is his estimate of the average cost per household which this replacement will involve.

Mr. Howard: The lead concentration in a dwelling's water supply is dependent on a variety of factors, the relevance of which varies considerably in different parts of the country. The need to replace lead pipes will depend on the concentration in water of lead derived from those pipes. In view of this, it is not possible to give an estimate of the number of dwellings where pipe replacement may be desirable. The cost of lead pipe replacement for a dwelling will vary greatly depending on circumstances.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage increase from 1979 of (a) the state retirement pension, (b) the retail prices index and (c) the pensioner prices index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between November 1979 and April 1989[1] the level of the state retirement pension increased by 87·1 per cent. Between November 1979 and September 1988[2] the retail prices index increased by 79·9 per cent. Between the quarter ending September 1979 and the quarter ending September 1988[3] the pensioner prices index (one person household) increased by 75·5 per cent.

Notes:

[1] Information given is for uprating dates.

[2] The level of retirement pension payable from April 1989 is based on the RPI figure for September 1988.

[3] Pensioner prices indices (for both one-and two-person households) are produced quarterly.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any proposals to change the present arrangements for payment of protected contributions for 1987-88 to private pension providers in respect of individuals who contracted out of the state earnings related pension scheme before 6 April; if he will give his latest estimate of the number of such individuals who contracted out during 1988-89 and backdated their election to 1987-88; by what date he expects 90 per cent. of relevant payments of 1987-88 protected contributions to have been made; if he will estimate the number and total value of such payments yet to be made; whether he will make it his policy to offer interest on late payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current arrangements for payment of the contracted-out rebate to pension providers are working satisfactorily. Personal pension applications have been processed promptly, and payments made to providers in respect of sums due for 1987-88 within a very short period of time. The very heavy volumes received in the last few weeks, however, will inevitably lead to some delay.

It is estimated that approximately 3 million pensions have been taken out by the end of 1988-89, and the expectation is that nearly all of them have elected to backdate to the 1987-88 tax year. It is hoped that the vast majority of payments of the contracted-out rebate in respect of 1987-88 will have been made by the end of August. This will involve about a further 2 million payments at an estimated total of £750 million in rebates. The payments will be made as quickly as possible, so the question of interest on late payments does not arise.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees are contracted out in defined benefit schemes, group money purchase schemes and personal pension schemes, respectively; and what would be the effect on the income and expenditure of the national insurance fund, in respect of each of these groups, of reducing the contracted-out rebate and the minimum contribution to personal pension schemes by 1 per cent. of relevant earnings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 15 May 1989]: It is estimated that approximately 3 million personal pensions (PP) have been taken out by the end of 1988-89. There is no information currently available on the effects of the changes under the 1986 Act to the numbers of contracted-out members of occupational schemes. On the assumption that contracted-out scheme membership is broadly unchanged it is estimated that there are about 9·5 million members of schemes. On this basis, it is estimated that a 1 per cent. reduction in the rebate rate in 1988-89 would have reduced the PP rebates in respect of that year by approximately £185 million and rebates for scheme members by approximately £850 million.

Any effect on expenditure would depend upon precisely how the reduction in the rebate was reflected on the guaranteed minimum pensions (GMPs) which schemes have to provide in respect of contracted-out members, and in the notional GMPs which are deducted from SERPS benefits from those who have contracted-out money purchase or PP rebates.

A change in the balance between the value of the rebate and the benefits forgone may affect the numbers opting to contract out, but no allowance has been made for this in the figures given.

Transitional Protection Payments

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the savings following the end of transitional protection payments since the last uprating of social security benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following this year's uprating, some people continue to receive income support and housing benefit transitional protection. The extra cost of paying income support transitional protection on top of uprated benefit income of all claimants is estimated at £100 million for 1989-90.

It is estimated that the annual expenditure on housing benefit transitional payments has reduced by about £3·2 million as a result of awards ending in April 1989 because of the flat rate reduction of £2·00.

Charities (Hostel Status)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now conduct an urgent investigation into the circumstances in which his Department granted hostel status to the premises in 9A Oliver crescent, Harwick, run by the charity called the Reflections Trust 1987 Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the responsibility of this Department to grant hostel status to any establishment.

The income support general regulations define "hostel" for income support purposes. Whether or not an establishment is a hostel is a matter of fact for determination by the adjudication officer in considering individual claims for benefit.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures are used to investigate the bona fide nature of Scottish charitable organisations which apply for Department of Social Security hostel status.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not routinely investigate the nature of charitable organisations in Scotland. There are therefore no set procedures.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department is currently considering any application for Department of Social Security hostel status for any premises situated in Scotland and managed by the Reflections Trust 1987 Ltd.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We know of no such premises which are currently under consideration.

Loans

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for (i) the midlands region and (ii) each of the 21 offices serving the West Midlands county area for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total value of applications for (a) budgetary loans, (b) cash loans and (c) community care grants from the social fund for the financial year between 4 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 in respect of his Department's local offices at Eston, Hartlepool, Redcar and Stockton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details, by month, of the number of budgeting loans, crisis loans and community care grants processed by each local office since 11 April 1988, together with the value of these applications, is available in the Library. However, social fund data for March 1989 are not yet available as a check of the figures has revealed some inaccuracies which have resulted from a new method of calculating the month-end balances.

The necessary adjustments are being made and the tables will be placed in the Library at the earliest possible opportunity.

In addition, the value of applications processed during December 1988 remains unavailable because of an earlier computer malfunction.

Leaflets

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans are being made to provide extra resources to the Department's leaflets unit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An additional separate distribution service, the Industrial Services Consortium in Bradford, has been contracted to supply statutory and care organisations with their leaflet requirements.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current average length of time taken to dispatch bulk orders of DSS welfare benefit leaflets to independent advice and law centres, local authorities and libraries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A newly contracted additional leaflets distributed service, which began operations from 1 May, is dispatching bulk orders of DSS leaflets on the basis of a five-day turnabout to advice centres, care agencies and local authorities. A 48-hour urgent demand service is also available. Libraries are being supplied by the leaflets unit at Canons Park and the average time is expected to be reduced with the introduction of the new arrangements from the present unacceptable average of six months to an average time of four weeks.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of the leaflet, "Our Business Is Service", being distributed to staff in local offices of his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total cost of printing and distributing the brochure "Our Business is Service" is £42,000. This includes the cost of distribution to staff within headquarters offices and the central offices at Newcastle and North Fylde.

Fraud Prosecutions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the number of prosecutions for social security fraud in Wales giving the sums of money and the number of people involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 459 persons were prosecuted in courts in Wales for social security fraud in the period from 10 February 1988 to 28 February 1989. Of these, 393 cases involved offences concerning benefit fraud and 66 related to fraudulent encashment of instruments of payment. Information relating to the total amount of overpaid benefit in these cases is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, in 197 cases compensation orders totalling £97,174·01 were made in favour of the Department as a result of these proceedings.

Household Incomes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the comprehensive set of indicators of the standards of living of households with incomes below the average developed by his Department and referred to in his speech, "The End of the Road for Poverty"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis 1981-85" May 1988 and to "Low Income Statistics: Report of a Technical Review" March 1988. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Date of Birth (Evidence)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions he gives to local Department of Social Security offices about information which is acceptable as evidence of date of birth; and what further guidelines apply for individuals born outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Instructions to local office staff on the verification of age for social security purposes are covered in the general benefits (GB) code, for contributory benefits, and in the "Income Support Manual".

For individuals born outside the United Kingdom, a certificate produced by the appropriate authority abroad is accepted unless there is any reason to doubt its validity.

Cash Limits

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes to the cash limits or running costs limit of his Department for 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 6 (Housing Benefit Administration) will be increased by £312,000 from £128,592,000 to £128,904,000. The revision provides for an additional payment to a local authority in Scotland towards the costs incurred in preparing for the introduction of the community charge rebate scheme.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XV, vote 7 (Administration and Miscellaneous Services) will be increased by £3,226,000 from £1,578,122,000 to £1,581,348,000. The revision takes account of a reassessment of requirements resulting from the division of the Departments of Social Security and of Health, namely £220,000, a transfer of responsibility for certain expenditure items previously borne on class XIV, vote 3, £3,257,000, a transfer of £5,873,000 from DE (class VII, vote 2) to meet additional DSS administration expenses in making payments to employment training and youth training scheme participants, and a transfer to DE of £244,000 to reflect a change in responsibility for accommodation costs at Reading and Livingston. These additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £5,880,000 to the vote. The balance of the increase will be offset by transfers from other votes and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

As a result the running cost limit of the Department of Social Security is increased by £6,566,000 from £1,705,319,000 to £1,711,885,000.

Elderly People (Benefits)

Mr. Hanley To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will prepare in tabular form a chart showing the provision of state pensions and other benefits for the elderly in terms of pounds sterling for each of the 12 countries in the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1988)," a copy of which is in the Library. These tables set out the levels of benefit in the national currencies together with the sterling equivalent converted according to the OECD's purchasing power parity figures as explained in the introduction to the tables.

Widows

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widows and widowed mothers were affected by his announcement on 28 February, as respects his advice to women widowed before 11 April 1988, to contact local Department of Social Security offices if not contacted within six weeks; and how many have received payment under the new arrangements.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 May 1989]: I regret that the information is not available. Some widows have been paid but the exact numbers are not known.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether those widows and widowed mothers who, during the period after 11 April 1988, obtained benefit, have to repay the Department of Social Security when they receive their widow's pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Widows affected by my right hon. Friend's announcement on 28 February 1989 will not have to repay the benefit they have already received. Where the benefit obtained is income-related or overlaps with widow's pension, the arrears of widow's pension will be abated.

TRANSPORT

Severn Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to paragraph 30 of the consultation paper "New Roads by New Means" (a) what he regards as an appropriate toll level on the second Severn crossing and (b) what form of control Her Majesty's Government will place on the level of toll to be charged on the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Toll levels on the second Severn crossing will depend on tenderers' bids. We shall come forward in due course with proposals for the tolling regime.

Roads Programme

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects work to commence on the A41 No Mans Heath and Maceden bypass;

(2) when he expects work to commence on the A49 Tiverton bypass;

(3) when he expects work to commence on the A54/A556 to Kelsall bypass;

(4) when he expects work to commence on the A556/A49—Morley Lane stretch;

(5) when he expects work to commence on the A556 at Oakmere to Old Rectory Farm, Delamere;

(6) when he expects work to commence on the Duddan and Clothen A51 bypass;

(7) when he expects work to commence on the Tarpandey bypass to Tow Lane Ends;

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These corridor improvements were added to the national trunk road programme on 18 May by "Roads for Prosperity". The first step is for the Department to select a design agency which will investigate possible schemes. A programme for construction will be drawn up when this preparatory work has been completed.

Marine Coastal Pollution Unit

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure that the marine coastal pollution unit can exercise control over a harbour authority in the event of a major oil spill occurring within the harbour limits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the event of an accident to or in a ship causing or threatening to cause oil pollution on a large scale in the United Kingdom or United Kingdom territorial waters—inluding harbour areas—the Secretary of State has extensive statutory powers of intervention which would enable the marine pollution control unit to direct and control clean-up operations.

Pollution (Cars)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals there are to introduce standards equivalent to the United States emission standards on small cars within the remainder of countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The European Commission has recently made proposals which include the introduction of standards equivalent to the United States emission standards on small cars in 1993, throughout the Community.

The Government support this move, provided it is implemented in a sensible way, without intermediate stages and respecting the unity of the market.

The adoption of three-way catalysts could in some cases increase emission of CO_2—the principal greenhouse gas. We shall therefore be pressing the Commission to bring forward proposals to tackle this.

London Underground (Police)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of British Transport police officers now employed on the London Underground; how many are on secondment from the Metropolitan police; if he has any proposals for increasing the number of officers engaged in this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of 338 British Transport police officers are currently employed on the London Underground and 80 officers from the Metropolitan and City police forces are also serving on the Underground while BTP officers are recruited and trained to fill the increased establishment of 400 announced last December for the Underground division of the force.

That represents an increase of 50 officers and followed an increase from 280 to 350 in 1986.

The establishment of the force is a matter for the British Transport police committee.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the English districts outside London that do not have a system of concessionary bus fares for those of state pensionable age.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport conducted a survey of all local authorities outside London in autumn 1986 to discover the details of concessionary fares schemes operating at that time. The results showed that there was no travel concessionary scheme for elderly people in the following 28 districts. We have no more recent information. It is possible that schemes may now operate in some of these areas.

Pilot Autoguide System

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he proposes to ensure that the pilot autoguide system will not include route guidance for through traffic to use local roads; what powers local highway authorities will have of control over the guidance routes chosen and the equipment to be installed; and whether there will be any appeals procedure to resolve differences between local highway authorities and operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Bill currently before Parliament, the operation of an autoguide system in relation to public roads would require a licence from the Secretary of State.

Clause 10(8) of the Bill would enable the Secretary of State to specify in a licence the classes of descriptions of public road which may be included in route guidance. The Bill does not extend local highway authorities' existing powers to manage traffic in their areas.

An autoguide pilot scheme would need to include the use of some local roads to allow a full assessment of the likely effects of a large scale commercial system. The Department of Transport has set up a group which would oversee the monitoring and evaluation of a pilot autoguide scheme in London, should a licence for one be awarded. The group includes representatives of local authority associations and the police.

An autoguide operator's power to install equipment would, under clause 12 of the Bill, be subject to the street works code in the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950. This would require an operator to notify relevant highway authorities of proposals, and sets out procedures for resolving disputes.

North Devon Link Road

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving personal injury have been recorded on the north Devon link road since it was opened and how many motorists have been cautioned or prosecuted for speeding on this section of the road from Tiverton to South Molton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been six personal injury accidents on the section of north Devon Link between Tiverton and Newtown. Two of these accidents involved fatalities.

There has been a high police presence on the road. They estimate that about 860 motorists have been cautioned or prosecuted for speeding.

Bus Fares

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent information his Department has on the level of bus fares since deregulation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Between 1985-86 and the 12 months ended September 1988, local bus fares outside London rose by an average of 19 per cent. Following the imposition of precept control, fares in metropolitan areas rose sharply from very low levels. In other areas outside London, the rise of 11 per cent. was broadly in line with inflation.

M25

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the date when the M25 road was built; what was the cost at current prices of (a) re-surfacing work, (b) concrete relaying and (c) road rebuilding (i) undertaken since that date up to the present time and (ii) which he estimates is needed to bring the road up to high quality standard; who had the initial road-building contract; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of that work bearing in mind the longevity and usage of the road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is not kept in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The first section of what was to become the M25 London orbital motorway was opened in 1972 and the final section in 1986. Fifteen main civil engineering contractors were involved in its construction.

Major maintenance work, defined as capital schemes costing more than £500,000 (more than £250,000 before April 1987), has cost as follows:

£ million

Year	Outturn cost
1985-86	0·6
1986-87	—
1987-88	2·4
1988-89	[1]9·8
1989-90	[2]3·8

[1] Estimate.
[2] Provisional.

Some major renewal has been necessary earlier than expected mainly because of much higher usage of the motorway than was originally forecast. Regular surveys are carried out to assess the continuing need for maintenance and major works are programmed in the most cost effective manner. All present major maintenance needs will be met by the expenditure provision for 1989-90. These works will be designed and executed to minimise disruption to traffic.

M11

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the date when the M11 road was built; what was the cost at current prices of (a) resurfacing work, (b) concrete relaying and (c) road rebuilding (i) undertaken since that date up to the present time and (ii) which he estimates is needed to bring the road up to high quality standard; who had the initial road-building contract; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of that work bearing in mind the longevity and anticipated usage of the road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information is not kept in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The first section of the M11 London-Cambridge motorway was opened in 1975 and the final section in 1980. Seven main civil engineering contractors were involved in its construction.

Major maintenance work, defined as capital schemes costing more than £500,000 (more than £250,000 before April 1987), has cost as follows:

Year	Outturn cost (£ million)
1985-86	0·3
1986-87	—
1987-88	1·3
1988-89	[1]1·1
1989-90	[2]9·0

[1] Estimate.
[2] Provisional.

The works have mainly been resurfacing and overlay which serves to preserve the road and defer the need for costly reconstruction. Regular surveys are carried out to assess the continuing need for maintenance and major works are programmed in the most cost effective manner. All present major maintenance needs will be met by the expenditure provision for 1989-90. These works will be designed and executed to minimise disruption to traffic.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the Lepe-based Venturers search and rescue service has not been accepted by the coastguard's regional controller as an operational partner in life-saving activities in the Solent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My hon. Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping wrote to my hon. Friend on 21 March 1989 giving the background to this matter, and explaining his decision. I have nothing further to add to the contents of that letter.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make available accounts for Prestwick airport for the period 1985 to 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures relating to Prestwick airport appear in the annual reports by the British Airports Authority and its successor, BAA plc; copies are in the Library. For any further material I suggest my hon. Friend contacts BAA plc direct.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish the evidence which led him to conclude that there had been a steady improvement in the financial position of Prestwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information supplied, which was drawn from the relevant annual reports of the then British Airports authority and latterly BAA plc, was as follows:

£ million

	1983-88	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Income
Traffic charges	3·7	3·8	4·0	4·5	5·3
Concessions and property	2·0	2·1	2·0	1·9	2·5
Total	5·7	5·9	6·0	6·4	7·8
Expenditure
Staff costs	3·2	3·9	4·3	4·3	5·2
External charges	4·1	3·3	2·8	2·8	3·6
Depreciation	1·8	1·5	1·4	1·2	1·1
Total	9·1	8·7	8·5	8·3	9·9
Trading (loss)	(3·4)	(2·8)	(2·5)	(1·9)	(2·1)

A BAA note to these figures remarked the extraordinary expenditure of £0·75 million in 1987-88 in marketing support for an airline, Highland express; this sum may be discounted from the expenditure account evaluating the trend of financial performance.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the representations he has received from commercial and business organisations in support of his policy of maintaining Prestwick as Scotland's gateway airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations to my right hon. Friend about Scottish lowland airports policy have taken the form of private correspondence. It would be for those concerned to make their views public, if they wished.

Harbour Projects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many harbour projects in (a) Yorkshire, and (b) Humberside have been carried out in the period from May 1979 to May 1989; where are the locations; how much money was granted to these projects; and what were the sources of the funds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not have this information. Harbour developments do not require my right hon. Friend's approval, and except for certain fishery facilities have not been financed since 1979 by Government loans or grants.

However in 1980 a grant of £19,200 was made for one harbour project in Yorkshire from the European regional development fund, and since 1980 grants totalling £6,382,800 have been made from the fund for 20 harbour projects on Humberside.

Orange Badge Scheme

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many London boroughs allow the orange badge scheme to be used only by disabled people resident in their own borough; which of the royal boroughs refuse to operate the orange badge scheme; and for what reasons.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The orange badge scheme allows all badge holders to use the parking concessions wherever the scheme operates.

The scheme does not operate in the Royal boroughs of Kensington and Chelsea, nor in the City of London, City of Westminster and parts of London borough of Camden. This reflects the particular traffic problems in central London. The four authorities each operate their own concessionary scheme for people with disabilities who live or work in their area.

We recently announced proposals to ensure that orange badges go only to those severely disabled people who need them most, and to curb abuse of the scheme. In the light of that, we have invited the four authorities to consider introducing elements of the national scheme in their areas.

British Rail

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a small number of representations from interested organisations and from individuals.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the Chairman of British Rail; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 17 May to discuss a variety of railway matters.

PRIME MINISTER

Strategic Nuclear Deterrent

Q33. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to publish an indicative list of the circumstances in which Her Majesty's Government would authorise the use of the strategic nuclear deterrent.

The Prime Minister: No.

Hazardous and Noxious Substances

Q45. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on 27 April Official Report, column 613, if she will list the contents of Her Majesty's Government's proposals for the implementation of a hazardous and noxious substances convention as well as the alternative plans being presented; and how those proposals would prevent accidents such as occurred with the foundering of the MV Perentis in March.

The Prime Minister: The new hazardous and noxious substances convention being developed by the International Maritime Organisation's legal committee seeks to establish a liability and compensation regime in respect of incidents arising from the maritime carriage of HNS cargoes. Of the four alternatives being prepared for the legal committee, one places liability solely on the shipowner, another places liability on an international fund financed by cargo interests. The two other alternatives share liability between the shipowner and an international fund. The United Kingdom is preparing proposals on one of these shared alternatives, under which the international fund would purchase insurance cover to meet any compensation claims made against it.

The marking, stowage and carriage of HNS cargoes are already subject to existing international conventions, developed and continually updated by the International Maritime Organisation.

Westland plc

Q113. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Sir Leon Brittan has cleared with No. 10 Downing street his response to the inquiry by the Select Committee on Defence about the explanation of his remarks on Channel 4 television, alleging that Mr. Bernard Ingham and Mr. Charles Powell had approved the disclosure of a Law Officer's letter during the Westland affair.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the many answers given in statements and in reply to questions on this subject.

Rain Forests

Q178. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans she has to give further assistance to countries with tropical rain forests to prevent their destruction.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 May, at column 211.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to consider legislation to return powers ceded to the European Community to the United Kingdom Parliament.

The Prime Minister: No.

Global Warming (Research)

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the contribution by Her Majesty's Government to research and development connected with global warming in the current financial year; how much is planned for future years; and if she will break the figures down by departmental budget.

The Prime Minister: Research on climate change and the possible consequences of global warming is being undertaken on an international scale.

The Government are currently spending over £15 million on research and development directly relevant to the understanding of climate change and global warming and this figure is likely to increase. Details of expenditure by departmental and research council budget are given in the table for 1989-90.

In addition, a number of Departments are undertaking research and development work which will be relevant to the mitigation of and adaption to the consequence of climate change and global warming.

Planned expenditure on climate change research and development in 1989-90

	£ million
NERC	11·2
SERC	2·0
Met. Office	0·75
DOE	0·59
MAFF	1·0
Total	15·54

A major assessment of the scientific position on climate change by United Nations Environment Programme/ World Meteorological Office is under way in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change under United Kingdom chairmanship, and the Government are providing £760,000 over two years in support of this work.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to ban immediately the import and export of all ivory products and seek a similar ban within the European Economic Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Effective action to control the trade in ivory can only be taken on the basis of international co-operation. The Government fully share the concern that has been expressed about the decline in African elephant populations and will be calling for concerted European support for banning trade in new ivory, at the next council meeting of Environment Ministers on 8 June. The first opportunity to secure listing the African elephant in appendix I of the convention on international trade in endangered species, will be at the next conference of CITES parties in October.

Public Bodies

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the public bodies (a) abolished and (b) established since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Between 1979 and 1988, 937 non-departmental public bodies were abolished and 417 were established. A list of the individual bodies involved could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Engagements

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Government Achievements

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will update her answer of 6 May 1988, Official Report, columns 628-44, on the major achievements of Her Majesty's Government since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is well into its eighth successive year of sustained economic growth, at an annual average rate of over 3 per cent. The seven years to 1988 have seen a combination of strong and steady growth not seen since world war 2. The United Kingdom economy has grown faster than all other major European Community countries during the 1980s. Retail price inflation has averaged 5 per cent. since 1983, compared to an average of over 15 per cent. from March 1974 to April 1979.

Business investment in 1988 was the highest ever recorded as a percentage of GDP and in the 1980s as a whole it has grown faster than in all other major European countries; only Japan among the Group of Seven major industrialised nations has had faster business investment growth. Over the past seven years, total investment has grown more than twice as fast as consumption. The level of the United Kingdom's net overseas assets is the largest of all the major nations as a percentage of GDP and in 1986 and 1987 our invisibles surplus was the largest in the world.

Manufacturing productivity has risen at an average annual rate of over 5 per cent. since 1980—faster than in any other major industrialised country, after being at the bottom of the league in the previous two decades. Output per hour worked in the whole economy has also grown steadily so that by 1986 (the latest figure available), it was approaching the average for the Group of Seven and was 50 per cent. higher than that of Japan and only 5 per cent. below that of West Germany. Since 1981, the net rate of return on capital employed by British industry has nearly doubled. Excluding the North sea, the rise in profitability has been even greater. In 1987, non-North sea company profitability rose to over 10 per cent. its highest level since 1969, having risen every year since 1981.

Real take-home pay has risen substantially. For a married man on average earnings with two children, it has increased by about 30 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89. Real personal disposable income is at a record level; in 1988 it was 5 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Pensioners have also shared in this growing prosperity. Their average real incomes rose by 23 per cent. between 1979 and 1986.

The Government have continued to maintain sound public finances. In 1988-89, the Government made a net repayment of public sector debt for the second consecutive year—the first time this has been achieved for forty years —saving over £1½ billion a year in interest payments. Including the £14 billion repayment budgeted for 1989-90, the Government will have repaid roughly a sixth of the total accumulated public debt in three years.

The Government have increased spending on priority programmes while reducing public expenditure as a proportion of GDP. In 1988-89, it was less than 40 per cent. of GDP for the first time in over 20 years. This has been made possible by continued improvements in efficiency in Government services, together with a rigorous reassessment of expenditure priorities.

The Government have made great advances since the introduction of the financial management initiative in 1982 towards the goal of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the Civil Service. All Departments now have arrangements for delegating clear budgets and responsibilities down the management chain, and the flexible pay arrangements now in force in the Civil Service will enable Departments to make further improvements in the use of their human resources. The central instructions on personnel management in the Civil Service are being reviewed with a view to removing unnecessary controls on the discretion of managers in Departments wherever possible.

In 1988, the next steps initiative was launched. This involves setting up, to the greatest extent practicable, discrete management units to perform the executive functions of Government. These agencies will have clearer objectives, greater responsibility and the right tools for the job. The aim is greater value for money for the taxpayer, increased job satisfaction for staff and a better quality of service for the public. So far, five agencies have been established, and well over 30 candidates identified, covering about a third of the Civil Service and including virtually all the operational tasks of the Department of Social Security.

The Government have pursued a substantial programme of tax reform. The aim has been to create a climate in which businesses can thrive and individual initiative and risk-taking are rewarded. The basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 33 to 25 per cent., and the main personal allowances are fully 25 per cent higher in real terms than in 1978-79. Nine higher rates of income tax on earned income running up to 83 per cent. have been replaced by a single higher rate of 40 per cent. A new system of independent taxation for husbands and wives will apply in 1990.

Business taxation has been radically restructured, leaving the main United Kingdom corporation tax rate at 35 per cent., one of the lowest in the industrialised world. Seventeen rates of capital transfer tax running up to 75 per cent. have been replaced by a single rate of 40 per cent. on inheritance; the rates of tax on capital gains have been aligned with those on income and the taxation of purely inflationary capital gains has been ended. The taxation of life assurance will be reformed from 1990. Five major taxes and a number of unjustified tax breaks have been abolished.

Since 1979, the Government have privatised 19 major companies and a number of other enterprises. As a result of this policy and of tax reliefs designed to encourage shareholding, the number of individual shareholders in the United Kingdom, at one in five of the adult population, has trebled since 1979. Nearly 45 per cent. of the state-owned industrial sector which the Government inherited in 1979 has been returned to private enterprise. The privatisation programme is set to continue; legislation is proceeding for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry and the water industry in England and Wales, and the Government have already announced their intention to privatise British Coal in the next Parliament.

The Government have introduced a large number of measures to improve the operation of markets. Pay, price and dividend controls have been abolished, together with controls on foreign exchange, bank lending, hire purchase and new issues, and restrictions on industrial and office development. Incentives have been increased by reductions in tax rates and by the reform of national insurance contributions. The state retirement pensioners' earnings rule will be abolished from October 1989.

Employment in the United Kingdom has risen by almost 3 million since March 1983, to the highest level ever. Unemployment throughout the United Kingdom has fallen over 33 consecutive months by over 1·25 million from its July 1986 peak, which is the longest and largest continuous fall since the second world war. The unemployment rate is now well below the European Community average. It has fallen in all regions of the country, with the biggest falls having occurred in the west midlands and Wales. The number of long-term unemployed (ie, those unemployed for more than a year) in the United Kingdom fell by a record half a million in the two years to January 1989. Unemployment among the under-25s has also been falling very sharply, and is now much lower than in most other European Community countries.

Changes in employment legislation and measures to assist labour mobility have improved the operation of the labour market. Many restrictions on the employment of women have been lifted.

The Government's policies have helped the small firms sector to grow rapidly and to make a substantial contribution to employment and wealth creation. Between 1982 and 1984, about 1 million jobs were created by self employment and by firms employing fewer than 20 employees. Between 1980 and 1986, the number of small firms grew by around 500 per week. In 1987, this figure increased to nearly 900 per week. Self-employment has increased by more than 50 per cent. since 1979 to 3 million as of June 1988. The number of self-employed women has more than doubled in the same period.

The Government's small firms service continues to provide professional advice and support to small firms. The enterprise allowance scheme has helped some 430,000 people in Great Britain to set up in business on their own. In addition, the Government have helped to create a network of 400 local enterprise agencies throughout the United Kingdom to encourage the development of small firms.

The employment service has continued to build on the opportunities for delivering practical and positive help to get unemployed people back to work. In the year to March 1989, the employment service placed 1·9 million people into jobs, of whom 1·5 million had been unemployed. In the same period, some 2·2 million personal interviews were carried out under restart, almost 90 per cent. of them resulting in an offer of positive help from the range of opportunities available, including job clubs and employment training. New client advisers have been introduced into all full-time unemployment benefit offices and offer positive help to the newly unemployed to get them back into jobs as quickly as possible. The employment service has continued to treat as a priority the need to ensure that benefits are properly paid to those who are entitled to them and not to others.

The Government have revolutionised vocational education and training for young people through the technical and vocational education initiative and two-year youth training scheme. TVEI is now a national scheme covering all education authorities. Over 2 million young people have had vocational training under YTS, and a wide range of courses leading towards a vocational qualification is available to all 16 and 17-year-old school leavers. All young people not going into a job or staying in full time education are guaranteed a place on YTS until their 18th birthday.

The Government have successfully introduced employment training, the major new programme for longer-term unemployed people. Over 180,000 people are already training on the programme after just eight months of the programme's operation. The Government have guaranteed the offer of a place on employment training or on the enterprise allowance scheme or in a job club to all those aged between 18 and 24 who have been unemployed for between six and 12 months and also aim to provide a place on employment training for those over 24 who have been unemployed for two years or more.

The Government launched a new service—known as business growth training—last month which will help companies to use training more effectively to improve their performance and their profits. The Government are setting up a network of training and enterprise councils. TECs will contract with Government to plan and deliver training and promote and support the development of small businesses and self-employment within their areas. A national training task force has been set up to assist the Secretary of State for Employment to develop the TECs and to promote greater investment by employers in the skills of the workforce.

Legislation has been passed to protect members against abuses of trade union power, to extend their rights to influence the affairs of their unions, and to restore the balance in industrial relations between managements and unions. In particular, secondary action and secondary picketing have been made unlawful, all statutory support for the closed shop has been removed, and unions have been required to hold ballots before strike action.

The European Community's objective of completing the single market by the end of 1992 has the Government's strong support. Good progress has been made with around 275 single market measures agreed since 1985. To ensure that all businesses in every part of the country are fully prepared to take advantage of the opportunities the single market will bring, the Government launched a major campaign in 1988. As a result, over 90 per cent. of business men are now aware of the significance of 1992 and around 50 per cent. of British business is already taking action or considering steps to prepare for the single market.

The Government have launched the enterprise initiative, with the objective of helping business to acquire the skills and information they need to compete effectively. Since the launch of the initiative in January 1988, over 25,000 applications have been received by DTI for consultancy assistance, with demand spread throughout Britain.

The Government have also launched the export initiative which is aimed at improving the quality and delivery of export services through closer partnership with the private sector, with particular emphasis on helping small and medium-sized firms to obtain expert professional advice on exporting.

The balance of regional policy has been changed so that the Government's enterprise policies are properly reflected in the regions. The Government have encouraged greater competition throughout the economy.

The emphasis of the Government's financial support for industry has shifted to industrial innovation. Support has been concentrated on collaborative research programmes, including the LINK scheme which brings together academic and industrial researchers, and the EUREKA initiative for collaborative research in Europe. Thirteen LINK programmes have been announced.

The Financial Services Act established a statutory framework for self-regulation of the financial services industry in the interests of investor protection, under the Securities and Investments Board and a number of self-regulatory organisations. The operation of the Act has been kept under review and the Government are taking steps to make further improvements in the self-regulatory regime following recent consultations.

The Government have been active to strengthen safeguards against fraud and to ensure that the probity of our financial institutions is maintained without undermining their competitiveness. The Companies Acts 1980 and 1981 strengthened the powers of investigation and the court's powers to disqualify directors for misconduct; and made insider dealing a criminal offence.

The Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, which will come into force later this year, provides a major and comprehensive reform of intellectual property rights. It takes into account the immense technological changes since the 1956 Copyright Act which it will supersede. It will introduce important new rights, such as design right, and provide the appropriate balance between the protection of intellectual property and the needs of those who use the products of creativity.

The Government have responded positively to new developments in radio technology by licensing companies to provide major new services such as cellular radio, which has accumulated over half a million subscribers in the last four years. More recently, the Government have agreed to licence consortia to operate the telepoint public cordless telephone services.

The Government have continued to work to lift the burdens placed on business by regulations and bureaucracy. A third White Paper on deregulation, "Releasing Enterprise" which was published last year recorded some 120 further achievements in 1987-88 and made some 80 proposals for further action, which are being followed up.

The Government strongly supported the launch of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, which took place in 1986 during the United Kingdom presidency. This year it contributed to the successful completion of the round's mid-term review.

The Government have stepped up their attack on urban decay and have given priority to ensuring that inner city residents benefit from growing national prosperity.

We have established 10 urban development corporations in England and one in Wales, which are succeeding in enlisting massive private sector resources in urban regeneration.

The "Action for Cities" initiative, launched in March 1988, brought together a wide range of Government programmes to improve the business environment, encourage further private sector involvement, and improve the quality of life in the inner cities.

The total Government commitment to the "Action for Cities" programmes, which in 1988-89 was around £3 billion, will reach nearly £3·5 billion in 1989-90. Developments since March 1988 include: meetings have been held for local business men and women in cities around the country to encourage them to become involved in regenerating their areas; 30 school-employer compacts are being set up and a further 10 are planned; 20 city technology colleges are being established; three new inner-city task forces have been announced; city grant has attracted over £100 million of private investment to inner city areas; 14 safer cities projects are being established; a broad range of help is being given to developing better sport, arts and leisure facilities and improving the inner city environment; and major improvements in the infrastructure are taking place.

Government policies on taxation and licensing helped to make 1988 the best year for drilling activities in the North sea since exploration began in 1964. The Government are holding the 11th offshore licensing round; 125 applications have been received, making this the second most successful round ever. The oil industry's response confirms the recovery of confidence in the United Kingdom continental shelf.

The Government's policies have also fostered the growth of the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry. In 1988, the total value of orders reported by operators for oil and gas development work was £2·5 billion, 35 per cent. up on 1987.

Productivity of deep mine coal production is now 85 per cent. higher than it was in 1978-79, and is up by 70 per cent. from 1984 levels. In the week ending 25 March 1989, national output per man shift rose to a new record of 4·62 tonnes.

The Government's renewable energy research programme has made substantial progress. In 1988, details of the research strategy up to the year 2000 were published in energy paper 55, and measures to encourage the development of renewable energy were included in the Bills for privatising the electricity supply and water industries.

Domestic gas now costs less in real terms than in 1970, while the price of electricity for domestic consumers has gone down by 12 per cent. in the last five years.

Since the publication of the White Paper "Privatising Electricity" in February 1988, the Government have introduced legislation to reorganise and privatise the electricity supply industry; it has published the licences by which the industry will be regulated; and it has developed plans for the flotation of the industry in England, Wales and Scotland. Substantial progress has been made in reorganising the industry and the Government intend that the new structure will be ready for vesting in the successor companies once Parliament approves the Electricity Bill.

Since 1979, productivity per person has increased by over 53 per cent. in agriculture and almost 38 per cent. in the food and drink manufacturing industry. Prices of food to consumers have risen more slowly than the general price level. Exports of food, feed and alcoholic beverages have almost doubled since 1979.

Reform of the common agricultural policy, to tackle the problems of burgeoning expenditure and surplus production, was significantly advanced by the agreement at the European Council in February 1988 on the application of budgetary discipline to the CAP, notably through the introduction of a legally binding ceiling on CAP market support expenditure, and the introduction or extension of stabilisers in CAP commodity regimes. Stabilisers, which link full levels of support to predetermined quantities of production, and provide for reductions in support if those quantities are exceeded, are intended to act as a disincentive to surplus production and thus to help bring supply and demand into better balance. In 1988-89, stabilisers were triggered in many sectors and are resulting in significant price cuts. The process of CAP reform was pursued in the price fixing settlements in 1988 and 1989, when common prices were generally frozen and intervention was made less attractive. In January 1989, the beef regime was reformed.

The Government have taken many steps to safeguard the position of United Kingdom farmers. Significant green pound devaluations, which considerably improve the competitiveness of United Kingdom agriculture, and which are agreed steps towards the completion of the internal market, were agreed at each of the last two price settlements. The suckler cow premium and expenditure on hill livestock compensatory allowances have been increased.

The Government have introduced further schemes designed to achieve a better balance between agricultural production and the environment, to aid farm diversification and alternative land use, and to encourage farming practices that are beneficial to the landscape and to the conservation of wildlife.

The set-aside cheme, introduced in 1988, provides incentives for the reduction of surplus arable production, while keeping the land which has been set aside in good heart.

The farm woodland scheme is designed to encourage the planting of trees on land previously in agricultural production.

We have established 19 environmentally sensitive areas in the United Kingdom, where payments are made to encourage environmentally beneficial agricultural practices.

Since 1979, a considerable shift in the focus of capital grants has taken place; they are now concentrated more on investments which prevent pollution by farm operations and which help to conserve the landscape and to protect its flora and fauna. The farm and conservation grant scheme, introduced in February 1989, offers grants of 50 per cent for effluent facilities and also grants for a wide range of conservation activities.

The sale, supply and use of pesticides has been brought under statutory control to ensure use in relation to operators, consumers and the environment.

The Government have continued to take action where necessary under the Food Act to safeguard the nation's food supply on the best scientific advice available.

We operate a comprehensive food monitoring and investigative system under the auspicies of the steering group on food surveillance. We have also set up a committee under the chairmanship of Sir Mark Richmond to make recommendations on the microbiological safety of food.

In order to ensure that our legislation can meet the challenge of modern food technology, the Government have also engaged in extensive consultation with industry, enforcement and consumer interests as part of a review of existing food legislation, with a view to legislating as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

The United Kingdom has played a full part in negotiating the directives which form part of the Community's single market programme for harmonising food law. These will remove barriers to trade and benefit both consumers and industry.

In 1979 we set up the Farm Animal Welfare Council which has given us independent and authoritative advice. We have banned veal crates and various mutilations; introduced new legislation on battery hens and on poultry transport and slaughter; and produced on-farm codes for all the major species.

After protracted and difficult negotiations, the Government secured a European Community common fisheries policy settlement in 1983 on terms very favourable to the United Kingdom. Conservation, control and structural measures have all been strengthened as part of that settlement and subsequently. The Salmon Act 1986 strengthened powers to deal with illegal fishing and made improvements in the conservation and management of salmon.

Controls to ensure the protection of the marine environment have been strengthened, and substantial reductions have been achieved in the levels of contaminants in material licensed for disposal at sea.

In the field of transport, the Government have pursued policies designed to ensure that Britain's growing transport needs are met safely, efficiently and with proper respect for the environment.

British Airways and the British Airports Authority have been privatised. The Government have authorised the development of Stansted as London's third airport, encouraged the development of airport facilities in the regions, improved the management of the main local authority airports by transferring them to companies and banned the noisiest aircraft from operating at British airports. The Government have taken steps, domestically and internationally, to intensify aviation security and to increase air traffic control capacity. The Government have strengthened competition on international air routes by negotiating more liberal bilateral arrangements. The Government have secured agreement to packages of liberalisation measures for aviation, shipping and road haulage within the European Community as a first step towards the completion of the internal transport market.

Local bus services outside London have been deregulated. This has resulted in greater competition between operators, the introduction of new types of bus services, and lower costs and subsidies, as well as an increase in the overall provision of bus mileage. The privatisation of the National Bus Company was completed well ahead of schedule, and about half of its subsidiaries were bought by their own managers or employees.

British Rail has been given objectives for improving the quality of its services and for increasing its efficiency through reduced subsidy. In 1987-88, passenger revenue was at the highest level since nationalisation, and British Rail expanded its ambitious investment programme to secure improved services, whilst achieving their target for reduction of public subsidy. The Government have commissioned studies of the requirement for new railway lines in London and have backed a major programme of investment by London Underground, including £700 million to upgrade the Central line and £266 million to implement new safety measures in the wake of the King's Cross fire.

The Government have involved the private sector in the funding of transport projects, for example the Channel tunnel and the Dartford-Thurrock bridge. A recently published Green Paper seeks views on the Government's proposals to facilitate private sector investment in new roads.

The Government have taken measures to encourage the employment of British seafarers aboard British ships. Numerous measures have also been taken to improve ferry safety following the Zeebrugge disaster. The Government have privatised the British Transport Docks Board and have reformed the marine pilotage system.

In England, capital investment in trunk roads has increased by 60 per cent. in real terms since 1979. Some 900 miles of new and improved motorways and other trunk roads have been completed, including 98 new bypasses. The Government have carried out a major review of Britain's trunk road and motorway requirements and have published a White Paper providing for an increase from £5 billion to £12 billion in expenditure on the roads programme. The Government are supporting 360 major local authority road schemes, most of which are aimed at bypassing local communities or relieving them of traffic. The Government's continuing concentration on road and vehicle safety measures has given the United Kingdom the best overall road accident record in the European Community. In 1988, deaths on Britain's roads were the lowest since 1954, despite a fourfold increase in traffic in the same period. The aim is to reduce casualties by one third by the year 2000.

Government expenditure on social security is now at its highest level ever both in cash and real terms. Spending on social security is up by 33 per cent. in real terms from £16·4 billion in 1978-79 to a planned £51·3 billion, almost £1 billion a week, in 1989-90. Between 1978-79 and 1988-89, spending on long-term sick and disabled people has increased by about £3·5 billion in real terms, a real increase of 90 per cent.; total expenditure on benefits for the elderly has gone up by 24 per cent. in real terms; and the real value of family support has risen by 27 per cent. from £6·7 billion to £8·5 billion.

Social security is a major service industry. The Government have long been concerned to improve the quality of service. The reform of social security benefits has contributed to this process by introducing a structure of benefits which is easier to understand and to administer. Our massive computerisation programme will deliver benefits more accurately and more quickly. The relocation of some "backroom" work from some London offices will relieve the pressure on those offices and improve the speed and quality of service to the public in London. Plans have been announced for the running of social security operations as an executive agency or agencies, and for a definition of service. In addition, work is considerably advanced on other initiatives including improved training for staff, in-house style for our premises and a revised management structure which gives local managers greater authority to respond flexibly to the needs of their own local public.

The Government's restructured system of income-related benefits was implemented in 1988 and has enabled us to pursue our policy of targeting help more effectively on those groups most in need. Many low-income families have gained from the introduction of income support, which has proved to be simpler—both to understand and administer—than its predecessor, supplementary benefit. Since its introduction, the Government have been able to use the social fund to provide effective and flexible help, with over 150,000 community care grants to vulnerable people and nearly 900,000 interest-free loans with a combined total expenditure of £166 million in the first year.

A quarter of a million families are now receiving family credit—the benefit for people in work—with average payments of £25 a week. In the first 12 months alone, spending on family credit was about £400 million, which is twice the amount spent on its predecessor, family income supplement. The simpler housing benefit scheme operates more fairly and treats people alike whether in work or not.

This year the Government added an extra 50p a week to the child allowances in income support, family credit and housing benefit adding a further £70 million to expenditure over and above the prices uprating in April. This ensured that families receiving these benefits saw a substantial increase in real terms which they would not have experienced had this money been channelled into child benefit. Child benefit goes to all families regardless of income and any increase in it does not benefit families on income support and family credit, as it is offset in their income-related benefit. From this April, the Government are therefore directing about £200 million extra to the greater benefit of some 3 million children in low income families. From October this year, employees' national insurance contributions will be reformed, and the main disincentive effects of the current system will be removed.

The Government's economic success has enabled pensioners' average incomes to grow by 23 per cent. in real terms over the period 1979 to 1986, and the Government have met their pledge to maintain the real value of the state retirement pension, which is now being paid to one million more pensioners than in 1979, at a cost of over £20 billion this year. The Government have also announced that, from October this year, just under £200 million extra has been set aside for poorer pensioners, through the income support and housing benefit schemes. In all, about 2·6 million pensioners are expected to benefit from this increased expenditure. The abolition of the earnings rule for pensioners from 1 October 1989 will give more choice and flexibility for older people who want to carry on working.

An objective of the Government has been to encourage the spread of occupational and personal pensions, and to give people more choice in how to provide for their retirement. In 1985, the Government gave everyone leaving an employment scheme the right to a fair transfer value to a new employer's scheme or to buy a deferred annuity. The Government also gave members rights to all the information they need to take decisions about their pension. 1988 saw significant changes in the arrangements for pensions: from April 1988, contracting-out of SERPs was made easier and July saw the introduction of the new choice of personal pensions. More than 2 million people have already taken advantage of this opportunity to plan for their retirement by applying for a personal pension.

In England spending on the Health Service is up by 40 per cent. in real terms, from £6·5 billion in 1978-79 to £21·1 billion now. There are over 12,400 more doctors and dentists and over 53,000 more nurses and midwives. Capital spending has increased from £373 million to more than £1·2 billion. Some 300 health building schemes, each worth over £1 million have been started and completed and 500 further schemes are at various stages of planning, design and construction with 140 due to be completed in the next three years. Over 1·25 million more in-patient cases are now being dealt with each year, making a total of more tham 6·5 million.

General managers throughout the Health Service are providing energetic and innovative leadership through speedier and more incisive decision making. Health authorities are continuing to improve efficiency and their cost improvement programmes have yielded savings worth over £700 million in the past five years. New cost improvements in 1989-90 are expected to yield around a further £150 million.

The Government have set up an independent review body to recommend on nurses' pay. All six of the review body's reports, including the 1989 report, have been implemented, since 1979, nurses will have received on average a 44 per cent. real term increase in their pay.

A number of initiatives have been taken to improve the health and wellbeing of the population. We are the world leaders in introducing a breast cancer screening service and the first country within the European Community to have a comprehensive cervical cancer screening service based on computerised call and recall. Considerable progress has been made on improving the uptake of childhood immunisation and last October, the mumps, measles and rubella programme was announced which marks the most significant change in immunisation policy in the past 20 years. The Government have developed a comprehensive strategy in response to the threat of AIDS and have taken, and will continue to take, all necessary measures to prevent and contain the spread of the virus.

Waiting lists are now some 8 per cent. lower than in 1979. Districts with waiting list problems have been targeted with Government funding of £86 million in England to tackle waiting list black spots. This funding will allow treatment of some 300,000 more in-patients and day patients and 200,000 out-patients by the end of the current financial year.

In social services, there have been increases in places in training centres and community homes for mentally handicapped people. There are more home help staff, more social work staff, more places in day centres for elderly people, and more places in residential and nursing homes.

The White Paper "Working For Patients" set out proposals for the most far reaching changes in the history of the NHS. The aim is to build on its record of achievement to provide even better service for patients and to raise the performance of all hospitals and GP practices to that of the best. This will be achieved through the introduction of measures designed to delegate responsibility and to promote patient choice.

The Government have secured the agreement of the profession's negotiators on the basis for a contract for GPs. This new contract will introduce health promotion and illness prevention as major objectives of service provision and will relate GPs pay more closely to their performances.

Since 1979, substantial progress has been made in reforming the structure and financial basis of local authorities to make them more accountable and responsive to the needs of their local electorates, and to give better value for money in the provision of local services. The structure of local government in England has been simplified and improved with the abolition of an unnecessary tier of government in Greater London and the metropolitan areas. The Audit Commission for England and Wales was established in 1983 and has already made great progress in identifying opportunities for improving value for money in local government, some of which are beginning to show results. Legislation on competition is ensuring that local authorities in Great Britain subject the provision of an increasing range of their services to the discipline of competitive tendering.

The Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local authority business identified a number of measures needed to improve local authority procedures and avoid abuses, and the Government are now legislating to implement many of the key recommendations. Measures on local government finance have restrained the growth of local authority expenditure in Great Britain, particularly in some of the more extravagant high-spending authorities. The Local Government Finance Act 1988 makes provision for the abolition of domestic rates in England and Wales and their replacement by a fairer and more broadly based community charge from 1 April 1990. The same Act includes provisions to remedy the uneven burden of non-domestic rates on businesses through the establishment of a nationally determined uniform business rate.

In housing, the Government introduced the first statutory charter of rights for public sector tenants including the right to buy. Since then, over 1 million tenants in Great Britain have bought their homes. The stock of owner occupied dwellings in Britain has increased by 3 million; more people own their homes than ever before; and 65 per cent. of all dwellings are owner-occupied. There has been a net increase in the stock as a whole of about 1·8 million, more than enough to keep pace with the growth in the number of households over the period.

The Government's estate action programme has helped local authorities with over 200 schemes on rundown council estates in England. A scheme of assistance has been introduced for owners of defective houses previously in the public sector throughout Great Britain, and good progress has been made. Measures have been introduced to strengthen the rights of leaseholders living in private blocks of flats.

The Housing Act 1988 aims to broaden the choice open to tenants and to encourage more private investment in housing in England and Wales; it deregulates rents in the independent rented sector; provides the basis for an expansion of the housing association movement; allows for the establishment of housing action trusts in some of the most rundown areas of local authority housing; and provides all secure local authority tenants with the opportunity to transfer to new landlords approved by the Housing Corporation.

The Local Government and Housing Bill now before Parliament maintains this progress: it introduces a new capital finance system permitting allocations to local authorities to be better tailored to need, a new housing subsidy system designed to impose better financial discipline, and provisions for targeting renovation grants on housing most in need of improvement and people most in need of assistance.

The Government have created a unified inspectorate of pollution for England and Wales with a remit to develop an integrated approach to pollution control. Following a successful initiative in Europe to bring to an end the addition of lead to petrol, the maximum lead content of petrol has been cut by 60 per cent., and a reduction in duty has made unleaded petrol some 10p a gallon cheaper than leaded four-star. Unleaded petrol is now available at over 7,700 sites, and use of the fuel doubled last month to 14 per cent. Following the successful London conference on the protection of the ozone layer, the signatories of the Montreal protocol to the Vienna convention have agreed to phase out the production and consumption of the CFCs controlled by the protocol as soon as possible, and not later than 2000.

The Government have taken steps to reduce the pollution of our rivers, estuaries and beaches. The Water Bill now before Parliament will establish a National Rivers Authority, strengthen the legal framework for ensuring water quality standards and establish a system of price regulation and consumer protection for the water industry. In 1987, the United Kingdom chaired the North sea conference, which produced an important package of measures to safeguard and enhance the quality of the North sea. We are applying the measures agreed to all our seas.

The Government have made substantial progress in securing the future of the natural heritage. In Great Britain over 5,000 sites of special scientific interest have been notified or renotified as part of the implementation of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; this process is now 85 per cent complete. In addition, 33 special protection areas have been designated throughout the United Kingdom under the European birds directive, and 40 wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention.

The Government have been active in improving the care and management of our national heritage. We have established two powerful new forces for conservation—the National Heritage Memorial Fund in 1980 and the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission (English Heritage) in 1984. A major resurvey of listed buildings in England is virtually complete.

The Government have taken a wide range of steps to simplify and improve the planning system and to speed up its operation, while protecting and enhancing the environment in town and country. The area of approved green belt in England has more then doubled since 1979; the annual acreage of agricultural land taken for development in England and Wales in the 1980s is less than one third of the levels seen in the 1960s and early 1970s; and nearly one half of land for new housing development in England is either redeveloped land or vacant land within urban areas.

After a period of stagnation, the construction industry has enjoyed a seven year period of sustained growth. In 1988, output—at £40 billion in cash terms—was its highest ever.

The Government have maintained central support for arts activities, and have introduced a number of measures to encourage greater self-reliance among arts institutions. There has been a significant upsurge in business sponsorship—the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme has brought nearly £25 million of new money into the arts in five years. Major progress has been made with the building of the new British Library at St. Pancras and there have been major expansion schemes at some national museums and galleries, including the Clore gallery at the Tate, the new Tate gallery in Liverpool, the national gallery's Sainsbury wing, the theatre museum at the V and A, and the redevelopment of the imperial war museum.

The Government have continued their policies to improve all aspects of the education system in England and Wales; a new 16-plus examination system, the GCSE, has been introduced, as have the new AS-levels which will broaden studies for 16 to 18-year-olds. The technical and vocational education initiative is augmenting practical elements in the 14 to 18 curriculum. In higher education, record numbers of students were admitted last year and plans are being taken forward to continue the shift towards science and engineering and other key subjects for our continuing economic success. The Education Reform Act 1988 sets a new course for the future. The national curriculum is being introduced from this September; assessment and testing are being taken forward; more open enrolment and new types of school will widen the choice of schools open to parents; local management of schools and colleges is being introduced; the new polytechnic and colleges sector of high education has been established; university funding arrangements have been reformed.

The Government have increased support to the science base in response to the recommendations from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. There has been a parallel withdrawal of funds from 'near-market" research, which is judged to be properly the responsibility of industry.

Since May 1979, the Government have increased the number of police officers in England and Wales by nearly 14,000 to over 125,000 and the number of civilians supporting the police by about 8,000 to over 42,500. Expenditure has been increased by about 55 per cent. in real terms over the same period, and the Government continue to work closely with the service to ensure that these resources are used to the best possible effect. The powers of the police to deal with public disorder have been strengthened. Over 66,000 neighbourhood watch schemes are now in operation in Great Britain. Fourteen cities are involved in the safer cities programme to reduce crime and the fear of crime. The new national crime prevention programme organisation Crime Concern has been established and is working with the police, other public agencies and private business to develop and encourage crime prevention activity. An independent Crown prosecution service is now in operation throughout England and Wales. Twenty-four senior and 34 junior attendance centres have been opened.

The largest prison building programme this century is under way. Out of a total of 28 new prisons planned for England and Wales, eight are already open and the remainder are at various stages of planning and construction. A major programme of refurbishment and modernisation is in progress. New staff working practices have been introduced. The number of uniformed prison officers in England and Wales has been increased by 45 per cent. and the ratio of staff to inmates improved.

Measures have been taken to ensure that the terms of imprisonment served by violent offenders fully reflect society's abhorrence of their crimes. Government assistance to the victims' support movement has been greatly expanded: £11 million will be provided over the next three financial years to help local schemes. The Government have continued to develop an overall strategy for countering drug misuse and illicit trafficking. The national drugs intelligence unit has been created and strengthened. Seventeen drugs wings, with an additional 229 officers to man them, have been added to the regional crime squads in England and Wales to target major drug traffickers. The Video Recordings Act has brought "video nasties" under control.

Legislation has also been put through for data protection; to provide more rigorous control of animal experimentation; to provide a framework for the development of broadcasting by satellite and cable television (including the establishment of the Welsh fourth channel); to set out a new framework for police powers, for providing safeguards for the citizen and for handling complaints against the police; to control the possession and sale of alcohol in connection with football matches; to provide for the establishment of the serious fraud office, now in operation, and to make other improvements in the investigation, prosecution and trial of fraud offences; to provide comprehensive new powers to investigate, restrain and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking, where the Government are working for international agreements to make such powers more generally effective; to improve controls on the possession of firearms and shotguns; to remove outdated restrictions in liquor licensing law; to enable the United Kingdom to participate more effectively in the international fight against crime, including a major reform of extradition law; to make provision for courts to order the confiscation of the proceeds of profitable crime; to provide for unduly lenient sentences to be reviewed; to create a statutory right for the victims of crime to receive compensation; to tighten the law on possession of knives and to ban the sale of offensive weapons which have no legitimate use; to strengthen the jury system; to reform the law on official secrets by replacing section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 with provisions protecting just six classes of official information; to make provision for the interception of communications, sent by means of post or by means of public telecommunications systems, with the appointment of a commissioner and provision for complaints to an independent tribunal; and to put the Security Service on a statutory basis with the appointment of a commissioner and provision for complaints to an independent tribunal.

The Government have played a major role in developing international co-operation in the fight against terrorism and have strengthened police powers under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. We continue our policy of fair but firm immigration control. The Immigration Act 1988 corrected a number of weaknesses in the existing legislation.

Proposals for new broadcasting legislation designed to promote greater choice and competition without detriment to programme standards and quality have recently been published in the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 1990s".

The Government have continued the reform of family law; have legislated to remove the legal disadvantages of children born outside marriage; and have brought schemes into effect to combat the evils of child abduction both within the United Kingdom and throughout the world. The Government have introduced the Children Bill which provides a single, coherent code covering the care and upbringing of children. It will enable steps to be taken towards a single integrated jurisdiction over all types of children's cases and will facilitate procedural reforms.

The Government have embarked on a programme of reforms in the administration of civil justice in England and Wales which will improve access to justice for the public by speeding up, simplifying and reducing the cost of civil proceedings.

The Legal Aid Act 1988 established a board to administer the legal aid scheme and to ensure that it operates as efficiently and effectively as possible. The Legal Aid Board assumed these functions on 1 April 1989.

The Government have simplified conveyancing, extended the areas in which titles have to be registered, and have continued the major programme of the simplification and consolidation of our statute law.

A substantial increase in resources has enabled the capability of the armed forces to be strengthened. The Government played their full part in implementing the NATO twin-track decision to modernise intermediate-range nuclear weapons while seeking to achieve an arms control agreement, and this policy has been vindicated by the intermediate-range nuclear forces treaty. Increased efficiency is being pursued by the continuing transfer of resources from the support areas to the front line, and by introducing increased competition in defence contracts and promoting collaboration with our international partners. Major reorganisation of the headquarters structure of the Ministry of Defence has been introduced.

The Government have maintained Britain's firm commitment to national defence and the NATO Alliance. At the same time, the Government have worked determinedly for a more stable security relationship between East and West, seeking verifiable reductions in nuclear and conventional weapons and a global ban on chemical weapons. The Government have been active in building up, and setting priorities for, an East-West dialogue on arms control.

The Government played a leading role in the Stockholm conference on European arms control which was successfully concluded in September 1986, and give full support to our United States allies in their successful negotiations with the USSR over INF. British Ministers and representatives have placed an active part in the preparation and conduct of the two sets of talks recently started in Vienna.

The Government have worked consistently to strengthen the Western European Union as part of their effort to promote closer European defence co-operation. Britain presided over the accession to the organisation last year of Spain and Portugal.

The Government have also consistently sought greater East-West co-operation in the settlement of regional conflicts. They maintained steady pressure for the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan. They are now pursuing an active dialogue with the Soviet Union on other regional issues.

The Government have worked vigorously to ensure that human rights are fully respected in Eastern Europe. The Government played an active part in the successful conclusion to the Vienna meeting of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe, which closed in January with substantive new agreements on human rights. The Government have also encouraged steps towards economic and political reform in the eastern countries.

Within the European Community, the Government reached agreement at Fontainebleu in 1984 that the United Kingdom should pay a fairer share of the EC budget. In the United Kingdom presidency of 1986, and at the Brussels European Council in February 1988, the Government secured major reforms of the common agricultural policy, including a binding ceiling on agricultural spending and an automatic cost-cutting regime for all commodities.

The Government have helped to establish the completion of the single European market by 1992 as the Community's top priority. They have worked consistently to ensure that this market will be as free as possible from internal barriers and regulation and will be open to the outside world, in order to encourage competition, enterprise and efficiency and to increase commercial opportunities for British industry. The Government have championed liberalising measures in Europe, such as freer movement consistent with national security; mutual recognition of professional qualifications; abolition of exchange controls; and cheaper air fares. In the GATT and other international economic forums, the Government have worked to strengthen the open world economic system, including through the current Uruguay round.

The Government supported the entry of Greece, Spain and Portugal into the Community, in order to strengthen their democracy and prosperity, and to reinforce NATO. The Government have actively promoted close EC political co-operation, including the initiative for the provisions in the Single European Act, which put this co-operation on a treaty basis for the first time.

Rhodesia was brought to legal independence as the Republic of Zimbawe in 1980. The Government resolutely upheld and continue to defend the right of the Falkland islanders to live in peace under a Government of their own choosing. An agreement with China about the future of Hong Kong was ratified in 1985 and good progress has since been made with its implementation. The Gibraltar border has been reopened and the Government have established a negotiating framework with Spain aimed at overcoming differences over the rock.

The Government have maintained their commitment to the Commonwealth. With our Commonwealth and European partners, the Government have worked towards ending apartheid in South Africa by peaceful means. We have extended significant assistance to black communities within South Africa. The Government have also worked to strengthen the security and stability of South Africa's neighbours through the provision of substantial development assistance and military training.

At the United Nations and elsewhere, the Government have supported the rule of international law, peaceful settlement of disputes, and respect for human rights. Through the Armilla patrol, Britain has fulfilled its long-standing commitment to protect merchant shipping in the Gulf. As one of the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, Britain made a significant contribution to the initiation and adoption of Resolution 598 on the Iran/Iraq conflict and the subsequent ceasefire last year. The Government have been active in developing closer co-operation between the Five on this and other issues, such as Namibia. The Government have supported the successful United States-led negotiations on Namibia's future; and the role of the United Nations in bringing the territory peacefully to independence. The Government have also worked for financial and administrative reform in the United Nations.

The Government have promoted international co-operation to combat terrorism and drug-trafficking. With the World Health Organisation, the Government organised the 1988 London summit of Ministers of Health on programmes for AIDS prevention. The Government have also been in the forefront of international efforts to protect the environment. With the United Nations environment programme, the Government organised the recent London international conference on saving the ozone layer.

The Government have maintained a substantial and effective aid programme, totalling over £12·5 billion in the period 1979-88. While the bulk of our bilateral aid has been focused on the poorest countries, the Government have provided long-term help to nearly 130 developing countries. The Government have responded swiftly and generously to appeals for emergency aid to sub-Saharan Africa and elsewhere and have taken the lead in promoting measures to relieve sub-Saharan African countries of their official debts.

The White Paper "Scottish Enterprise" put forward proposals to integrate the functions of the Scottish Development Agency and the Training Agency into a single body, Scottish Enterprise, and to provide training and to promote enterprise through a network of employer-led local agencies responding directly to local needs.

Unemployment in Scotland has fallen in 24 of the past 25 months and by 90,000 since January 1987. Manufacturing productivity in Scotland increased by 5·4 per cent. per annum between 1979 and 1989. Between June 1983 and June 1988 the civilian workforce in employment increased by 106,000; and in 1988 alone the increase was 66,000. The number of self-employed increased by 66,000 between June 1981 and June 1988, compared with virtually no change in the three decades to 1981.

In 1988, there was a net growth of over 3,400 in company registrations in Scotland. Between 1 January 1980 and 1 January 1988, the number of companies registered in Scotland increased by some 20,000, or by over a half. Between 1979 and 1989, the output of the Scottish electronics industry increased by a factor of 3·7.

Inward investment planned by companies since the inception of the Government's Locate in Scotland programme totals some £3 billion and is associated with the intended creation or safeguarding of 60,000 jobs; the final employment outcome is, on past experience, likely to be about two thirds of the planned level.

Expenditure by the Highlands and Islands Development Board in 1988-89 was £42 million, 5·5 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979-80. The success of the Highlands and Islands Development Board is indicated by an estimated 1 per cent. increase in the area's population since 1981. The Government have successfully maintained the area's eligibility for support from European Community structured funds and have obtained agreement to a programme of European Community support of £73 million to assist development of the area's infrastructure.

1988-89 saw the largest ever single project in a Scottish new town come on stream, with investment of over £200 million by Kymmene Stromberg in the new Caledonian paper mill in Irvine. Take-up of industrial space in all five towns was at an all-time high and private sector investment in both industry and housing continued to rise to record new levels.

Owner-occupation among Scots has increased significantly, from 35 per cent. to over 44 per cent. A major contribution to this increase has been the 150,000 tenants who have bought their homes from the public sector landlord under the right to buy legislation introduced in 1980, or through voluntary sales. The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 introduced a statutory right for public sector tenants to transfer to new landlords approved by Scottish Homes.

The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 has established a new housing development agency, Scottish Homes. The new agency will play a key role in revitalising Scotland's housing and will promote freedom of choice for tenants. The volume of applications for home improvement and repairs grants has increased substantially. The Government have enabled the number of houses let by housing associations in Scotland to increase sixfold since 1979.

The Government have achieved their objective, on the timetable they originally set, of abolishing domestic rates in Scotland with effect from 1 April this year, and replacing them with a new community charge.

Measures have been taken to speed up the town and country planning system in Scotland to allow the establishment of simplified planning zones and to meet the particular planning requirements of high technology industries, small businesses, private house builders and major retail development. The protection of the landscape and wildlife habitats has been strengthened. Major initiatives have been taken to reform and simplify the building control system to reduce restrictions while maintaining public safeguards. Access for disabled persons to public buildings has been greatly improved by reforms to building regulations.

The deregulation of local bus services in Scotland has been achieved with service levels maintained overall and improvements in many areas. The Government have stimulated innovation through competition while cutting subsidies. We have also introduced legislation to privatise the Scottish Bus Group. Since 1979, over £800 million has been invested in motorways and trunk roads in Scotland. Thirty bypasses, relieving communities of through traffic, have been opened.

Major reforms have been introduced to the education system in Scotland. The Education (Scotland) Act 1981 gave parents the right to choose their children's school, and since then over 140,000 placing requests have been made, with over 93 per cent. of them being successful. That Act also introduced the assisted places scheme to widen educational opportunity and parental choice; 2,660 children benefited from the scheme in 1988-89, and it is now being extended to assist up to 3,000 pupils. The School Boards (Scotland) Act 1988 gave parents in Scotland the opportunity for the first time to become involved in running their children's schools. By the end of October this year, each school in Scotland will have its own board, with a majority of parent members.

The school examination system is being modernised, with the introduction of standard grade and the associated revision of the post-16 examinations. The technical and vocational education initiative is being extended throughout Scotland. Measures are being taken to revise the school curriculum for ages 5-14, to improve the assessment of pupils, including nationally standardised testing in key elements of English and mathematics at ages eight and 12, and to better inform parents of their children's progress. The Self-Governing Schools, etc. (Scotland) Bill, now before Parliament, will enable parents in Scotland to seek self-governing status for schools outside local authority control, and so will expand the educational choice available and improve the standards of educational provision for all. The Bill also provides for the establishment of technology academies, with private sector sponsorship.

The participation rates of young people in higher education has reached the highest ever levels. Radical changes in further education have increased the take-up of vocational training at all levels. The grant-aided higher education colleges have been reconstituted to give them greater freedom and incentives to earn external income and to increase student numbers. The Government-backed Scottish wider access programme has been launched to encourage collaboration between educational institutions to widen access to higher education, and provision has been made for a statutory Scottish committee of the Universities Funding Council.

Police manpower in Scotland has increased, and, in order to release police officers for operational duties, the Government are encouraging civilianisation of posts wherever possible. Increased attention has been devoted to crime prevention.

The Government have intensified the campaign against drug misuse in Scotland. Drug wings have been established in the Scottish crime squad and all eight Scottish police forces now have a specialised drug squad or unit. Since 1979, a total of 60 major hospital developments have been completed in Scotland, providing 6,747 beds and 521 day places. A further 31 schemes are in planning, under construction or being commissioned which will provide a further 3,452 beds. In addition to the public education campaigns on AIDS, the Government have this year made over £12 million available to health boards throughout Scotland in recognition of the extra burdens which AIDS places upon them, including funding for three special AIDS units in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Dundee. The Government have supported several projects for research on HIV infection and AIDS and have provided funding for studies into the incidence of AIDS in Scotland. In addition, the Government encourage and support voluntary sector initiatives in the AIDS field in Scotland.

Since 1987, £13 million has been allocated to health boards in Scotland for special action to reduce the number of people waiting for treatment and the time they have to wait. In the 18 months to September 1988, the number of people on waiting lists in Scotland fell by around 10 per cent.

With the publication in November 1988 of the SHARPEN report (Scottish health authorities review of priorities for the eighties and nineties) and the booklet "The Scottish Health Service", priorities have been set for the Health Service in Scotland which emphasise the care of the elderly with mental disability; community care of the mentally ill, the mentally handicapped and the elderly; preventive medicine and the younger physically disabled.

Competitive tendering of ancillary services in the NHS in Scotland is expected to release £25 million over the next three to four years from the contracts so far awarded. These savings will be reinvested in direct patient care.

The health capital budget in Scotland is up by one third this year alone, and a substantial part of this increase is due to the incentive which allows health boards to keep all the proceeds of the sale of redundant buildings and land. This year, hospital building will benefit by £25 million from these receipts, more than three times the estimate made before the incentive was introduced. This money will be ploughed back into the Health Service to provide buildings and equipment for patient care.

Special assistance is being made available to farmers in the north of Scotland to help restore floodbanks damaged in the exceptional floods earlier this year.

The Government's commitment to the outlying areas of Scotland is demonstrated by the Western Isles integrated development programme which ended its five-year span in 1987 and provided £56 million to improve socioeconomic conditions in the area, and by the five-year agricultural development programme for the other Scottish islands which started in 1988. This programme provides £38 million to increase the efficiency of agricultural businesses without adding to overall agricultural production.

Five environmentally sensitive areas have been designated in Scotland, under which farmers can receive payments for agreeing to farm in a conservation-friendly way. These areas are in different parts of the country and include the Machair ESA in the crofting area of Scotland. The Government remain fully committed to the expansion of forestry and introduced two new grant schemes—the woodland grant scheme and the farm woodland scheme —in 1988.

The Government's commitment to promote art and culture in Scotland has resulted in major new galleries for the Burrell collection in Glasgow and for modern art in Edinburgh. A new home for the Royal Scottish academy of music and drama was opened in 1988 and the first phase of a new building for the national library of Scotland in Edinburgh will be opened later this year; the second phase will be completed in 1994.

The Government have done more than any previous Administration to secure the future of the Gaelic language. A new specific grants scheme for Gaelic education, designed to improve the quality of Gaelic teaching and curriculum in schools, was introduced in 1986. Grants under the scheme amount to £0·85 million in the current year. In addition, substantially increased resources have been allocated to a range of organisations providing support for Gaelic language and culture.

In Northern Ireland, the Government have pursued the policy of combating terrorism, within the rule of law, by the most effective means available. In the implementation of this policy, the security forces have conducted themselves with great courage and skill; many terrorists have been apprehended, much material has been recovered, and a large number of terrorist operations have been frustrated, which would otherwise have added to the tragic toll of death and suffering.

The Government have continued to implement the Anglo-Irish Agreement, and have used its machinery further to improve security co-operation.

The Government's efforts to find an agreed basis on which greater responsibility can be devolved to the elected representatives of the people of Northern Ireland have continued.

A key objective of Government policy is to regenerate the private sector in Northern Ireland and release the region's potential for economic growth. To this end, the industrial development organisations in Northern Ireland have promoted over 75,000 jobs, while the youth training programme has provided opportunities for an estimated 84,300 entrants with some 32,000 man years of work provided by the action for community employment scheme. At any time, some 29,000 persons are benefiting from a wide range of employment and training resources. Legislation has been introduced to secure equality of opportunity in employment.

Belfast city centre has been revitalised both in terms of housing and commerce. Housing conditions have shown improvement, with a considerable reduction in the level of unfitness and a significant increase in the level of owner occupation.

In July 1988, the Government launched the "making Belfast work" programme designed to address the social, economic and environmental issues in the most disadvantaged area of Belfast. In addition to substantial mainstream programmes, a further £65 million has been made available in the period 1988-89 to 1991-92.

Proposals have been developed, with a view to early implementation, for the reform of the educational system to improve educational standards and for the provision of new opportunities and incentives for existing schools seeking to promote integrated education.

Substantial programmes have been maintained in Northern Ireland for agriculture, health and personal social services, environmental services and social security.

Since the establishment of WINvest in 1983, Wales has secured some 290 inward investment projects from overseas companies promising some 36,000 new or safeguarded jobs and involving almost £2 billion of capital investment. Notable successes include Ford's £700 million investment at Bridgend and Swansea and Bosch's £100 million project at Miskin.

Wales, with 5 per cent. of the United Kingdom's population, achieved, in terms of related new jobs, 20 per cent. of all inward investment into the United Kingdom in 1987 and 22 per cent. in 1988. This compares with 6 per cent. in 1979.

Since 1979, the Government have committed nearly £250 million—at today's prices—to the land reclamation programme in Wales, one of the largest and most sustained programmes in Europe, and the Welsh Development Agency has constructed over 11·5 million sq ft of factory space, with a job potential of about 35,000.

The success of the Development Board for Rural Wales is indicated by an estimated 4·5 per cent. increase in the population of the area covered by the Board between 1979 and 1987.

Three enterprise zones set up by the Government are located in Wales: at Swansea, Delyn and the Milford Haven waterway. Over 8,500 people are currently employed in these zones, of whom 3,600 are in new jobs.

The Government have supported the rapid spread of local enterprise agencies in Wales, of which there are now 24. Such agencies have had £9·7 million of central Government assistance and they estimate that they have helped to create over 20,000 jobs.

Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales has fallen in each of the last 34 consecutive months to a total in April 1989 of 105,000—a fall of 66,900 or 5·3 percentage points from 14·1 per cent. to 8·8 per cent.

The number of self-employed in Wales is currently 148,000—a substantial increase on the 1981 figure.

Since their introduction in 1982, urban development grants of around £37 million have been awarded to 75 projects throughout Wales. These will bring forward a total private sector investment of nearly £173 million. The scheme has now been superseded by a simplified grant mechanism, urban investment grant, which was introduced on 1 April 1989. To date, 180 inquiries have been received and grants of just over £1 million have been awarded on two projects.

As part of the Government's policy for inner cities, the Cardiff Bay development corporation was established in 1987 to regenerate the urban areas of south Cardiff. The corporation has produced a comprehensive regeneration strategy for its area; acquired some 300 acres of land; completed site investigations for major land reclamation schemes; and completed several environmental and community projects. In 1989-90, some £22 million will be made available to the corporation.

In June 1988, the Government launched a three-year programme of action designed to improve economic, environmental and social conditions in the south Wales valleys. Expenditure on key activities involving the promotion of investment, the creation of jobs and environmental improvement in the valleys is expected to total some £500 million over the life of the programme, and to help stimulate private sector investment of around £1 billion. In the first seven months of the programme unemployment in the valleys has fallen faster than elsewhere in Wales, by over 5,000 since the programme was launched. Factory lettings by the Welsh Development Agency in the valleys have been at record levels since the valleys programme was announced, running at two new lettings a week in the first nine month of 1988-89.

The WDA has made great progress in its factory building programme—some 492,500 sq ft of factory space was started in 1988-89, against a target of 450,000 sq ft. The WDA's derelict land clearance programme is well under way and will lead to the clearance of some 2,500 acres over the life of the valleys programme. 3Is (Investors in Industry) now expects to provide over £5 million of venture capital for valleys investments in 1988-89 compared with the earlier forecast of £2·5 million. Welsh Office offers of regional selective assistance and regional development grant made up to the middle of January 1989 have covered projects involving 7,500 new jobs and private investment of £180 million. 21 projects have been supported by the Welsh Development Agency under its valleys small loan scheme.

In addition, the valleys enterprise loan scheme has funded 26 projects at a total cost of £315,500, and the community enterprise scheme has funded 11 projects amounting to £70,000.

Urban programme allocations totalling nearly £18 million for 1989-90 have been directed to the valleys area —over 65 per cent. more than in 1987-88, the year before the valleys programme was launched. The Wales tourist board has launched the first phase of a major new marketing campaign designed to attract more visitors to the valleys. Health services in the valleys have received support, with two new health centres at Blaengwynfi and Gwaun-Cae-Gurwen. Ten more valleys health projects will be funded in 1989-90.

Owner-occupation has increased from 59 per cent. of housing stock in 1979 to 69 per cent. Almost 71,000 public sector dwellings have been sold to their tenants under the right to buy and voluntary terms since 1980, and over 57,000 new homes have been built for sale. Since 1979, over 15,000 dwellings have been provided by housing associations for sale or rent to help people in housing need. Housing for Wales (Tai Cymru) was set up under the Housing Act 1988. Between 1979 and 1986, the proportion of Welsh households lacking basic amenities more than halved and this progress has been continued over the last three years. Over 162,000 home improvement grant schemes for private sector dwellings have been completed since July 1979, with a value of £479 million. In the same period, £446 million has been spent on the renovation of local authority housing stock. Since 1982, over 8,300 dwellings have been improved under enveloping schemes.

Expenditure on the health services in Wales has risen by almost 45 per cent. after allowing for general inflation between 1978-79 and 1989-90. Nearly £700 million at current prices will have been invested in the capital estate of the hospital and community health services in the period April 1979 to March 1990: five major hospitals have been completed with a sixth due for completion before the end of this year. The number of staff directly concerned with patient care has increased by over 21 per cent. since 1979, and 28 per cent. more in-patients and 21 per cent. more out-patients were treated in 1987 than in 1979.

Current expenditure on education in Wales, excluding school meals and milk, was provisionally 10·9 per cent. higher in real terms in 1987-89 than in 1978-79. Pupil numbers dropped by 16·1 per cent. in the same period; and expenditure per nursery/primary pupil rose by over 27 per cent. from £792 to £1,004, and per secondary pupil by over 36 per cent., from £1,090 to £1,488, their best ever levels. The number of students on courses of advanced further education in the public sector rose from 9,000 in 1979-80 to 14,500 in 1987-88, an increase of 61 per cent.

Since 1979, almost £900 million has been spent on providing some 140 miles of motorway and trunk roads in Wales. In addition over £240 million has been spent on structural renewal and on general maintenance. The road programmes for the 1990s have been set out in the new edition of "Roads in Wales" published on 10 April 1989. Since 1979-80, overall net resources to the WTB have increased by 185 per cent., including an increase of 135 per cent. in support of projects creating almost 4,000 jobs.

The Government's direct financial support for the Welsh language has increased annually from £0·2 million in 1979-80 to around £4·6 million in 1989-90. Since the Government decision to set up the Welsh fourth television channel in 1982, S4C has been an outstanding success in both artistic and employment terms. In July 1988, the Government established the Welsh Language Board to advise on all matters relating to the use of Welsh in the public and private sector. A major expansion scheme at the national museum of Wales is in progress.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much was spent in each health region in each of the last three years on the care and treatment of patients suffering from (a) schizophrenia and (b) all mental illness; and what percentage each figure was of total expenditure on health services;

(2) what is the current annual cost per patient to the National Health Service of the care and treatment of patients suffering from (a) mental illness and (b) schizophrenia psychoses;

(3) how much was spent in the last year on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia; and what percentage that figure represented of total expenditure on (a) mental and (b) all health services.

Mr. Freeman: Information specifically on the total expenditure incurred on and the treatment costs of patients suffering from schizophrenia is not collected centrally. For costing purposes all hospitals are classified into one or other of a series of standard types which reflect the principal use to which their beds are allocated and costing returns in respect of community health services show expenditure relating to the main areas of activity only. Thus, the table shows the available information by region on hospitals categorised as "Mental Illness" for the financial years 1984-85 to 1986-87, but excludes the growing volume of activity in psychiatric units in acute and other hospitals and within community health services which is not identifiable separately.

The average cost in England of maintaining an in-patient in hospitals categorised as "Mental Illness" was £44·05 per day in 1986-87—equivalent to some £16,000 per annum.

We intend to publish a volume in the series "Health Services Costing Returns" covering the financial year 1987-88 this summer.

Notes:
1. The revenue expenditure for the mental illness hospitals includes expenditure on in-patients, out-patients and day patients.
2. The figures used for total revenue expenditure are for hospital and community health services revenue expenditure incurred by regional and district health authorities. HCHS includes hospital, community, ambulance, blood transfusion and other services.

Nurses

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his written answer of 10 May to the hon. Member for Newham, South concerning a charge made by the nurse central clearing house (NCCH) for pre-registration application of £6, Official Report, column 454 he will consider re-imbursing that body for the costs incurred, as part of his responsibilities for encouraging recruitment for the nursing profession.

Mr. Mellor: No. There is no evidence that the charge made by the nurses central clearing house has an adverse effect on recruitment.

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number of regrading appeals for nurses are still under consideration; and how long on average cases are taking to settle.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage of labour turnover nationally per annum in the nursing profession within the National Health Service; and whether he will provide figures for the best, worst and average regions.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have information of this nature centrally at present. Information on the number of nurses joining and leaving National Health Service employment is however now being collected, and should be available later this year.

Halton District Health Authority

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage increase in the number of day case admissions in Halton district health authority over the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: During the financial year 1987-88, 3,331 day cases were treated by Halton district health authority. This is an increase of 29 per cent. over the 1986 figure of 2,575 day cases. Some patients previously classified as a day case may now be classified as a ward attender. There were 688 ward attenders in Halton during 1987-88.

Snapethorpe Hospital, Wakefield

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the secretary of State for Health what discussions (a) his Department, (b) the Yorkshire regional health authority and (c) the Wakefield district health authority have had or plan to have with relatives of the late Mr. Benjamin Sykes, the benefactor of the hospital, regarding the proposed closure of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Freeman: Neither the Department of Health, the Yorkshire regional health authority, nor the Wakefield district health authority has any record of discussions with relatives of the late Benjamin Sykes, and there are no plans for such discussions. The hospital site and buildings were vested in the Secretary of State under the NHS Act 1946 free of any trust.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which treatments previously available to patients at Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield, are not currently available in alternative hospitals within the Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Infectious disease beds were provided at Snapethorpe hospital until 1978, when the service was transferred to Seacroft hospital, Leeds Eastern health authority. Pre-convalescent beds were provided at Snapethorpe hospital until 1979 and are not currently provided within the district. These service changes were consulted upon at the time and endorsed by the local community health council.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, what information he has as to who instructed Wakefield district health authority to withdraw from discussions with the Wakefield district council regarding the possibility of a scheme of joint use of Snapethorpe hospital; and what were the reasons for this instruction.

Mr. Freeman: None. This is a matter for the Wakefield district health authority in consultation with the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his reply of 22 May, if he will require a report from the Wakefield health authority as to why plans for the building of houses on the site of Snapethorpe hospital, Wakefield, were drawn up by officers of that authority before the members of the authority had resolved to close the hospital.

Mr. Freeman: No. As I indicated in my reply of 22 May, at column 414, such matters are for the Wakefield health authority in consultation with the regional health authority.

Maternity Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to respond to the Select Committee on Social Services recommendations in respect of midwives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he will be taking over the Select Committee's recommendations regarding midwives re-grading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) and my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 10 May 1988, at columns 450-51.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals he has, arising from his White Paper "Working for Patients", to improve maternity care;

(2) whether he has any plans to improve access to care for mothers-to-be;

(3) whether he has any plans to ensure maternity care is provided near to home to avoid women having to travel long distances for antenatal and postnatal care;

(4) whether he has any plans to improve postnatal care;

(5) whether he has any plans to provide more antenatal care in the community;

(6) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on whether maternity services should be based on an integrated pre-planned service or on emergency admission; what steps are being taken in respect of this policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The proposals in "Working for Patients" are designed to improve all NHS services and apply as much to maternity as to any other service. The Government recognise the importance of continuity and accessibility of care throughout pregnancy and the need for close co-operation among professionals and with parents, particularly in planning the management of a pregnancy in accordance with the wishes of the mother-to-be. Under the White Paper's proposals maternity services will, therefore, continue to be provided locally for those wishing to make use of them and in order to cover emergency situations. The proposals are also designed to increase people's choice of where care is obtained, particularly for people living in large towns. It will remain for local decision how best to meet local needs.

From the Department's monitoring of the implementation of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee's recommendations, which include specific advice on improving accessibility to antenatal and postnatal care, it is evident that significant improvements have been made. We believe that the emphasis placed by the White Paper on putting patients first will stimulate further improvements. A questionnaire package, which has been developed by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys at the request of the Department, will shortly be made available to all district health authorities to assist them in seeking to establish women's opinions on the maternity services provided to them.

Medical Audit

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what projects concerning medical audit have been financed by regions for further study; and what criteria he put forward for the regional health authorities to use in drawing up their submissions.

Mr. Mellor: We have set up a central fund to support medical audit projects. We have asked regional health authorities to submit up to five bids each in priority order for consideration by a supervisory panel. Regions will be expected to contribute at least half the cost of each project. The guidance to regions indicted that priority would be given to projects involving large numbers of clinicians, particularly if they covered a whole unit, district or region.

We hope to announce the results shortly. In addition, several regions have set up their own schemes to support medical audit projects.

Condoms

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make regulations relating to the quality of condoms mandatory.

Mr. Mellor: This issue remains under review. The British Standards Institution published its revised condom standard (BS 3704-1989) on 30 March. It has been approved under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and the Approval of Safety Standards Regulations 1987, which makes it easier for action to be taken, for example, by trading standards officers, against suppliers of condoms which do not meet the standard.

Census Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many companies are licensed by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to analyse and re-supply small area statistics from the 1981 census.

Mr. Freeman: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has concluded licence or agency agreements with 13 companies to hold and supply small area statistics from the 1981 census.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what total royalties have been received by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for each year since 1981 from the companies which are licensed by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to analyse and re-supply small areas statistics.

Mr. Freeman: The total revenue received each financial year by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from companies with agreements to hold and supply small area statistics from the 1981 census is shown in the table.

Financial year	Total revenue (£)
1982-83	27,980
1983-84	105,583
1984-85	47,889
1985-86	163,297
1986-87	136,759
1987-88	66,015
1988-89	55,924

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many companies which sold small area statistics under licence from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys also hold on computer names and addresses of members of the public collected from the electoral register.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected.

Social Workers

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to introduce measures for the training of social workers in order to prepare them more adequately for work with mentally ill people;

(2) if he has discussed with the Association of Teachers in Social Work Education ways in which social workers can be trained to deal more adequately with mentally ill people.

Mr. Mellor: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) is the statutory body responsible for social work training. To date some 90 per cent. of local authorities have produced a programme of CCETSW approved training for approved social workers under the Mental Health Act 1983. All qualifying courses for social workers are expected, according to CCETSW's minimum requirements, to include some training in mental illness. CCETSW has also approved a number of post-qualifying courses specialising in mental illness or with options in this area of work. We have had no discussions with ATSWE about training for those social workers dealing with mentally ill people.

Dental Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to ensure that all dental assistants and other persons who assist qualified dental surgery assistants have had a full course of vaccinations against hepatitis B and a follow up positive seroconversion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman : The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation has advised that vaccination against hepatitis B should be considered for all dentists, dental students, dental assistants and others who may come into direct contact with patients, but whether any individual should be vaccinated must depend on the views of their medical adviser.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, under notice FPN 472, patients have to pay for dentures and bridges provided through hospital and community dental services; if they would have been liable to pay for the same treatment when provided by general dental practitioners; and if the bridge prescriptions proposed by a general dental practitioner or hospital and community dental services will be subject to the same prior approval requirement as are prescriptions proposed by general practitioners.

Mr. Freeman: Hospital and community dental service out-patients who are not exempt are expected to meet the same NHS charge of dentures and bridges as are patients treated by general dental practitioners. Patients who are exempt are people under 18, full-time students under 19, pregnant women and nursing mothers, and people on low incomes. In addition, no charges are payable in the hospital and community dental service by people who have undergone operative procedures affecting the mandible, the maxilla or the soft tissues of the mouth as part of treatment for invasive tumours. There is no prior approval requirement in the hospital or community dental service.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many abortions took place at the premises 32 Parkfield road, Liverpool 17, in each year since it was licensed;

(2) if he will break down the number of abortions performed at 32 Parkfield road, Liverpool 17, into the categories specified in the Abortion Act 1967; and at what number of weeks' gestation those abortions took place.

Mr. Freeman: Information on abortions performed in any individual approved place is not released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Pain Relief Foundation

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any policy or plans to provide funding for the Pain Relief Foundation which is situated at Walton hospital, Liverpool.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health has recently renewed the grant-aid awarded to the Pain Relief Foundation under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, and has agreed to provide funding of £8,500 per annum for the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a decision on the provision of manufacturers' site identification on labels of pharmaceutical products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We cannot yet say. The proposal to require site declaration was particularly controversial and account must be taken of comments received in consultation before decisions are reached on MLX 167 proposals as a whole.

Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the cost of the proposed Crown indemnity for doctors.

Mr. Mellor: The consultation paper issued by the Health Departments on 20 March, a copy of which is in the Library, noted that medical defence subscriptions had trebled between 1986 and 1988 and were continuing to rise. The NHS currently spends an estimated £30 million per year through a scheme whereby two thirds of subscription costs are re-imbursed. At present the cost of providing an NHS indemnity is expected to be comparable.

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average cost to health authorities of employing an individual hospital doctor supplied by agencies and the salary and emolument costs of a doctor directly employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have the information in the form requested. However, as an example the cost of directly employing a senior house officer in the National Health Service for 72 hours duty in a week is estimated at £470, whereas we have advised health authorities that the maximum they should pay an agency supplying a doctor to do this work is £774. That advice was issued by me on 25 November 1988. It pegged the maximum permissible payments to agencies to 1987-88 levels and those levels remain in force.

Transplants

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about a register of bone marrow donors.

Mr. Freeman: There are two registers of bone marrow donors in the United Kingdom. One is run by the Anthony Nolan Research Centre and is a charitable organisation; the other is the British Bone Marrow and Platelet Donor Panel, which was compiled in collaboration with the National Blood Transfusion Service. The use of donor registries is a matter for the judgment of individual clinicians, responsible for the care of patients who might benefit from a bone marrow transplant.

Perinatal and Infant Mortality

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions he has had on joint action between local authorities and health authorities to seek to reduce the perinatal mortality and infant mortality rates to at least 8 per 1,000 in every regional health authority;

(2) what action he has taken on the recommendation of the Social Services Committee's first report on perinatal, neonatal and infant mortality, in particular the recommendations that the target objectives of regions and districts should be reflected in their resource allocations.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's response to the Social Services Committee's first report on perinatal, neonatal and infant mortality will be published shortly. The response will set out not only the Government's response to the recommendations made by the Committee, but also what other action is in hand to ensure the continued reduction in the perinatal and infant mortality rates in England.

South East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will announce the appointment of the chairman of the South East Thames regional health authority from 1 August.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to announce that Sir Peter Baldwin has accepted my invitation to serve in this most important position for another two years.

Cash Limits

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made in the cash limits of his Department for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary and Revised Estimates, the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 1 (hospital and community health and other services, England) will be increased by £113,005,000 from £11,748,942,000 to £11,861,947,000 to help provide, from 1 April 1989, for the pay awards recommended in the 1989 reports of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, healthpisitors and professions allied to medicine and on doctors' and dentists' remuneration, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 February 1989.

The cash limit for class XIV, vote 3 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be reduced by £2,525,000 from £670,695,000 to £668,170,000. A reduction of £3,470,000 is being made to allow for transfers to class XV, vote 7 (Department of Social Security, administration and miscellaneous services) in respect of the independent living fund (£2,700,000), motability (a net £550,000) and to correct the apportionment of resources for departmental administration following the split of the former Department of Health and Social Security (£220,000). A further reduction of £50,000 is being made to offset increased provision on class XIV, vote 2 (Family practitioner and other services, England) in respect of residual transaction expenses arising in connection with the reconstitution of the General Practice Finance Corporation. These reductions are partly offset by an additional £995,000 to meet in full, from 1 April 1989, the review body recommendations mentioned above. The provision for running costs on this vote and the Department's running costs limit is increased by £559,000 from £238,256,000 to £238,815,000.

The increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

NHS Staff

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now publish the outturn figures for 1987-88 for compensation and early retirement in the manner described in the Government's reply to the first report from the Social Services Committee of Session 1984-85, breaking down the figures to distinguish between competitive tendering and other cases.

Mr. Freeman: The outturn figures for 1987-88 are as follows:

	Number of cases	Compensation cost £	Total cost including superannuation £
Competitive tendering
New cases	821	1,834,000	3,990,000
Continuing cases	3,405	3,525,000	3,967,000
Other cases
New cases	1,546	5,678,000	19,326,000
Continuing cases	9,490	15,047,000	43,676,000

OPCS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any changes to announce to both the cash and gross running cost limits for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Revised Estimate, the cash limit for class XX, vote 15 will be reduced by £114,000 from £30,367,000 to £30,253,000. The OPCS gross running cost limit for class XX, vote 15 will be decreased by £114,000 from £35,491,000 to £35,377,000. The reductions reflect a correction to running costs, which included the overhead costs of methodology and consultancy expenditure by OPCS, by a transfer to the section of the vote for the administrative costs of social survey work exempt from gross running cost control. The costs will be fully offset by increased appropriations in aid from customer departments.

Eye Tests

77. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in hand for monitoring the effects of charges for eye tests on different sectors of the population in relation to the numbers coming forward for such tests; and whether a report will be made publicly available in due course.

Mr. Mellor: We expect to commission a survey into the number of private sight tests in the autumn, although the precise details have yet to be worked out. We expect that, at the least, a summary of the report's findings will be placed in the Library.

NHS Reform

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change in administrative arrangements he intends to introduce for supra regional hospital units including spinal units, as a consequence of the Government's White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 23 May 1989]: The NHS review working paper 2 noted the Government's expectation that the centre would continue to fund the fixed costs of units providing supra regional services, both to ensure their viability and to ensure a properly controlled spread of high cost and high technology treatments; it envisaged that the variable costs would be met by GPs and DHAs under contract. Detailed work is currently under way on this proposal. Announcements on the new arrangements, and on the future of individual supra regional services, will be made later in the year.

Private Patients (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue generated from private patients at hospitals in Bolton in 1988, and what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply 18 May 1989, c, 285]: The following information is derived from the annual accounts of the Bolton health authority:

Income from private patients (under sections 65 and 66 of the NHS Act 1977)

	In-patients (section 65) £ (cash)	Out-patients (section 66) £ (cash)
1982-83	129,179	7,322
1983-84	99,089	6,267
1984-85	11,329	171
1985-86	14,826	6,253
1986-87	14,847	8,950
1987-88	8,888	10,189

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Skyguard fire control radar system will be implemented to register military aircraft flying below the permitted levels of operation; whether the information obtained will show the air forces concerned; where the information will be published; what disciplinary action will be enforced against offending pilots; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Skyguard fire control radar system will be deployed in the low flying monitoring role later this year. Apparent infringements of the regulations governing low-flying training by military aircraft using the United Kingdom low-flying system will be followed up as at present and appropriate action taken.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement in respect of military jet aircraft overflying the village of Clayton in the Don Valley constituency, in which a transit area is in force, on 11 May at 1221 hours, 1509 hours and 1530 hours all of which were under 1,000 feet; and to what NATO air force these were attached.

Mr. Neubert: If the hon. Member would care to write to me with further details I should be happy to consider the matter.

Spending Statistics

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much is spent on defence per household, per year by Government,; what is his definition of a household; and how many there are in the United Kingdom currently.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence expenditure per household for 1989-90 will be just over £900, based on a defence budget of £20,143 million and the Department of the Environment's latest estimate of the number of households in the United Kingdom during 1989 of 22·1 million. The definition of a household is set out in "Social Trends 1989", published by the Central Statistical Office: "A single person or group of people who have the address as their only or main residence and who either share one meal a day or share the living accommodation."

Noise Insulation (Lakenheath)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis he nominated Alpine Double Glazing to be the recommended contractor for insulation work associated with the noise compensation scheme recently announced for RAF Lakenheath, Mildenhall; and why other local insulation firms were not given an opportunity to seek his nomination and recommendation on a competitive basis.

Mr. Neubert: Alpine (Double Glazing) Company Ltd. was selected as the recommended contractor for installation work associated with the noise insulation grant scheme for RAF Lakenheath and Mildenhall as the result of a competitive tendering exercise. Tenders were invited from six double glazing companies, including one (Easiglaze Windows Ltd.) based locally, on the basis of advice from the Glass and Glazing Federation on those companies that were likely to have the capacity to meet the demand generated by the 5,600 homes in the area covered by the schemes.

Sky Pageant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to why the annual sky pageant will not be held at the RAF base at Upper Heyford, Oxfordshire, in the current year.

Mr. Neubert: I understand that the United States authorities at the base have decided not to hold the sky pageant this year, which is a national event, but instead to hold a Heyford "At Home" day which will be orientated toward the local community.

Nuclear Weapons Convoys

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the key statistics for accidents involving the road transportation of nuclear weapon convoys over the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of successive Governments neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons at particular places and times. I cannot, therefore, give statistics of accidents involving the transport of nuclear weapons. There has never been an accident involving damage to a nuclear weapon in the United Kingdom.

Soviet Navy (Missiles)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has that the Soviet Navy is deploying sea-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have convincing evidence that the Soviets are on the verge of deploying a variety of sophisticated cruise missile systems. At sea, the Soviets have tested the SS-N-21 sea-launched cruise missile, which could be carried and launched by a variety of Soviet general purpose attack submarines, such as Victor, Akula or Sierra. Yankee class nuclear submarines have also been converted to carry SS-N-21 missiles. Targets in Europe, Asia or North America could be attacked by these accurate missiles, which we assume are fitted with nuclear warheads. The larger SS-N-X24 missile, which could be carried in specialised submarine platforms such as the modified Yankee class, is expected to be operational in the next few years.

NATO Military Establishments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total value to the economy for Yorkshire and Humberside of the presence of military establishments of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation armed forces in various locations in the region.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such estimate has been made for the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Queen's Own Hussars

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers in the Queen's Own Hussars went absent without leave in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Four.

Lance Missiles

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the position of the Greek, Danish and Norwegian Governments on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation plans to modernise short-range nuclear Lance missiles in western Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Greece, Denmark and Norway agreed the communique issued at the end of the recent NATO nuclear planning group meeting in Brussels. In doing so, they expressed their determination to ensure that NATO possesses diversified, survivable and operationally feasible nuclear forces across the entire spectrum and agreed that these forces should be kept up-to-date where necessary.

Gurkhas

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated savings envisaged under his proposals for the future of the Brigade of Gurkhas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although the future deployment and precise force structure of the Brigade of Gurkhas have not yet been decided, annual expenditure on the planned Gurkha force after 1997 is likely to be greater than current expenditure on the Gurkhas as a result of the loss of the contribution made by the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned strength of (a) the Queen's Gurkhas Engineers, (b) the Queen's Gurkhas Signals and (c) the Queen's Gurkhas Transport Regiment after 1997.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The plans for the future of the Queen's Gurkha Engineers, the Queen's Gurkha Signals and the Gurkha Transport Regiment after 1997 include their retention at a strength that is operationally and organisationally viable. The eventual number of squadrons that will be required will depend on detailed decisions on the Brigade of Gurkhas which have not yet been taken.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of service accommodation is (a) grade 1, (b) grade 2, (c) grade 3 and (d) grade 4; and what were those percentages for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: The percentage of service accommodation in the various grades over the past 10 years cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member with the percentages for the current year.

Foulness (Property)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the properties he has demolished in the parish of Foulness, Essex, since becoming the principal landlord there; if he will give the reasons for demolition; and whether the properties concerned were residental.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 15 May 1989]: The MOD has owned Foulness Island since the first world war. The available records show that, since 1986, seven residential properties have been demolished, three for operational reasons because they were in the range danger area and the remainder because they were structurally unsound and beyond economic repair. A number of farm outbuildings have also been demolished. Property used for defence purposes which has been demolished includes offices and stores buildings.

Propeller Driven Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom where heavy propeller driven aircraft are permitted to fly at less than 250 feet minimum separation distance.

Mr. Neubert: Flying below 250 feet by heavy propeller-driven aircraft is permitted, on special authorisation, in the three tactical training areas and for free-drop training on designated drop zones in military danger areas.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list the numbers of aircraft movements authorised for low-flying at less than 250 feet minimum separation distance in (a) the Northern Scotland tactical training area, (b) the Central Wales tactical training area, and (c) the Borders tactical training area during 1988; and on how many days in 1988 such low flying was authorised in each training area.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested regarding aircraft movements authorised for flying below 250 feet within tactical training areas during 1988 is given in the table. It should be noted that figures for the number of days on which flying took place are likely to have been substantially lower because alternative dates are often requested for use in the event of bad weather. It should also be noted that the movements figures for the borders tactical training area have, since July 1988, been recorded on a different basis following the extension to the Borders training area approved by my predesessor in March 1988 and the number of movements quoted for this area is not therefore directly comparable with previous figures.

Tactical training area	Operational low flying movements	Number of days on which operational low flying was authorised
Northern Scotland	828	115
Central Wales	60	60
Borders	1,227	121

Naval Accidents

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the key statistics for military naval accidents over the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our records show that during this period there have been 542 incidents involving groundings or collisions between vessels of the Royal Navy, Royal Fleet Auxiliary or the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service and either other vessels or static installations. A breakdown of this figure into various categories of incident is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost and effort. The great majority of these incidents, however, are very minor, resulting in little or no damage.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hedges

13. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grant aid his Department has given to encourage the planting of hedges in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder: Grants paid by my Department and the Welsh Office in England and Wales for hedge planting and hedge laying amounted to £2·18 million in the 1988 calendar year.

Food Irradiation

17. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present position regarding the development of a diagnostic test for food irradiation.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan).

38. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much research his Department is currently funding into food irradiation.

Mr. MacGregor: Last year the Ministry funded research into food irradiation and its effects on packaging materials to the sum of about £200,000. Research funding in the current financial year is expected to be the same.

50. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's current policy on food irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

44. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about irradiation of food.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie), and to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg).

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his decisions on his proposals for the control of the irradiation of food.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) earlier today.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for the irradiation of food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg).

National Institute of Agricultural Botany

18. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what cumulative savings were achieved over five years in grants to the National Institute of Agricultural Botany by the policy of not fully funding pay awards.

Mr. Ryder: In each of the last five years funding has been sufficient to enable the National Institute of Agricultural Botany to fully implement pay awards.

Country Landowners Association

19. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My ministerial colleagues and I regularly meet the president of the Country Landowners Association. My right hon. Friend the Minister last met him on 3 May, when a wide range of issues were discussed.

Intervention Stocks

20. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the most up-to-date estimate of the amount and value in pounds sterling of surplus food and drink in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the EEC as a result of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Ryder: A note setting out the volume of stocks of agricultural commodities held in intervention and assisted private storage in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the EC as a whole, is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly. The estimated value of the stocks listed in the most recently deposited note, depreciated as now required following the February 1988 European Council agreement, is £125 million for the United Kingdom, and £1·46 billion for the EC as a whole.

Lamb (Variable Premium)

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the amount paid during 1988 as variable premium on lamb to British producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A sum of £161,953,345 was paid by way of sheep variable premium to British producers in 1988.

22. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the variable premium on lamb.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall).

Slaughterhouses

23. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any arrangements are currently in hand for the statutory examination by veterinary officials at non-EEC export-approved slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Suckler Cow Premium

24. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his decision to pay the suckler cow premium in full will enhance United Kingdom beef production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the 1989-90 scheme year the rate of suckler cow premium will be £47·43 per cow, an increase of 42 per cent. over last year. This will give further support and encouragement to producers who are currently rebuilding their suckler herds and help to offset the reduction in calf supplies from the dairy herd. Consumers will benefit as the proportion of United Kingdom production from beef cows increases.

55. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the percentage increase in the suckler cow premium over the previous year; and how much this will add to the incomes of beef farmers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The rate to be paid in the 1989-90 scheme year will be £47·43 per cow, the maximum permitted under Community rules. This is 42 per cent. higher than last year. We estimate that the total payment to United Kingdom producers will be £57 million, some £20 million higher than last year.

65. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his decision to pay the suckler cow premium at its maximum level will affect farm incomes, particularly in the less-favoured areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We estimate that total payments of suckler cow premium to United Kingdom producers in 1989-90 will be £57 million, some £20 million more than last year. About 70 per cent. of the specialist beef herd is in the less-favoured areas and so it is likely that the major part of this increase will benefit producers farming in the most difficult parts of the country.

Untreated Milk

25. Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received following the issue of his consultation paper on untreated milk.

32. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had about the sale of green top milk; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations his Department has received calling for (a) the retention and (b) the banning of green top milk.

57. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to announce the result of his consultations on green top milk.

60. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his decision with regard to green top milk.

73. Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the consultations he has been having on the question of banning untreated milk in England and Wales; and when he expects to be able to announce his conclusions.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the banning of green top milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received a large number of representations. The majority are from consumers who wish to remain free to choose untreated milk and from producers who wish to continue supplying it. On the other hand, a number of bodies concerned about public health, including various enforcement authorities, have supported the proposal to ban sales. The period allowed for comment has now expired and we are considering, in the light of all comments received, what our policy should be. My right hon. Friend hopes to make a further announcement shortly.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information has become available in the course of his consultation into the question of banning the sale of untreated milk in England and Wales on (a) how many people can indisputably be said to have become ill from the consumption of such milk and (b) how many illnesses could be deemed serious.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health provided data on confirmed reports of food poisoning associated with consumption of raw milk in England and Wales in response to a written question from my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 9 February at column 808. No new information has become available during the consultation exercise, nor is it possible to distinguish between serious and trivial cases. However, the very fact that a case is reported means that an individual has been sufficiently ill to consult his doctor.

Beef Premium

26. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the new beef premium to be fully operational.

69. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the initial introduction of the beef payment scheme for British farmers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply I gave earlier to the Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

Sheep Regime

27. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest information he has about current negotiations over the revision of the EEC sheep regime.

42. Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions about the future of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells).

Fishing Industry

28. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of European Community grant-aid is being received by British fishermen for the modernisation of their fleets.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the April round of Community awards the European Commission granted £1·30 million (1.99 mecus) in respect of 83 United Kingdom vessel modernisation projects.

Potato Marketing Board

29. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

66. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is yet able to make a statement on the outcome of the inquiry into the working of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. MacGregor: I do not yet have anything to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 19 April, at column 175.

National Dock Labour Scheme

30. Mr. Janman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the fishing industry in response to the Government's proposal to abolish the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None, but prior to the Government's proposal being made, the fishing industry had made many representations for removal of the national dock labour scheme in relation to fish landings.

Landscape

31. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to introduce any new measures to enhance the quality of the British landscape.

Mr. Ryder: The introduction of the environmentally sensitive areas scheme in 1987 and the farm woodland scheme in 1988 is making an important contribution to the quality of the British landscape. In addition, the farm and conservation grant scheme, introduced in February, offers, for the first time, grants for repairs to traditional farm buildings and for the regeneration of heather moors and native woodlands as well as continuing assistance for hedge and shelter belt planting and the construction of stone walls.

Farmers entering the set-aside scheme are encouraged to consider ways in which set-aside of their land may benefit the landscape. Moreover, the Countryside Commission will shortly be announcing details of a scheme to encourage farmers to manage set-aside land to benefit conservation and recreation.

Until the effectiveness of these major new schemes becomes clear it would be premature to introduce any additional measures.

Extensification Scheme

33. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that proper conservation measures are included in his new extensification scheme.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to introduce his extensification scheme.

Mr. Ryder: I shall shortly be opening consultation on the implementation in the United Kingdom of the Community extensification scheme, including on appropriate environmental measures.

Nitrate Pollution

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is proposing to take to prevent the pollution of water courses by nitrate fertiliser.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes).

72. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received recently from representatives of farmers concerning pollution caused by nitrate fertilisers and farm waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Farmers' representatives have in broad terms welcomed the Government's general approach to tackling the nitrate problem as set out in the consultation document recently issued by the Agriculture Departments of England and Wales. They also broadly support the measures being taken to combat the farm waste pollution problem.

Organic Foods

35. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he envisages a further expansion of the production of organic foods following the introduction and processing standards by the United Kingdom register of organic food standards.

Mr. Ryder: I believe that publication of the UKROFS standards and certification schemes will give consumers greater confidence to buy organic food and I hope that producers will respond to the resulting increase in demand.

51. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is encouraging the development of nationally, and internationally, recognised standards of organic food production.

Mr. Ryder: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food encouraged Food From Britain in establishing the United Kingdom register of organic food standards (UKROFS) in July 1987. The result of this initiative is that the board of UKROFS, under the chairmanship of Professor Colin Spedding, announced standards for the production and processing of organic food on 2 May. In addition, the European Commission has announced that it will be proposing standards for the whole Community to which, I am sure, the UKROFS standards will make an important decision.

52. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the United Kingdom register of organic food standards is developing certification and inspection services to ensure that its requirements are properly enforced.

Mr. Ryder: Yes. UKROFS is offering a certification system for producer organisations whose members produce or process food to UKROFS standards and who are subject to inspection by those organisations. This provides for independent monitoring inspections to be carried out on behalf of UKROFS. UKROFS also offers a certification scheme to independent producers who will be regularly inspected. I am placing a copy of the details of the certification arrangements and standards in the Library of the House.

Experimental Station, Rosewarne

36. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to make an official visit to the experimental horticultural station at Rosewarne, Camborne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No. Ministers and officials in my Department are in touch with representatives of local growers and other interests about possible alternatives to the proposed closure as announced by my right hon. Friend in my reply to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) of 21 March.

Veterinary Officers

37. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary officers are currently employed by his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 1 May 1989 there were 439 permanent veterinary officers in all grades employed in the Department.

Farm Incomes

39. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the recent European Community price-fixing settlement will benefit farm incomes in the course of a full year.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 2 May, at column 85.

Festival of Food and Farming

40. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will estimate the return on the investment made by the food and agriculture industry in the Hyde park festival.

Mr. MacGregor: The festival was designed to show how much the British food and farming industry contributes to all our lives. The four-day event was a great success and the public response far exceeded expectations. It is not possible to quantify any returns, but I am sure that all those who contributed or exhibited must feel their money was very well spent.

63. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there are any plans to repeat the Hyde park festival of food and farming.

Mr. MacGregor: The festival, which marked the 150th anniversary of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, was a great success and gave tremendous pleasure to hundreds of thousands of visitors. However, it clearly would not be possible to stage such an event very often and I know of no immediate plans for a repeat.

Eggs

43. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on any differences between the health standards required for eggs produced in Britain and those required in other European Community countries.

Mr. Ryder: Eggs marketed in the United Kingdom and in all other member states of the Community must meet the standards prescribed in Council regulation (EEC) 2772/75 and Commission regulation (EEC) 95/69. These standards include matters relevant to health such as the cleanliness of authorised egg packing centres and of the eggs themselves.

Women Farmers Union

45. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Women Farmers Union; and what matters they discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the chairman of the Women's Farming Union on 24 February at a forum on 1992 issues held by its Norfolk branch. As might be expected, the topic which dominated discussion concerned the impact of the single European market.

Northumberland

46. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will visit Northumberland to meet representatives of the farming industry and to assess the state of agriculture in the area.

Mr Ryder: I frequently make visits around the country to keep abreast of agricultural developments.

Potatoes

47. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to meet the Potato Processors Association to discuss pricing by Dutch competitors in the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have no such plans.

National Farmers Union

48. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural matters.

59. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next due to meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no present plans to do so.

Bovine Somatotropin

49. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any consumer groups have written to him urging him to give a product licence for bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. It would be inappropriate for any group to urge me to pre-empt the rigorous scientific evaluation of BST required by the Medicines Act.

Farm Diversification

53. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about farm diversification.

Mr. Ryder: On 15 March the president of the NFU wrote to me, on behalf of the NFU, NFU of Scotland, the Tenant Farmers Association and the Farmers Union of Wales, about various tenancy matters, including a request for tenant farmers to have a right of appeal against any landlords refusal to allow diversification. I am pleased to say that there are signs that tenants are participating in the farm diversification grant scheme and I do not think that any change in tenancy law is appropriate on this point.

My Department here also received representations from some organisations seeking recognition for their members to undertake grant-aided enterprise feasibility studies.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

54. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money his Department has paid out in compensation in respect of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: From 8 August last year, when the compulsory slaughter policy was introduced, until the end of April this year, £1,272,558 had been paid in compensation.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his veterinary service first received tissues of cows suspected of being infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The samples from which bovine spongiform encephalopathy was first identified as a new disease were received at the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory on 3 November 1986, which was the same day that the animal was slaughtered.

Food Quality

56. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any new proposals to improve the wholesomeness of food available to the British consumer.

Mr. Ryder: It is already an offence under food legislation to sell food that is unfit for human consumption or food that is not of the nature, substance or quality demanded by the purchaser. Regulations also already cover matters concerned with the hygiene and handling of food and discussions with interested parties are currently proceeding on how these need to be updated.

Forestry Commission

58. Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the chairman of the Forestry Commission on 9 March, when we discussed a range of forestry matters.

Milk Quotas

61. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the milk quota regime.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The European Council agreed in February 1988 to extend the present milk quota regime until March 1992 and invited the Commission to submit a report on its operation before the end of 1990-91 marketing year. I have been pressing for the future of the regime to be addressed by the Council of Agriculture Ministers as soon as possible.

Co-responsibility Levies

62. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his policy to continue pressing for the complete abolition of co-responsibility levies.

Mr. MacGregor: I am opposed to co-responsibility levies and shall continue to press for their abolition while respecting budgetary discipline. I am very pleased that, in the recent price settlement, following our pressure the Council has taken a step in this direction, agreeing significant cuts in the milk co-responsibility levy and its removal in less-favoured areas.

Animal Health

64. Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for animal health of freer European markets for agricultural products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Although the Commission has made a number of proposals on animal health issues in anticipation of the realisation of the single market, it has not yet made proposals on the regime to apply after its completion. The Government's position is quite clear. We aim to secure the right balance between minimising barriers to trade and maintaining effective veterinary controls as long as they are necessary to prevent the spread of disease.

Farmed Salmon

67. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the farmed salmon industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The salmon farming industry, concentrated mainly off the west coast and islands of Scotland, continues to make an important contribution to our economy, to employment and to export earnings. In 1988, United Kingdom production reached 18,000 tonnes, with a first sale value of some £72 million.

Agricultural Support (Primary Producers)

68. Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the principle of payment to the primary producer, established in the new suckler cow premium, will be extracted to other forms of agricultural support.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the common agricultural policy, a wide range of instruments are used to target support in the most appropriate manner, taking account of the different characteristics of the various commodities. Payments to primary producers are used in a number of sectors, but there is no Community policy to generalise their application.

Channel Cod

70. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the operation of the European Community common fisheries policy as it relates to Channel cod.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Channel cod, like all other significant fish stocks, is subject to a total allowable catch based as far as possible on scientific advice and agreed annually by the Council of Fisheries Ministers. The current TAC of 23,900 tonnes is 70 per cent. higher than it was in 1983, reflecting the exceptional recruitment of the year classes 1985 to 1987. In the last two years we have secured mid-year revisions to the TAC. The quota allocation of the TAC between member states was settled on the basis of historic catches as part of the 1983 common fisheries policy settlement. Overall the shareout was very favourable to the United Kingdom, and for Channel cod we secured a slightly higher percentage than our track record.

Alternative Land Use

71. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent steps he has taken to promote alternative land use.

Mr. Ryder: We have introduced a range of measures to encourage farmers to seek alternative users for agricultural land. These include the farm diversification grants scheme, set-aside and the farm woodland scheme. Also, ADAS offers advice to farmers on the options for alternative uses of their land. In January, we made available, (through Her Majesty's Stationery Office), "Planning Permission and the Farmer", which was written especially for farmers seeking to diversify. This introductory guide explains how the planning system works and provides advice on presenting a convincing case to planning authorities.

Farm Slurry

74. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are open to him to control or advise farmers on the drainage of farm slurry into streams and rivers.

Mr. Ryder: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service routinely provides technical advice to farmers on pollution avoidance, and co-operates with water authorities over farm pollution problems in particular localities. 50 per cent. grant-aid is available on a wide range of facilities. My Department is also assisting the Department of the Environment prepare new regulations to set minimum constructional standards for slurry installations.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information in his answer of 14 May 1986, Official Report, column 482, concerning the common agricultural policy; and if he will add for each year the conversion rate for sterling in terms of the unit of account and of the market rate for the European currency unit.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the following table:

	CAP expenditure		[3] Year on year increase in real terms	CAP expenditure as per cent. total EC expenditure	United Kingdom receipts under the CAP	Conversion rates
	mecu	£ million	Per cent.	Per cent.	£ million	1 ecu equals

Pesticides

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in the light of the statement by the head of his Department's pesticide safety division and evaluation unit that it would be 10 years before all the pre-1965 pesticides are reviewed, and that this was due to staff shortages and lack of data, he will increase the resources available for this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The scientific complement of the pesticides data evaluation unit involved in the evaluation and review of agricultural pesticides has been increased from 52 at the end of the 1988-89 financial year, to 60. Staffing levels will be kept under review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the evidence the advisory committee on pesticides considered in deciding about the use of Alar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the evidence considered by the Advisory Committee at its meeting on 20 April 1989. For this meeting the committee received over 30 reports on daminozide and its breakdown product, unsymmetrical dimethylhydrazine (UDMH), reporting studies on mammalian metabolism, residues in apples, in vitro mutagenicity, subacute toxicity in rats and mice and carcinogenicity in rats and mice.

Veterinary Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 22 May, by how many posts of veterinary officer grade the state veterinary service was reduced in 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: During 1986 the number of veterinary officer posts was reduced by 12.

Peat (Alternatives)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is conducting a research into alternatives to peat for horticultural use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: A number of projects for finding alternatives to, or decreasing the use of, peat in the horticulture industry (for instance work on rockwool, hydroponics and using compost additives like bark) have been undertaken by my Department in recent years. Some of this work has already been taken up by growers and it could provide a firm basis for further reductions in usage if this is necessary.

Game

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the provisions in chapter 1 of annexe 11 of the draft regulation (PVET/2508) which prohibits the killing of wild game in an unacceptable manner or a manner which will cause unnecessary suffering, fall to be considered by majority vote or by unanimity; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on these proposals;

(2) if the provisions in EEC draft regulations which require game carcasses to be transported in refrigerated trucks to official game processing houses fall to be considered by majority vote or by unanimity; what is the voting procedure for the proposal that game should be inspected within 24 hours of death; and what are the categories of game covered by these particular proposals;

(3) what assessment he has made of the consequences of field sports in the United Kingdom of the EEC Council draft regulation on game meat and rabbit meat; what is the position of Her Majesty's Government on the draft with particular reference to the post-mortem examinations by official veterinarians of deceased game and rabbits; what stage has been reached in the discussion of these proposals; and whether they fall to be considered by majority vote or by unanimity;

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of game covered by the EEC directive which are shot each year; what is the EEC description or definition of game; and what he estimates would be the additional provision of veterinary surgeons required to implement the proposals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The document referred to is a working draft for a proposed Council regulation on game and rabbit meat for human consumption. The regulation would be made under article 43 of the Treaty of Rome which provides for decisions to be taken by qualified majority vote.

The draft provision on refrigerated transport would apply to all wild game but only where considered necessary by national authorities. The provision for inspection within 24 hours of shooting would also apply to all wild game although longer periods for eviscerated game may be permitted. Exemptions from these provisions and from other requirements of the measure are proposed for game sold in small quantities by the sportsman to the consumer or through sales points which are inspected regularly.

The proposed regulation would apply to all game animals and birds killed for sale for human consumption and which are not already subject to Community legislation.

Official statistics of the numbers of wild game animals and birds shot each year in the United Kingdom are not collected but estimates made by the game industry are as follows:

	Number
deer	80,000
pheasants	12,000,000
duck	1,000,000
pigeon	10,000,000
partridge	500,000
grouse	500,000

These figures include large quantities of game consumed or given away by sportsmen which would not be affected by the draft proposal.

Discussions are still at an early stage and it is too early to make an estimate of the veterinary or other resources which might be required. The Commission is well aware of our view that the present proposals do not take adequate account of the circumstances under which wild game meat is produced. We have already secured some important improvements and will seek to ensure that measures which may be adopted to remove obstacles to trade within the single market do not place unnecessary burdens on game interests in this country.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the British Veterinary Association to discuss animal welfare.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have not met members of the British Veterinary Association recently but my officials are in frequent contact with them.

Trees

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much coniferous and deciduous planting has taken place on farmland in England and Wales since the last Budget; and, of this, how much was subject to the new tax arrangements introduced in that Budget.

Mr. Ryder: In the year to 31 March 1989, the Forestry Commission grant aided 1,728 hectares of new planting (752 hectares conifers and 976 hectares of broadleaves) in England and 923 hectares of new planting (710 hectares of conifers and 213 hectares of broadleaves) in Wales on land that was formerly in agricultural use. A total of 2,371 hectares of this planting could have attracted tax reliefs under the transitional arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his 1988 Budget.

The Commission itself carried out 191 hectares of new planting on former agricultural land in England and Wales (159 hectares of conifers and 32 hectares of broadleaves).

Nitrate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many additional agriculture development and advisory service officers he intends to recruit to visit farms to advise on nitrates in water as outlined in his document "Nitrate Sensitive Areas Scheme."

Mr. Ryder: No decision has been taken on the number of farms which will be visited or the consequential staffing implications, pending adoption of the necessary legislation by Parliament and the outcome of the consultations undertaken on 9 May.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the time taken to deal with hon. Members' correspondence is reduced to 21 days within the next six months;

(2) if he will set targets for dealing with hon. Members' correspondence more expeditiously;

(3) if he will issue guidance to hon. Members as to the manner in which they can assist inquiries to his Department to be dealt with more quickly.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance is issued regularly to those of our staff who are involved in preparing draft replies to right hon. and hon. Members' correspondence. This guidance indicates the high priority to be given to this work. The volume of correspondence is, however, large. In the last year we received 41,500 letters concerning social security. We recognise the importance which, rightly, hon. Members attach to the quality and speed of the service provided to them and we, therefore, monitor and seek to improve it. In many of the instances in which there is a significant delay before we are able to give a substantive reply this is because it is necessary to contact one of our local or central offices, or a local authority, for further information on individual constituents. For this reason, it was suggested to all hon. Members in September 1987 that they take up directly with local offices complaints and queries relating to the circumstances of individual constituents. That advice emphasised that it was not intended to diminish ministerial responsibility; in particular, it was accepted that hon. Members would want to raise with Ministers any cases where they felt dissatisfied with the results of their inquiries at local level or which raised general issues of policy or perhaps serious complaints about local administration or conduct. I am pleased to endorse that advice.

Leaflets

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of (a) preparing, (b) printing and (c) distributing his brochure entitled, "Our Business is Service"; how many copies of the brochure were produced; and what steps his Department took to ascertain the need for such a publication.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The brochure "Our Business is Service" is an essential tool for the future management of social security. It sets out a clear definition of our intentions for the service. In drawing up the definition, we took account of survey evidence of the views of both staff and customers. With the definition now in place, our customers can know what service we aim to provide and our staff know clearly what is expected of them.

The cost of printing the brochure was £31,000 and of distributing it £11,000. A total of 150,000 copies were produced. Preparation of material for the brochure was part of the normal duties of the staff concerned and has not been costed separately.

Dental Staff

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements exist for the provision of invalidity benefits to all categories of dental staff affected by occupational disease; what is the level of benefits; and how they are calculated.

Mr. Scott: When they are sick and incapable of work, dental staff qualify for invalidity benefit under the same rules that apply to all employed and self-employed people. Invalidity pension becomes payable when sickness benefit and/or statutory sick pay has been paid for 28 weeks and incapacity is still continuing. It consists of a basic flat rate amount, currently £43·60 per week, plus an earnings-related element based on the claimant's earnings on which he has paid national insurance contributions since April 1978. Increases for an adult or child dependants are payable as appropriate. In addition, an invalidity allowance based on the claimant's age when his incapacity began may also be payable. Where there is title to both the invalidity allowance and the additional earnings-related pension, an amount equal to the higher of the two amounts is payable. The cause of incapacity for work does not affect either the title to or level of invalidity benefit.

Pensioners

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net income of pensioners in the United Kingdom in each of the following percentiles of pensioner income: (a) 10th, (b) 25th, (c) 50th, (d) 75th, (e) 90th.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average total net income of pensioner tax units[1] in each section of the pensioner income distribution[2] is as follows:

	Weekly net income £ (at 1986 prices)
Lowest
10 per cent.	51·35
25 per cent.	57·65
50 per cent.	63·05
75 per cent.	68·40
90 per cent.	76·25

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is a single person of state pension age or a couple where the man is of state pension age.

[2] The pensioner income distribution is divided into sections using equivalised net income.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of United Kingdom pensioners have no other income other than their state retirement pensions, and what information he has as to the comparable figures for other European Community countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Just under 20 per cent. of retirement pensioners have no other source of income than state benefits. I regret that comparable information for other European Community countries is not available.

Note 1: the data cannot be broken down further to provide the proportion of pensioners' income derived from the basic state pension.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many payments have been made under the Vaccine Damage Payments Acts for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is in the table:

Vaccine damage payments scheme
Awards made in each year 1979-89

[1] To 30 April 1989.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage payments were made in 1984 and in each subsequent year; and if he will categorise these according to the age of the child, when vaccination took place, the year of vaccination, and the nature of the vaccination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to my replies to him on 23 March at column 772, on 18 April at column 132, on 25 April at column 496, and on 19 May at columns 327-28. Twenty-nine payments were awarded in 1984 under the provisions of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Details are in the table.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library details of each major publicity campaign mounted by his Department in 1985-86 and each successive year, including in each case the objectives of the campaign, the intended audience and the outcome of the monitoring of the achievement of the intended objectives, and national research conducted for him by the Central Office of Information together with a note of the intended objectives in the campaigns in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 2 May 1989]: There has been only one major publicity campaign mounted by the Department since its separation from the Department of Health in July 1988. The objective of the campaign was to encourage take-up of family credit by working families with children. Initial research conducted at the outset is available in the Library. The campaign is still in progress until the end of June.

Prior to July 1988 campaigns were the responsibility of the Department of Health and Social Security. Major campaigns relating to social security subjects and their audience objectives in the period were:

Reform of Social Security advertising and publicity campaign January 1987—the £1,530,450 cost includes press advertising and the production and distribution of information packs. The objective was principally to reach professional advisers and carers to apply for information packs. The intended audience were professional advisers, carers and those concerned with general welfare schemes.

Family credit advertising campaign April 1988 to June 1988—the cost of £3,117,000 includes press and television. The objective was to promote take-up of the new family credit benefit.

The intended audience were working families who may now qualify for family credit, but who currently are not receiving family income supplement, and those who are already receiving family income supplement and are to be reassured that they will be automatically transferred to family credit after April 5 1988.

Information on the outcome of monitoring and the achievement of objectives is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Intended objectives of other campaigns in 1989-90 are as follows:

Enhanced Pensioner Premiums—July to September 1989. The objective is to create awareness of the increases in payment, to reassure those who receive the payment automatically and to motivate those entitled who would not otherwise receive payment to request an application form.

Announcement of New National Insurance Rates—September 1989. The objective is to make employers and employees aware of the changes in structure of national insurance contributions which come into effect on 5 October and to make married women paying reduced rate contributions aware of the implications.

Housing Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the anticipated effects of the Housing Act 1988 and the community charge on the housing benefit caseload in 1990-91, distinguishing between the number of (a) families and (b) persons affected.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 May 1989]: The effects of the 1988 Housing Act will unfold gradually over time and it is not possible to project the likely effect in any particular year. We estimate that one in four of those liable for community charge in Great Britain will benefit from the effective help given by the rebate scheme.

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the Department of Social Security local offices of Eston, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Stockton what statistical information he has as to the different reasons given to applicants by social fund officers for nil awards in respect of applications for community care grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Provisional information is provided in the table, which gives the number of times that a reason for decision is used by social fund officers for determining a nil award for community care grants.

An application can be refused for more than one reason. The total number of decisions used will be equal to or greater than the number of applications refused. Information on the numbers of applications processed and awards is available in the Library.

[1] When the general criteria for awarding a Community Care Grant (Direction 4) is not satisfied, the decision has usually been entered as "Others". In the case of Stockton, some of these have been included here.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications are currently waiting to be processed at each passport office; what action is being taken to eliminate the backlog; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that some 500,000 applications for passport services are at the various stages of processing within the six United Kingdom passport offices. Applications are being processed at a rate of around 75,000 a week, according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases.

A sharp increase in demand early this year has led to a general increase in processing times. Staff at Glasgow and Liverpool are adapting to a new computerised system of passport issuing, and accommodation changes at other offices have also affected output. Additional staff have been employed to help deal with the backlog, and a system of free two-year extensions to the life of expired passports submitted for replacement has been introduced at Liverpool to help relieve the immediate problem there.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports sent to the Liverpool office for renewal have now been extended for two years as announced in his oral answer to the hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) of 11 May, Official Report, column 978; and what effect this has had on turnaround times.

Mr. Renton: Some 3,000 passports have been extended under these arrangements since the measure was put into effect on 19 May. The work load on the main passport-issuing system has been reduced by a corresponding amount, but it is too early to measure the impact of the new procedure on overall turnround times. The demand for passports is now at its peak, and priority is being given to urgent applications, and those showing an early date of travel.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports were issued by the Glasgow passport office in each of the five years prior to full computerisation of the passport issuing computer system; and how many passports he estimates will be issued in its first full year of operation.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The Glasgow passport office began computerised operation in August 1988. The number of passports issued during the preceding five calendar years is as follows:

New passports

Year	Number
1983	182,386
1984	146,123
1985	137,098
1986	159,954
1987	159,723

It is estimated that some 189,000 new passports will be issued from Glasgow during the first full year of computerised operation up to the end of July 1989. This includes postal applications transferred from the London passport office under the dispersal programme. The demand for passports is currently at its peak, and priority is being given to urgent applications, and those showing an early date of travel.

Prisons (Suicide Prevention)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison department establishments are unable to implement procedures in section C of the circular instruction 3/1987 on suicide prevention and have been authorised to make alternative arrangements; and if he will name these establishments.

Mr. Hurd: Until 11 May a standing authorisation was in force for any establishment unable to comply in full with the screening procedures set out in section C of circular instruction 3/1987 to take alternative measures to identify inmates at risk of suicide. The number of establishments concerned varied over time. These arrangements, together with circular instruction 3/1987 itself, have now been superseded by the new procedures for the prevention of inmate suicides which I announced on 11 May at column 539, with which all establishments are expected to comply.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in light of recent suicides by women in Risley, what steps he intends to take to improve the conditions and care for women in the Risley remand centre.

Mr. Hurd: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons found the conditions and the standard of care in the women's wing at Risley satisfactory, and considered the wing to be a credit to all its staff. I have no reasons to believe that shortcomings in conditions or care were the cause of the two recent cases of apparent suicide in that wing.

Hull Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reviews are being carried out in respect of young offenders who are being held on remand at Her Majesty's prison, Hull; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The governor is providing the regional director with periodic progress reports and regional office staff are visiting Hull every eight to 10 weeks to review progress. The deputy director general of the prison service visited the prison on 21 April and I visited it on 28 April. Improvements have been made to the regime and conditions on B wing and plans for further improvements are in hand.

Police Operational Procedures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to discuss police surveillance techniques with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend meets the commissioner regularly but has no particular plans to discuss this subject.

Asylum

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to establish an independent review of his Department's policy to asylum seekers.

Mr. Renton: No. I am satisfied that the Department's policies and procedures fully accord with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention and the 1967 protocol on refugees.

Lorrain Esme Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available to the legal advisers of Lorrain Esme Osman the request for extradition, received from Hong Kong, which led to the issue of authority to proceed dated 24 January 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) indicated to the hon. and learned Member on 18 May at column 255, it is not the practice to divulge communications about extradition cases which go beyond what the courts require for the consideration of the case.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of legal submissions made before the House of Lords in The Scotsman case on 16 May, he has any plans to amend section 5 of the Official Secrets Act 1989 in order to make it an offence for a newspaper editor to publish information disclosed from a former Crown servant acting without authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans to amend the Official Secrets Act 1989. Under section 5(1)(a)(iii) of the 1989 Act, the offence of publishing information resulting from an unauthorised disclosure already applies where the information was disclosed by a person to whom it was entrusted on terms requiring it to be held in confidence or in circumstances in which it could reasonably be expected to be so held, if the person who entrusted the information was a Crown servant or Government contractor, whether or not the person to whom it was entrusted was himself a Crown servant at the time.

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions in each of the last five years electronic surveillance visual devices have been authorised for use in the Metropolitan police and in each of the provincial police forces;

(2) on how many occasions since the introduction of the guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations authorisation to use electronic surveillance listening and visual devices in the Metropolitan police has been given by officers other than the chief officer;

(3) on how many occasions in each of the last five years electronic surveillance listening devices have been authorised for use in the Metropolitan police and in each of the provincial police forces.

Mr. Hurd: The use of surveillance equipment is a matter for the operational judgment of police forces acting in accordance with the guidelines issued on 19 December 1984. The guidelines cover, inter alia, the principles governing the authorisation of such equipment. In particular the use of listening devices requires the personal authority of the chief constable, or of an assistant chief constable in a case where there is a degree of consent by one of the parties subject to the surveillance. The guidelines also make clear the arrangements for records of the authorisation of surveillance equipment to be kept by individual police forces. No statistics are kept centrally.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what control he exercises over the provincial police forces' use of electronic surveillance listening and visual devices other than that exercised by Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary.

Mr. Hurd: The guidelines issued on 19 December 1984, governing the use of equipment in police surveillance operations, apply to the Metropolitan police and to other police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to review the guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations in view of the technological advances that have taken place in electronic surveillance listening and visual devices since 1984.

Mr. Hurd: I have no plans at present to issue guidelines replacing those issued on 19 December 1984.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he receives regular reports from (a) Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary and (b) the force inspectorate on the use by police forces of electronic surveillance listening and visual devices.

Mr. Hurd: As part of their regular programme of inspection visits, Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary satisfy themselves that the use of equipment in police surveillance operations follows the guidelines issued on 19 December 1984. I receive annual inspection reports covering this and other matters.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Home Office organisations or agencies use electronic surveillance listening and visual devices other than the Metropolitan and provincial police forces.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the practice to comment on these matters.

Dogs

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to control the sale to the general public of dogs trained to attack and bite human beings with or without command;

(2) if he will establish a review committee to bring forward recommendations on the stricter control of dogs.

Mr. Hurd: We are looking closely at the suggestions which have been made for further legislation about dangerous dogs. I do not think there is a need for a review committee.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had discussions with chief officers of police concerning the increasing use of dogs to protect premises subject to police raids; and if he has any plans to introduce measures to assist police in overcoming this problem.

Mr. Hurd: I have had no discussions with chief officers of police about this matter. Section 1 of the Guard Dogs Act 1975 makes it an offence to use a guard dog at any premises unless a handler, who is capable of controlling the dog, is present on the premises and the dog is under his control at all times, except while another handler has control over the dog or while the dog is secured so that it is not at liberty to go freely about the premises.

I have no plans to introduce further measures to control guard dogs.

Mentally Disturbed Offenders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which proposals of the interdepartmental working group of Home Office and DHSS officials on mentally disturbed offenders in the prison system in England and Wales have been implemented; and what is the timetable for implementation of the remaining proposals.

Mr. Hurd: The Government welcomed the report of this working group, which laid a valuable base from which the two Departments are able to develop an improved response to the needs of mentally disorded people who come into conflict with the law.

All 16 recommendations were accepted by the Goverment. Work on the first recommendation has been completed with the revision of chapter 12 of the Home Office booklet for the courts on the treatment of offenders —"The Sentence of the Court"—a new edition of which is in the course of preparation. Information for the courts on the provision of places for the mentally disordered in a range of hospitals is being assembled and it is hoped thereby to implement recommendation 2 in the coming months. Recommendation 14 will be implemented in part shortly with the finalising and issue of revised prison department instructions which will include encouragement to medical officers to invite their counterparts in the community to visit and make personal assessments in suitable cases as to the continuing care of the mentally disturbed following release from prison. The subjects of recommendations 13, 15 and 16 call for continuing attention over time which it is firmly intended they shall receive on, respectively, the development of comprehensive secure provision in the community; stimulation of professional awareness of the range of requirements; and the improvement of co-ordination and communication between policy makers and service providers. The remaining recommendations have been implemented.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her meeting with the Prime Minister of Italy on 28 April, she discussed the forthcoming fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 11 May 1989 at column 491.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her meeting with the Prime Minister of the Netherlands on 29 April she discussed (a) the first preparatory committee for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference, (b) ways of strengthening the treaty membership and (c) present problems with compliance with non-proliferation treaty article VI on nuclear and conventional disarmament.

The Prime Minister: No. But matters relating to the non-proliferation treaty are regularly discussed with the Netherlands at official level.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her visit to Luxembourg in April, she raised the matter of the forthcoming fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, and ways in which further states can be encouraged to accede to the treaty, with Ministers of the Grand Duchy.

The Prime Minister: No. But matters relating to the non-proliferation treaty are regularly discussed with Luxembourg at official level.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply on representations recently made to her on the nuclear deterrent, Official Report, 11 May, column 489, she will list those (a) in favour and (b) against nuclear weapons set out in the representations; and if she will set out the reasons given by those representations opposed to United Kingdom retention of nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: A detailed breakdown of such representations could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The British electorate has consistently endorsed NATO's policy of deterrence based on a mix of nuclear and conventional weapons, and the maintenance of an independent British strategic deterrent.

WALES

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects an adequate database to have been constructed and able to provide information on take-up rates for cervical screening call and recall services.

Mr. Grist: Data are now being accumulated and sufficient information to enable meaningful analyses to be made should be available in the first part of the financial year 1990-91.

Sewage

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of domestic sewage in Wales enters the sea untreated; and what information he has as to comparable figures for other European countries.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available on the volumes of domestic untreated sewage entering the sea.

Medical Practices Committee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will discuss with medical practitioners in Wales and with their representative bodies the case for establishing a medical practices committee for Wales, similar to that which exists in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Under current legislation, the medical practices committee's remit covers Wales and England. There are at present no plans to establish a separate organisation for Wales.

North Wales Valleys Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now set up a north Wales industrial valleys initiative with adequate additional financial resources to meet the employment, social and cultural requirements of such areas.

Mr. Peter Walker: A formal valleys initiative for north Wales is unnecessary as existing financing, planning and management mechanisms are adequate to allow continued improvement in the area. The development of the A55 presents major opportunities for growth and development. I shall continue to do everything I can to encourage a positive approach among local authorities, public agencies and others to ensure those opportunities are grasped.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions he has attended European Community Council of Ministers meetings since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: It has not been the normal practice of Welsh Office Ministers to attend meetings of the European Council of Ministers since or before June 1987. I have of course met members of the European Commission since that date to discuss issues of importance to Wales.

Low-cost Starter Homes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on existing powers available to local authorities to enable low-cost starter homes to be constructed in their area; and whether he has any plans to provide local authorities with further powers to enable such properties to be constructed.

Mr. Grist: Within their general housing powers local authorities have adequate powers to carry out a wide range of low-cost home ownership schemes. We have no plans to extend these powers, but Welsh Office officials are to have discussions with local authorities and others during the forthcoming months about options for the provision of such accommodation.

General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners in Wales are (a) female and (b) male; how many females are principals of practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: As at 1 October 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) there were 1,450 male and 320 female general medical practitioners in Wales (including unrestricted and restricted principals, trainees and assistants). Of these 252 were female unrestricted principals.

South Wales National Union of Mineworkers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings he has had with south Wales National Union of Mineworkers since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met representatives of the south Wales NUM in November 1987 and other members of the south Wales NUM on 13 January 1989.

NFU, Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings he has had with the National Farmers Union, Wales since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have met representatives of the National Farmers Union, Wales on nine occasions since June 1987.

NHS Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to appoint leaders of industry to help shape National Health Service policy in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: As stated in the Government White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm 555), the NHS in Wales works under the strategic direction of the Health Policy Board, which is chaired by the Secretary of State. These arrangements, which were introduced following the NHS management inquiry of 1983 have proved their worth and will continue.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the health unions in Wales to discuss the proposed National Health Service changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the health union in Wales at a meeting with the joint staff consultative council for the Welsh Health Service on 15 May to discuss the NHS review White Paper.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the leaders of the British Medical Association in Wales to discuss proposed changes in the National Health Service.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I met the secretary of the BMA Welsh Council at a meeting with the joint staff consultative council for the Welsh Health Service on 15 May to discuss the NHS review White Paper.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Royal College of Nursing Wales to discuss the proposed changes in the National Health Service.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I met a representative of the Royal College of Nursing Wales at a meeting with the joint staff consultative council for the Welsh Health Service on 15 May to discuss the NHS review White Paper.

"New Roads by New Means"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet the Welsh Counties Association to discuss the Green Paper, "New Roads by New Means"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to meet the South Wales standing conference on regional policy to discuss the implications for Wales of the Green Paper, "New Roads by New Means"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 25 May.

Toll Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to build new toll roads in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Cottage Hospital, Caernarfon

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now ask the chairman of the Gwynedd health authority to convene a full meeting of the authority to consider on the basis of the most recent information available to it, whether or not it still wishes to proceed with proposals to close the cottage hospital, Caernarfon.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend will consider all appeals made to him, including those providing updated information, before reaching his decision on Gwynedd health authority's proposals for the cottage hospital, Caernarfon. Appeals will be copied as appropriate to officers of the health authority for their comments so that they can be taken into account by the Secretary of State. The decision whether to convene a full meeting in the light of any appeal relating to recent information would be for the health authority.

Wales Tourism Year 1990

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek to ensure that funds available to the Wales tourist board from the European Community for the purposes of developing projects associated with the European tourism year 1990, are not restricted by the Government's non-additionality rule, but will represent a genuine additional level of funding which can facilitate new projects which could not otherwise take place.

Mr. Peter Walker: In taking public expenditure decisions the Government take into account the expected level of European Community receipts. Resource provision for the Wales tourist board will be considered as part of the public expenditure survey in the normal way.

Wales Epilepsy Association

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance is being given during 1989-90 by his Department to the Wales Epilepsy Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It was not possible to offer financial support to the association for 1989-90. The claims for financial support from voluntary organisations greatly exceeded the resources available and other claims were considered stronger.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans for the privatisation of all or part of the Welsh Development Agency's functions in the county of Dyfed.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Primary School Children

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, for primary schools in Dyfed, what are the latest figures for (a) the number of children on school rolls, (b) the number of temporary and permanent school places, (c) the number of surplus places, (d) the target number of primary school places in 1992 and (e) the number of primary schools which would need to be closed to achieve the 1992 targets for surplus places.

Mr. Peter Walker: Dyfed education authority figures as at January 1989 are:

(a) 31,332;
(b) 4,742 temporary and 36,268 permanent places;
(c) 9,678.

These figures will be the subject of further discussions with the authority. But the 1992 targets implied by Welsh Office circular 20/88 would involve a reduction in the number of surplus places to about 5,500. It is for the authority to decide how to effect reductions.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many acres of land are in the ownership of the Welsh water authority, and of those (a) how many have planning permission and (b) for how many the Welsh water authority is currently seeking planning permission.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the value of the land now in the ownership of the Welsh water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The net assets value of the land and buildings is shown in the published annual accounts. A separate figure for land is not available.

Water Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list these rivers and watercourses in Wales which are polluted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Grist: A summary of information concerning the quality of rivers and canals in Wales is contained within the 1985 river quality survey, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

I will ask the chairman of Welsh Water to write to the hon. Gentleman with a list of rivers and canals which are polluted to the extent that they fall within classes 3 and 4.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of cash being spent by the Welsh water authority in its promotional campaign concerning privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman writes to the chairman of the authority direct.

Holiday Homes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to tackle the issue of holiday homes in rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It will always be to the advantage of rural Wales that the interests of all who wish to have homes there should be recognised. I have made it clear that appropriate ways of assisting those in housing need in these areas should be developed wherever practicable, and there will be discussions soon with the relevant local authorities.

Northop Bypass

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to open the Northop bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Construction of Northop bypass is nearing completion ahead of the August contract date and it is hoped that remaining work can be finished to allow for opening to traffic towards the end of June.

PRC Houses

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of each type of (a) owner occupier and (b) local council owned PRC houses have been repaired in each of the financial years since the Housing Defects Act came into operation; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information is not held centrally in the form requested, however, based on returns made to the Department by local authorities the details of completed reinstatement grants made to eligible home owners is given in the following table:

	Number of dwellings	Value of grant £000s
1985-86	2	22
1986-87	35	436
1987-88	213	2,686
1988-89[1]	164	2,409

[1] Provisional.

Immunological Deficiencies

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how, where and by whom, patients with immunological deficiencies, other than HIV positive, are treated in Wales; if home therapy is available for these patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 25 July 1988 at column 13.

Bracken

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the safeguarding of animal and human health in relation to bracken, in the light of current research into its carcinogenic properties.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 18 May 1989]: Carcinogenic dangers for animals in relation to bracken are kept under review by the state veterinary service and appropriate advice is available where required. An advisory leaflet is available from ADAS.

The possibility of a link between bracken and cancer in humans has been considered by the Department of Health's committee on the carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment. Their conclusion was that while the possibility of a health hazard exists, available evidence does not permit the risk to be defined with any precision. In view of COC's recommendation for long-term research, investigations have recently begun into the possible entry of toxins from bracken into the food chain. The results will not be available for some time. The COC has advised the Health and Safety Executive to issue safety advice to operators regularly cutting bracken, in view of their occupational exposure, as a precautionary measure.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Membership

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will list the members of the Public Accounts Commission showing the dates when they were appointed.

Sir Peter Hordern: The current membership of the Public Accounts Commission is:

Mr. Roy Beggs	(appointed[1] 5 November 1987)
Sir Peter Blaker	(appointed 4 November 1987)
Sir Barney Hayhoe	(appointed 4 November 1987)
Mr. Terence L. Higgins	(appointed 22 December 1983)
Sir Peter Hordern	(appointed 22 December 1983)
Mr. Robert Sheldon	(ex officio, as Chairman of the Committee of Public Accounts)
Mr. Peter Shore	(appointed 4 November 1987)
Mr. John Wakeham	(ex officio, as Leader of the House)
Mr. David Young	(appointed 22 December 1983)

[1](First appointed 22 December 1983, but ceased to be a Member on acceptance of the Chiltern Hundreds in December 1985).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Short Money

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much Short money was paid to each political party in each of the calendar years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Wakeham: The following is the information requested:

	1987 £	1988 £
Labour Party	436,669·42	883,135·75
The Liberal Party	75,238·45	30,786·94

Social and Liberal Democratic Party[1]	—	139,965·87
	597,741·27	1,203,322·97

Note: Under the terms of the Resolution of the House of 21 June 1988, the amounts of financial assistance payable were increased with effect from 11 June 1987. The amounts paid in 1988 include arrears due in 1987.

[1]Amalgamation of the Liberal Party and a section of the Social Democratic Party with effect from 1 January 1988.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

31 Hardie Avenue, Rugeley

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Attorney-General when a deposit number will be issued at Her Majesty's Land Registry, Hull in respect of 31 Hardie avenue, Rugeley, in the names of London and Suffolk Properties Ltd. and Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Goring; and when the registration procedures will be completed on official reference No. C.31. SF 260448 TP 242.

The Attorney-General: A deposit number in respect of the charge certificate of title number SF232076 (which included 31 Hardie avenue, Rugeley) was issued on 22 May 1989. The registration of title number SF260448 was also completed on that day.

DEFENCE

Teachers

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table setting out the pay of locally entered teachers employed on British bases in Germany and United Kingdom-based main scale teachers pay for each year from 1982 to the latest available date.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1989]: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many locally entered teachers employed on British bases in Germany were (a) scale 1, (b) scale 2, (c) scale 3, and (d) scale 4 teachers each year since 1982 to the latest available date.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1989]:

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the numbers of full-time workers in the coal, steel, shipbuilding, engineering and building industries in 1979 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Comparable estimates of full-time employment are not available for all of the industries and dates specified. The available information is as follows:

n/a Not available.
The estimates are unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. Estimates for iron and steel and shipbuilding and repairing are subject to severe potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industries.

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people employed who were receiving training in the appropriate survey period from the labour force survey and as a percentage of all employees, by age group, for each of the standard regions and Wales, in each of the years 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 19 May 1989]: Available estimates from labour force surveys are as shown in the table:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar (Airport)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the time scale for implementation of the agreement on Gibraltar airport.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no set time scale for the implementation of the 1987 airport agreement. The agreement cannot come into effect without the concurrence of the Gibraltar House of Assembly. For our part, we continue to believe the agreement is a good one for Gibraltar.

Lorrain Esme Osman

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the exchange of notes with the Liberian Government, through its embassy in London, concerning the appointment of Lorrain Esme Osman as counsellor and ambassador at large to countries within the European Community, the Liberian Government gave notification of the appointment of Mr. Osman as a member of the permanent mission of the Liberian Republic to London.

Mr. Waldegrave: As indicated in the answer given to the hon. and learned Gentleman's question of 18 May by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, it is for the courts to decide whether Mr. Osman has any diplomatic immunity. Since proceedings on this matter are still continuing, it would not be appropriate for me to comment further on any aspect of this matter.

Gurkhas

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications of proposals for the future of the brigade of Gurkhas for the economy of Nepal.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said on 22 May, it is not possible to be definitive at this stage, but we expect that the benefits to the Nepalese economy of the Gurkha connection will remain substantial.

Tibet

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what consideration has been given by him to initiating any moves to enable United Nations observers to visit Tibet; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what further action is open to him to demonstrate Her Majesty's Government's concern for the people of Tibet;

(3) what further approaches he is considering making to the Chinese Government to reflect widespread continuing concern over the treatment of the people and culture of Tibet by China.

Mr. Waldegrave: We deplore abuses of human rights wherever they occur and we have made clear to the Chinese authorities on many occasions the real concern in this country about human rights in Tibet. The Chinese Government are well aware of our dismay at recent events in Tibet and our hope that martial law will be lifted soon. We shall continue to seek suitable opportunities to make our views known. Under the terms of martial law in Tibet, foreigners including diplomats are excluded from entering Lhasa. If, however, a serious consular case should arise, we would of course request permission to enter Tibet. We shall keep the position under review.

Montserrat (Banks)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on alleged fraudulent activity by banks registered in Montserrat.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of allegations concerning serious irregularities in the banking system of Montserrat. The responsibility for the banking system of Montserrat rests with the Government of Montserrat who are taking urgent steps to investigate these reports and have obtained assistance from the United Kingdom in carrying out their inquiries. Whilst we have no direct responsibility for the business of banks in Montserrat, individuals are advised to exercise caution in any dealings with banks registered there.

Council of Ministers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present 13 meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for June.

The Consumers Affairs Council on 1 June will discuss the consumer credit directive which will harmonise the method of calculating annual percentage rate (APR) of charges on credit. The Council will also discuss a proposed Council resolution setting out future priorities for consumer policy; a Commission report on progress of the Council regulation of 9 June 1986 on consumer education in primary and secondary schools; and a Commission proposal for a Council directive on the approximation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the member states concerning general product safety. There will be a formal mid-term review of the five-year European home and leisure accident surveillance system (EHLASS) pilot scheme.

The annual EC/ACP Council of Ministers meeting will be held in Brussels on 2 June. This will be followed on 3 to 5 June by the next EC/ACP ministerial negotiating meeting in the current renegotiation of the Lomé convention.

The Transport Council on 5 and 6 June is expected to continue its discussions on negotiations on shipping with west and central Africa; possible arrangements for introducing road haulage cabotage; the weights of two, three, four, five and six-axled commercial vehicles; the progress of negotiations with Austria, Switzerland and Yugoslavia on the transit of Community traffic through those countries; the maximum permitted blood alcohol concentration for vehicle drivers; the compulsory use of seat belts in vehicles of less than 3·5 tonnes; the tread depth of tyres of certain categories of motor vehicles and their trailers; statistical returns in respect of the carriage of goods by road; a possible code of conduct for computerised reservation systems in air transport; and air traffic systems capacity problems. It may also discuss positive measures of support for the Community shipping fleet; vocational training for certain drivers of vehicles carrying dangerous goods by road; and the inter-regional air services directive.

The Environment Council meets on 8 and 9 June. The Government are hoping for agreement on a resolution on climate change which will acknowledge the importance of the problem and call on the Community to develop suitable policies in response to it. The Council will also discuss a proposed directive establishing a safety regime for work using genetically modified organisms and a draft directive on the deliberate release of such organisms into the environment. Other subjects for discussion are the Commission's amended proposal for small car emission standards; a proposal to amend directive 80/779/EEC to provide for stringent limit values of sulphur dioxide; a proposal to limit emissions from existing municipal waste incineration plants; a proposal to add four new substances to the framework directive on substances in water; a draft directive on harmonising member states' programmes for reducing and eliminating pollution caused by waste from the titanium dioxide industry; and Commission reports on proposed directives concerning protection of habitats and nitrate pollution in water.

The Social Affairs Council, meeting on 12 and 13 June, is expected to give preliminary consideration to a Commission communication on a draft charter of social rights and consider with a view to adoption the health and safety framework directive. The Council will also consider the Hanover study of working conditions; proposals for a directive on equal treatment in social security; proposals for a decision on measures to foster the economic and social integration of the least-favoured groups; and draft presidency conclusions on employment of the disabled and the sharing of work and family responsibilities. It may also discuss proposals for a regulation on measures to help redundant shipworkers and amendments to the family benefit provisions of the migrant workers regulations.

The Foreign Affairs Council on 12 and 13 June will discuss further the draft mandate for negotiations with the USSR on a trade, commercial and economic co-operation agreement. The Council may also discuss further the Community's trade relations with the United States including the dispute over hormones in meat, soya, and developments in the implementation of section "Super 301" of the 1988 US Trade Act. There may be discussion of progress in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations and progress on the Lomé renegotiation in the light of the EC/ACP ministerial negotiating meeting in Brussels on 3 to 5 June.

The Internal Market Council on 14 and 15 June will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 19 June to discuss the Commission's proposed reform of the financial regulation and to have a follow-up discussion to the March Council on combating fraud against the Community budget. The Council is also expected to discuss draft directives on solvency ratios for credit institutions; the second banking co-ordination directive; taxation of savings; a report on tax approximation from the Committee of Permanent Representatives; the draft 18th VAT directive concerning the ending of various derogations available to the member states under the terms of the 6th VAT directive; and three company tax measures designed to encourage co-operation between enterprises in different member states. The discussions on insider trading will focus on a draft directive co-ordinating regulations across the Community, thereby imposing minimum standards and providing for collaboration in the exchange of information. The Presidency hopes to reach a common position at the meeting.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 19 and 20 June to discuss internal market items and certain amendments to quality and sparkling wine regulations. It may also discuss New Zealand sheep and butter and the reviews of the cereals co-responsibility levy and of the sheep regime.

The Research Council will meet on 20 June. The agenda anticipates the adoption of eight R and D programme proposals: EUROTRA (machine translation); FLAIR (food science and technology); VALUE (dissemination and utilisation of results from scientific research); MAST (marine science and technology); MONITOR (forecasting and assessment of R and D); DOSES (statistical expert systems); Radiation protection; and TELEMAN (remote handling in nuclear hazardous environments). It is expected that common positions will be agreed on the following programme proposals: STEP-EPOCH (environment and climatology); BRIDGE (biotechnology) and raw materials. There will also be discussions of a proposed resolution on COST (European Co-operation in S and T) and the mid-term review of the framework programme.

The Fisheries Council meets on 21 June to discuss Community aid for surveillance costs. It may also discuss fisheries relations between the Community and the USSR, Community acceptance of an additional Greenland quota and the proposed reduction of fishing quotas in NAFO waters.

The European Council will meet on 26 and 27 June in Madrid. The Council is expected to concentrate on discussion of the Delors report on economic and monetary union, the single market, social and other issues. Further details of the agenda will be decided at the Foreign Affairs Council on 12 and 13 June.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Population Activities

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was total expenditure on population activities for each of the years 1987 and 1988; and what percentage this represented of the total gross public expenditure on overseas aid for each of the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1987 total expenditure on population-related activities was £15·9 million which represented 1·3 per cent. of gross public expenditure on overseas aid. Of this figure, £13·2 million was spent through multilateral population programmes.

Final disbursement figures for bilateral government assistance in the population sector are not yet available for 1988. Contributions to multilateral population programmes in 1988 totalled £14·066 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports and Imports (Turkey)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the obstacles by way of tariff, duty, and so on placed on (a) the export of British textiles to Turkey and (b) the import of Turkish textiles to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are very concerned about the high level of taxation imposed on textiles entering Turkey. The table shows the position for a range of textiles and garment categories; in each case the EC duty on imports from Turkey is zero. The Turkish industry voluntarily restrains its exports of certain textile and clothing products to the Community.

The continuing high level of Turkish import taxation is counter to the terms of the EC/Turkey association agreement.

Post Offices

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the future of Crown post office provision in (a) East Sussex and (b) Brighton.

Mr. Forth: Detailed decisions about the nature and extent of the post office network are an operational matter for the Post Office. However, I understand that it plans to convert to agency status one Crown office in Kemptown, Brighton and two further Crown offices at Polegate and Hove in East Sussex. They will continue to handle the full range of transactions currently carried out by Crown offices. It has no plans to reduce the number of outlets in Brighton or East Sussex.

Scottish and Newcastle Brewery (Takeover)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what statutory basis he recently refused to permit a takeover of Scottish and Newcastle Brewers; and if he will be required to seek to amend or repeal that legislation to conform to European Community obligations.

Mr. Maude: Action by my right hon. and noble Friend in relation to the proposed takeover of Scottish and Newcastle Breweries by Elders IXL was taken under the Fair Trading Act 1973. No action is required in respect of that legislation to conform to European Community obligations.

Manufacturing Undertakings (Change of Control)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has powers to extend section 13 of the Industry Act 1975 to cover economic activities other than manufacturing.

Mr. Maude: The Secretary of State has no power to extend section 13 to activities other than those of manufacturing industry as defined in the Act.

VAT

Mr Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total number of new companies (a) registering and (b) deregistering for value added tax purposes for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Estimates for the United Kingdom are as follows:

Registrations (a) Deregistrations (b) For VAT (thousands)

	(a)	(b)
1983	180	145
1984	182	152
1985	182	163
1986	191	164
1987	205	160

Source: Department of Employment.

This represents a net increase of 11·5 per cent. in the stock of businesses registered for VAT between the end of 1982 and the end of 1987, the latest date for which reliable estimates are available.

Induction Loops

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department has any proposals to change present regulations on the licensing and fees for induction loops in public buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Since the implementation of an exemption order on 1 May 1989, licences under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 are no longer required for a wide range of low power devices including all induction loop systems complying with the Department's performance specification MPT1337 or any of its predecessors BR13, BR19 and BR34.

A new specification, MPT1370, for higher power induction loops, necessary for some larger buildings, is currently being drafted. It is expected that these will also be made exempt from licensing.

Ferguson's Shipbuilders Ltd

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any progress has been made on the disposal of Ferguson's Shipbuilders Ltd, Port Glasgow.

Mr. Newton: I have today invited the chairman of British Shipbuilders to open negotiations with the HLD Group Ltd of Greenock as preferred bidder for the assets of the corporation's shipbuilding subsidiary Ferguson Shipbuilders Ltd at Port Glasgow. HLD's bid depends on its reaching an early and satisfactory agreement with the work force. I should make it clear that, should this not prove possible, I could not be optimistic that there would be any other realistic prospect of achieving a successful sale.

Industry Act 1972

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to modify the administration of assistance provided under section 10 of the Industry Act 1972; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Assistance under section 10 of the Industry Act 1972, known as the home credit shipbuilding guarantee scheme, will in future be subject to an explicit test of need before offers are made. This will bring the administration of the scheme into line with that of other departmental schemes.

Net Book Agreement

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 470, he has any plans to reconsider the net book agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 May 1989]: I have no such plans. Under the relevant legislation, the review of arrangements such as the net book agreement is a matter for the Restrictive Practices Court, on application by the Director General of Fair Trading. The director general has recently announced that he is considering whether to ask the court to look again at the agreement. He has invited representations by the end of May, and hopes to be in a position to take a final decision by the end of July.

Estate Agents

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will make a statement on the possible introduction of a code of practice and other regulatory measures covering estate agents as recommended in the report prepared by the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors and submitted to the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on 27 January.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 25 May 1989]: I am in the process of concluding a review of estate agency. In the course of this review I have taken account of proposals from a number of interested parties, including the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors.

I hope to make an announcement shortly.

HEALTH

Consultants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the Trent regional health authority the average number of National Health Service operations done by consultants in each specialty in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The available information on the numbers of in-patient cases, day cases and medical staff is shown in the tables. It is not possible to derive meaningful averages because operations performed on out-patients are excluded and some operations are performed by registrars.

Transplants

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the effects on transplant services of the White Paper on the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: Organ transplant services are normally provided on a supra-district, regional or supra-regional basis. The NHS review White Paper states that most of these services will in future be bought by districts for their resident populations from their basic allocations. The White Paper does, however, recognise that some central funding will be necessary for the development of supra-regional services, and that regional health authorities may decide on a similar approach to the funding of some regional or supra-district services. The NHS management executive will discuss with RHAs the detailed application to these services of the new funding arrangements proposed.

For further details of the proposed arrangements for supra-regional services, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 25 May.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about dialysis and transplant rates in each of the EEC countries.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of patients alive on all forms of renal replacement therapy, including dialysis and transplant, on 31 December 1987 was:

Country	Total	Rate per million population
Belgium	3,905	396
Denmark	1,191	233
Federal Republic of Germany	26,402	434
France	18,482	333
Greece	2,568	257
Ireland	782	218
Italy	18,697	327
Luxembourg	151	413
Netherlands	5,136	353
Portugal	3,086	300
Spain	12,941	333
United Kingdom	15,119	267

In recent years, the acceptance of new patients on to therapy has been increasing rapidly in the United Kingdom. The percentage change in each EC country from 1984 to 1987 is shown below.

Country	Percentage change
Belgium	+12
Denmark	+24
Federal Republic of Germany	+37
France	+24
Greece	+23
Ireland	−15
Italy	+15
Luxembourg	+102
Netherlands	−11
Portugal	−2
Spain	−7
United Kingdom	+41

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many United Kingdom citizens entitled to National Health Service treatment underwent transplants in private hospitals in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Precise information is not available centrally, but the number is thought to be very small.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are on the waiting list for (a) heart, (b) heart-lung and (c) lung transplants for each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of National Health Service patients waiting for a heart, heart-lung, or lung transplant since January 1986 was:

	Number
6 January 1986	269
31 December 1986	362
31 December 1987	337
31 December 1988	419
22 May 1989	474

The rising waiting list reflects rising referrals to the transplant centres as the success of the technique has become increasingly apparent. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced on 13 December 1988 at column 539 his intention to designate and fund a fifth supra-regional heart transplant centre from 1 April 1990.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the median waiting time for patients on the kidney transplant waiting list;

(2) how many people are waiting for a kidney transplant; and how many were waiting in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service, the number of National Health Service patients awaiting a kidney transplant in the United Kingdom for the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1 January 1985	[1]2,985
6 January 1986	[1]3,443
31 December 1986	[1]3,468
31 December 1987	3,306
31 December 1988	3,493
22 May 1989	3,549

[1] This figure includes patients waiting in Eire.

Information on waiting times for kidney transplants is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 22 February 1989 at columns 674-75.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the effect on the United Kingdom transplant waiting list of demand from other EEC countries.

Mr. Freeman: It appears unlikely that the treatment of EC patients under any of the NHS transplant programmes has a material effect on United Kingdom waiting lists. EC patients would not generally wish their names to be added to the waiting list for donor kidneys. In the case of liver transplants, more organs are available at present than are required to meet United Kingdom needs. The relatively small number of heart transplants performed on EC patients is roughly equivalent to the number of organs donated to United Kingdom patients from EC sources.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many conferences or seminars on transplantation have been sponsored or organised by the Department of Health in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Most conferences on transplantation are organised by health authorities and professional and voluntary bodies. The Department provides encouragement and, on occasions, participates in such conferences. Accurate statistics on departmental involvement over the last 10 years could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications for funding for publicity on organ transplants have been made to the Department of Health in each of the last five years; and how many have been granted.

Mr. Freeman: Formal applications for assistance with publicity expenditure are rarely received, although ideas for publicity initiatives are often put forward in correspondence or discussion. It would be possible to assemble a comprehensive list of these ideas only at a disproportionate cost. However, the Department is currently considering suggestions for publicity projects put forward by a number of organisations associated with transplantation, including the National Federation of Kidney Patients' Association, the British Transplant Games, and the United Kingdom Transplant Co-ordinators Association.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in how many languages the donor card is available;

(2) if he will make a statement about transplantation in the minority ethnic groups.

Mr. Freeman: Patients from minority ethnic groups often experience relatively long waiting times for transplants because of the difficulty of obtaining a well-matched organ. This is due largely to low rates of organ donation in these communities, which appear to be associated with culture and tradition. Transplant units in areas with substantial ethnic minority populations carry out local projects aimed at increasing awareness of transplantation among these groups. One unit has provided leaflets and other publicity material in the majority ethnic language explaining organ donation and the use of the donor card. The Department's organ donor card is in English, but I understand that in one area a card has been produced in Gujurati.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those departmental health authorities which hold a Transplant Day to draw attention to the potential of organ donation.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect this information centrally. I suggest that the hon. Member contacts health authorities for the details she requires.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to whether a central library of educational material about organ donation and transplantation has been collected.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that a number of organisations associated with transplantation are considering ways in which such a library could be established.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in developing publicity about organ donation and transplant among doctors, nurses and the public.

Mr. Freeman: We have recently produced a new leaflet to accompany the donor card. Display material and a video on transplantation and organ donation for professional staff are in the final stages of preparation.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support is given to the public relations offices of the United Kingdom transport service; and what is the offices' total departmental budget.

Mr. Freeman: The Department funds an officer at the United Kingdom transplant service to deal with inquiries about the work of the organisation. We do not provide UKTS with a budget for publicity on organ donation. The funds for this are handled by the Department's information division.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each hospital over 250 beds in the Trent regional health authority (a) the land and building capital evaluation and (b) equipment capital evaluation; what reviews he is carrying out in respect of hospitals paying capital interest charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The current value of the NHS estate does not provide site values in terms of bed numbers. Land and building will be valued later this year by district valuers for the purpose of introducing capital charges. Equipment will be valued by local health authorities.

Census Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether it is still the intention of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to release small area statistics in a form which would make it possible to match these small area statistics with other personal databases precisely through the post code;

(2) what plans the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has to guarantee confidentiality of small area statistics from the 1991 census in the light of the fact that the use of the post code will make it possible for small area statistics to be matched with other personal databases.

Mr. Freeman: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys does not intend to release small area statistics from the 1991 census in any form which would make it possible to match characteristics of identifiable individual people or households with those held on other databases.

Steps are being proposed, as for the 1981 census, to prevent the inadvertent disclosure of information on identifiable people or households, by modifying figures at random by $+1, 0$ or -1, and by not releasing any statistics for areas containing fewer than a specified number of people or households.

Dental Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the fees for the provision of dentures and bridges through the hospital and community services, under notice FPN 472, will be calculated; and how they will be funded.

Mr. Freeman: Hospital out-patients and patients treated by the community dental service are required to pay an NHS charge for dentures and bridges supplied as part of their treatment, unless they are in an exempt category. From 1 April 1989 the amount paid by patients is calculated as a fixed proportion, currently 75 per cent., of the fee which a general dental practitioner would receive if the denture or bridge were supplied through the general dental service. Costs of the hospital dental service are met by health authorities and the allocation of resources to them takes account of this service.

Complaints Procedure

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the hearing of patients' complaints and disciplinary hearings following dental, hospital or community clinic prescriptions; and what penalties may arise from such hearings.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for dealing with complaints about hospital treatment or about community health services are covered by the Department's guidance (circular HC(88)37) issued in June 1988.

Family practitioner committees deal with complaints against general dental practitioners who can be warned to comply with terms of service more closely, have an amount withheld from remuneration, be required to submit estimates for prior approval by the Dental Estimates Board or be referred to the NHS tribunal which can remove a dentist from the family practitioner committee's dental lists. Action may be taken against hospital practitioners under local disciplinary procedures or the provisions of HM(61)112 which allows for a formal hearing of disciplinary cases. Any complaint found proved may lead to a formal warning, suspension or dismissal. Complaints of a serious nature may be referred to the General Dental Council which is empowered, after a hearing, to order a dentist's suspension or removal from the dental register.

Adoption

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the rights of access to centrally and locally held information of a person who was adopted; what is the statutory basis upon which an adopted person can seek and obtain information about birth and natural parentage; and if he intends to hold any reviews of this procedure.

Mr. Freeman: Section 51 of the Adoption Act 1976 gives adopted adults the right of access to information on their original birth record. Those adopted before 12 November 1975 must receive counselling before being given this information. There is no statutory right of access to records held by adoption agencies. However, adoption agencies as part of their services will help a person whose adoption the agency has arranged with information about his origins and the circumstances leading to the adoption.

A review of adoption law is planned and the question of access to information will be considered in that review.

Nurses

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the nursing staff have accepted their gradings in each of (a) St. Thomas's and (b) the South Western; what is the number of staff whose regrading is still subject to an appeal procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect the information centrally.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to release the information contained in the regional health authority outturn reports of 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor: Regional health authorities are due to submit their outturn reports for 1988-89 to the NHS management executive by 31 July 1989. Decisions have not yet been taken on any arrangements for publishing the information they contain.

Calibre of Aylesbury

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the former grant of £8,000 a year paid to Calibre of Aylesbury, which produces talking books for the blind, was reduced two years ago to £500 a year; why it has now been withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Calibre was set up as a charitable trust in 1974 and began receiving funding from the Department in 1976 under our section 64 general scheme of grants to voluntary organisations. The grant was reviewed in 1984 when it was decided that Calibre was in a healthy financial situation which no longer justified section 64 support. Accordingly, a three-year tapering grant was awarded with the final payment of £2,000 being made in the financial year 1986-87. Although we are no longer able to award Calibre priority over the other organisations seeking section 64 grants, I should like to emphasise the high regard which the Department has for the services which Calibre provides to blind people.

Health For All 2000

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he instructed the Health Education Authority to cease work on the community participation aspect of Health For All 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 24 April at column 382.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given, or he intends to give, to local authorities on achieving the targets set in the Health For All 2000 programme.

Mr. Mellor: The Health For All targets have attracted considerable publicity, but we consider it is for health authorities, local authorities and other public bodies to determine how far the targets should be reflected in their plans and priorities.

NHS Reform

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is the aim of Her Majesty's Government that all general practices should end up, individually or in combination, as budget holders.

Mr. Mellor: The system of GP practice budgets as set out in NHS review working paper 3 is completely voluntary. From April 1991 onwards, larger practices with 11,000 or more patients on their lists and groupings of smaller practices will be able to apply to have a budget. Any extension to the scheme, such as a relaxation in the criterion of the size of practice, would need to be considered in the light of experience gained from the operation of the scheme.

Mr Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what details he can give of his intentions for each band of supplementary compensation payable to general practices in areas of dispersed population.

Mr. Mellor: At our meeting on 4 May the general medical services committee negotiators and I agreed that the present system of rural practice payments needed to be updated. Work on revising the scheme has now been taken out of the present consultations and will be considered by the central advisory committee on rural practice payments. Detailed considerations will be a matter for this committee.

Ambulance Crews

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to publish the findings of the Ambulance Council working party entitled "The Problems of Long-Service Ambulancemen";

(2) what steps his Department is taking to reduce deaths in service and diseases of the circulatory system among ambulance personnel.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 3 March to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) at column 368.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the report from the Ambulance Council working party. "The Problems of Long-Service Ambulancemen".

Mr. Freeman: We have received representations from the trades union side of the Ambulance Council and from five hon. and right hon. Members.

Ambulance Council

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Ambulance Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Freeman: We last met representatives of the trade union side of the Ambulance Council on 13 March when we discussed pay determination and representation.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase in nurses' remuneration between 1 April 1974 and 1 October 1979 and between 1 October 1979 and 1 April 1989; and if he will also present the increase in remuneration during both periods after deduction of charges for accommodation and board.

Mr. Mellor: The value of nurses real terms pay has changed as follows:

Pay Round Years (1 August to 31 July)	Percentage Movement in Real Terms Pay (a)
1974-75 to 1978-79	−21
1979-80 to 1988-89	+44

Basic pay, after deductions for lodging charges, for the main grades of nursing staff fell in real terms in the five years to 1979, that is:—

Pay Round Years 1974-75—1978-79

Grades (Maximum of Scale)	Percentage Movement in Real Terms Pay, after deductions for Lodging charges (a)
Sister	−23
Staff Nurse	−19
Enrolled Nurse	−17
Nursing Auxiliary	−10
Student	−5

Note: Percentage movements in real terms reflect the percentage cash increase/decrease for the pay round year deflated by the increase in the retail prices index throughout the pay round year.

Lodging charges ceased however to be linked with salaries in 1981. Since that date the council responsible for negotiating nurses terms and conditions of service has agreed varying charges for defined categories of accommodation, based on the cost of providing that accommodation. Learner nurses and staff under 22 pay lower rates. Direct comparison with pay levels cannot therefore now be made.

Contaminated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consignments of imported food have been rejected because of bacteriological contamination in May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Records of rejected unfit imported food consignments are not held centrally.

Immunopathologists

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the number, and rate per 100,000 population, of immunopathologsts, in each constituent part of the United Kingdom; if he has any plans to increase the number in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table.

Hospital Consultants in Immunopathology at 30 September 1987

	Number	Per 100,000 population	Whole time equivalent	Per 100,000 population

Figures include permanent paid and honorary and are rounded to the first decimal point.

For further information about the position in Wales I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 20 March at column 718 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Welsh Office.

NHS Ancillary Staff

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for the number of ancillary staff employed in the National Health Service by scale and point, of standard payroll system code, under the terms and conditions of the ancillary staffs' Whitley council agreement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 22 May 1989]: The latest available information to this level of detail relates to staff in post at 30 September 1987. At this date the estimated numbers of whole-time equivalent ancillary staff employed by the NHS in England by pay scale and incremental point were as shown in the table.

Male School Leavers (Nursing)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to attract male school leavers into the nursing profession.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 23 May 1989]: As part of our national nurse recruitment advertising in England we are currently developing a campaign designed to attract more men into the profession. The campaign will be aimed at older men as well as at school leavers and those who influence them such as parents, career advisers and school teachers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Assaults (Compensation)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show how many persons, in total and of these how many were councillors, and of what political parties, have been paid compensation after allegations of assault by (a) members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, (b) the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, (c) the Ulster Defence Regiment, and (d) the Army in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; what were the sums paid, the total costs including legal and other fees, in each case and the total costs to public funds including police costs for investigations and legal and other costs or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested, but I have listed below details of total damages paid over the last five years to persons alleging assault by members of the Army and the UDR.

Financial year	Number of persons	Total damages paid £
1984-1985	12	11,775
1985-1986	61	118,527
1986-1987	26	71,561
1987-1988	32	64,351
1988-1989	29	51,469

Notes:

1. In six of the cases (three in 1985-86; two in 1986-87 and one in 1987-88) the claims involved allegations of assault, wrongful arrest and false imprisonment.
2. In three cases (one in 1986-87 and two in 1987-88) the claims were made jointly against the MOD and the Chief Constable.
3. The figures do not include legal fees or police costs.
4. Information in respect of the RUC and RUC(R) cannot be made available except at disporportionate cost.

Firearms

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times authorisation has been given by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to police officers from the Irish Republic to carry firearms in Northern Ireland during each of the past six years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand from the Chief Constable that no such authorisation has been given.

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether authorisation for members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to carry firearms in the Republic of Ireland has been sought from the appropriate authority in the Irish Republic when members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary have been visiting the Republic for the purpose of discussing anti-terrorist co-operation with their counterparts in the Irish police; and on how many occasions this has been refused.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am not aware that any such authorisations have been sought.

Election (Proof of Identity)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will now make it his policy, in the light of reports that persons were refused ballot papers at the local government elections in Northern Ireland on 17 May because they could not produce one of the specified documents to prove their identity, to make arrangements to seek the views of (a) the Northern Ireland political parties and (b) the staff employed by the chief electoral officer on that day as presiding officers and poll clerks, and to have an accurate count taken of persons refused a ballot paper for that reason at the European Economic Community elections on 15 June;

(2) if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 16 May Official Report, column 164, he has sought from the political parties in Northern Ireland, or from the staff employed by the chief electoral officer for Northern Ireland, any evidence as to whether any persons did not possess any of the documents necesary to prove their identity when going to vote at recent elections in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 22 May 1989]: I should be happy to consider any evidence or views which the Northern Ireland political parties may wish to submit to me. Polling station staff have not been asked to maintain records of persons arriving at polling stations without the required proof of identity, nor is there any statutory authority for them to do so. The chief electoral officer makes every effort to remind electors of the need to have in their possession one of the specified documents when they come to vote. I understand that it is his intention to give further publicity to this requirement during the run-up to the European parliamentary elections.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Companies (Foreign Holdings)

Mr Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing all known foreign holdings in British water companies as a percentage of the share capital in each case, together with the turnover of the companies concerned and the number of households supplied.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 April to my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley), at column 400. My Department does not mention detailed records of foreign shareholdings in statutory water companies.

Housing Act 1988

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to bring to the attention of local authorities section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 concerning grants to or for the benefit of their tenants to assist them to obtain other accommodation by buying or leasing a home, or by extending an existing property.

Mr. Trippier: The Department wrote to all borough and district councils in England to draw their attention to section 129, which came into operation on 1 April, and give guidance on the framing of cash incentive schemes. Twenty-one schemes have been approved to date and others are under discussion. Cash incentives can play a valuable part in helping tenants move into homes of their own and releasing vacancies for reletting in areas of housing shortage.

Domestic Rating

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table in the form of his answer to the hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes of 18 May, Official Report, column 262, showing, in descending order, the domestic rate in the pound set by the London boroughs for (a) 1981-82 and (b) 1982-83, showing for each borough the political control at each date.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

Disabled Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the effects clause 7 of the Local Government and Housing Bill will have on the employment prospects of disabled people registered under section II of the disabled persons' employment register, intending to work, or working in local authority workshops, sheltered placement schemes or homeworker schemes; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no representations on this aspect of clause 7. The aim of the clause is to ensure that all local authority staff are appointed on merit. It will, however, be subject to certain existing statutory provisions, including sections 9 and 12 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944—quotas and reserved employment. The position of disabled people seeking local authority employment will therefore be protected.

Ivory

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will undertake an investigation into the misuse of quota numbers for ivory tusks under the convention on international trade in endangered species.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Oversight of the ivory quota system is the responsibility of the secretariat of the convention on international trade in endangered species.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why ivory tusks imported into the United Kingdom from Zaire on 21 October 1988, with quota numbers that had previously been used, and then issued with new quota numbers, were granted import licences by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 25 May 1989.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in regard to the role of Ms. Lulita Minkshim and the Finance Investment Corporation of Panama in the unlawful trade in ivory or other transactions concerning parts of other endangered species like rhinoceros horn.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has no evidence that the person and company named have been involved in illegal trade in endangered species. Any such evidence should be passed to the police or to Customs and Excise, who are the enforcement agencies.

Elephants and Ivory

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if Her Majesty's Government will consider seeking to put elephants in appendix one of the convention on international trade in endangered species;

(2) if the Government plan to seek to change the present quota system of the convention on international trade in endangered species regarding the trade of ivory.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside on 23 May 1989 calling for a ban on trade in new ivory. The future of the quota system will depend on the decision taken with regard to listing the African elephant on appendix I of the convention at the next CITES conference in October.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to ensure that in those areas where there are joint waste disposal committees there should be concern for all controlled wastes rather than a combining of responsibility only for hazardous waste;

(2) if he proposes to provide financial support to assist in the effective operation of lead local authorities or waste regulation units in the field of hazardous waste disposal;

(3) if he will implement the proposal contained in the Select Committee of the House of Lords concerned with hazardous waste disposal that responsibility within the metropolitan counties should rest with either single statutory authorities or with groups of authorities where power is delegated to a single authority under formal agreements;

(4) if he will require producers of hazardous waste to register with the waste regulation authorities and to disclose the particular nature of the waste produced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These matters are being considered in relation to the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on hazardous waste disposal which was published on 16 May. A full Government response to that report will be published as soon as possible.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to the letter he wrote on 13 March enclosing a letter from a constituent concerning toxic waste and related issues.

Mr. Moynihan: I have written today.

Dog Registration

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent of public support for the introduction of dog registration and licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations on the introduction of a dog registration scheme.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I propose the following changes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate.

The non-voted cash limit for urban aid (Doe/UA1) will be increased by £91 million, from £559·454 million to £650·454 million, to provide for an increase in the external finance limit of the London Docklands development corporation to allow the corporation to maintain progress with priority transport schemes.

This increase will be offset by reductions elsewhere and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The non-voted cash limit for the new towns (DOE/NT1) has been reduced by £50 million, from minus £385·535 million to minus £435·535 million, to take account of receipts from disposal of property which are higher than forecast. There have been other reductions in non-cash limited expenditure.

Community Charge Leaflet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the legal, administrative and other costs incurred in the recent legal action involving the community charge leaflet by (a) the London borough of Greenwich and (b) the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 May 1989]: Figures are not yet available, but Greenwich will have to foot the bill as well as the costs involved in correcting its own material distributed to 85,000 homes in which it falsely claimed that failure to pay the community charge would affect an individual's right to vote.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated cost for each of (a) Herne Bay, (b) Joss bay, (c) Broadstairs, (d) Ramsgate, (e) Sandwich bay, (f) Deal castle, (g) Folkestone, (h) Sandgate, (i) Hythe, (j) Dymchurch, (k) St. Mary's bay, (l) Littlestone, (m) Hastings, (n) Seaford, (o) Newhaven, (p) Brighton, (q) Hove, (r) Southwick, (s) South Lancing, (t) Worthing, (u) Littlehampton, (v) Middleton-on-Sea, (w) Pagham, (x) Selsey, (y) Eastney and (z) Southsea of (i) a long sea outfall, (ii) full sewage treatment works with a short sea outfall, and (iii) full sewage treatment works with a long sea outfall to enable them to comply with EEC bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; and when the appropriate solutions will be put in place, giving the estimated date of commencement and completion.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 24 May 1989]: Southern Water has an ongoing programme to bring its bathing waters up to EC standards. We are currently assessing with the authority the capital expenditure and time scale of the works involved. Consequently, I am unable to provide detailed information of the kind requested.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform Act 1988

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the working of sections 106-111 and 117-118 of the Education Reform Act 1988 since their implementation on 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received several representations on the subject of charges for school activities. He will keep a close watch on the impact of the new arrangements, once schools have had time to adjust to them.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which qualifications he intends to approve under section 5 of the Education Reform Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department will be sending to schools and LEAs on 31 May a circular on the provisions of section 5 of the Education Reform Act 1988, together with a list of qualifications and syllabuses approved for use in maintained schools for compulsory school age pupils. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Research Councils

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when he expects to take a decision about the future of research councils; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he intends to consult with outside organisations about the recommendations in the Morris committee report about the future of research councils; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will place a copy in the Library of the Morris committee report on the future of research councils.

Mr. Jackson: The review of research councils' responsibilities for biological sciences, undertaken by a group chaired by Mr. J. R. S. Morris, was commissioned by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. I understand that the board intends to submit detailed advice to my right hon. Friend taking account of the research councils' comments on the review group's recommendations, which it is currently eliciting. My right hon. Friend will be considering these matters later in the year in the light of the ABRC's advice.

A copy of Mr. Morris's report was placed in the Library last month.

Pupils (Personal Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to improve the confidentiality of personal information on pupils' education records.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to introduce measures regarding the confidentiality of personal information pupils' education records. If the hon. Member has in mind a particular problem perhaps he would care to write to me.

Teacher's Pay Award

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to sign the necessary orders to bring the teachers' pay award into operation.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to the reply, 22 May 1989, c. 370]: I intend to publish the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1989 on Tuesday 30 May and on the same day to make the order which will give effect to the provisions in it. A copy of the 1989 document and its accompanying circular will be sent to each local education authority. Copies of the 1989 document will be placed in the Vote Office.

TRANSPORT

Parliament Square

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on proposals for the improvement of traffic conditions in Parliament square and the environs of the Palace of Westminster which would ease the flow of traffic, benefit pedestrians and make access easier for hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Westminster city council as the responsible highway authority recently agreed a series of measures. New traffic signals will be installed at the south-east and south-west corners of the square to control traffic and improve access to the central island. There will be improved pedestrian facilities at the north-east and north-west corners, and at the junction of Storey's gate and Broad sanctuary, where the channelling of vehicles will also be improved. Congestion will be reduced at the junction of Storey's gate and Great George street by banning the right turn from Storey's gate and at the junction of Abingdon street and Great Peter street, by discouraging obstruction of traffic turning right from Abingdon street. Cyclists will be allowed to turn right from Bridge street to Parliament street. In addition the city council will ask consultants to re-examine the existing bus lanes, coach queuing in Abingdon street and pedestrian facilities to the Houses of Parliament across Abingdon street.

I welcome Westminster city council's positive proposals for these improvements. I am sure that they will bring appreciable benefits to traffic, pedestrians and to Members of Parliament. I shall be asking them to add a study of lorry controls. The Government are prepared to assist the city council in pursuing its aims. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is already considering, in consultation with it, possible changes to improve the appearance of the square. When all these improvements are in place, Parliament square will be a more efficient route for necessary traffic and a safer and more pleasant place for other users.

Roads

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list at 1987-88 prices capital and current spending on (a) the national roads system and (b) local roads in each year from 1974-75 to 1987-88 and the estimated outturn for 1988-89.

Mr. Channon: Figures for capital and current expenditure on national and local roads in England, Scotland and Wales over the period sought, at 1987-88 prices, are shown in the table.

	National Roads £M		Local Roads £M
	Current[4]	Capital[4]	Current[3]	Capital
1974-75	315	2,271	1,408	1,156
1975-76	295	1,868	1,357	1,138
1976-77	273	1,409	1,261	1,067
1977-78	229	902	1,246	707
1978-79	235	801	1,350	650
1979-80	203	708	1,242	760
1980-81	96	949	1,247	817
1981-82	132	969	1,342	705
1982-83	104	1,099	1,328	797
1983-84	115	1,037	1,323	810
1984-85	123	1,040	1,296	776
1985-86	119	999	1,293	790
1986-87	135	1,001	1,379	822
[2]1987-88	116	1,094	1,383	753
[1]1988-89	129	1,043	1,350	732

[1] All figures for 1988-89 are estimated outturn.
[2] Local roads figures for 1987-88 are estimated outturn.
[3] Excludes local authority professional and technical support.
[4] Structural maintenance on national roads was re-classified as capital expenditure in 1983. Figures in the series 1979-80—1988-89 reflect this classification while figures in the series 1974-75—1979-80 do not.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in reducing the amount of drinking and driving on roads in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are making better progress than almost anywhere else in the world. Latest attitude surveys show an increasing understanding that drinking and driving do not mix. Changing attitudes are particularly marked among young men—our prime target group, although we still need to see faster progress among middle-aged men. The surveys found that over the last 10 years the numbers of men who admit to driving after drinking alcohol have nearly halved. The proportion driving after drinking six plus units of alcohol has fallen by over two thirds.

The number of accidents where drink is a factor also appears to be decreasing. The number of drivers in an accident who failed a breath test reached a peak of 14,000 in 1979, and has since fallen to 13,500 in 1980 and to 11,000 in 1987. The proportion of drivers or riders killed in accidents who were found to have an illegal blood alcohol level fell from 31 per cent. in 1980 to 23 per cent in 1987.

Lowland Airports

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood on 18 May, Official Report, column 279, if he will place in the Library a detailed note of the views he received from political parties both for and against a review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Views of members of political parties on the case for a review of Scottish lowland airports policy have been put to Ministers in private correspondence and at private meetings. It would be for those concerned to make their views public, if they wished.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood, 18 May, Official Report, column 279, if he will list those organisations who made representations to him against a review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations to my right hon. Friend about Scottish lowland airports policy have taken the form of private correspondence. It would be for those concerned to make their views public, if they wished.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the survey of the views of hon. Members on Scottish lowland airports policy published on Friday 19 May; what conclusions he has reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I presume that my hon. Friend is referring to an article of 19 May. My right hon. Friend's conclusions on Scottish lowland airports policy remain as announced.

BAA (Services)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider introducing amending legislation to facilitate the creation of a statutory consumer body to receive complaints about services run by the BAA plc at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Prestwick airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the interests of airport users are sufficiently secured by the economic regulation provisions of the Airport Act 1986, by the Fair Trading Act 1973 and the Competition Act 1980.

Wembley Tube Station

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport inspected overcrowding and safety at the Wembley tube station tunnel during his visit to the cup final last Saturday.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had, and what representations have been made to him, to rectify the overcrowding in the Wembley tube station tunnel at Wembley way during football matches and pop concerts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tunnel in question is the direct responsibility of Wembley Stadium plc. The Department has been discussing with the London borough of Brent a scheme to replace the tunnel. Wembley Stadium plc along with the Metropolitan and British Transport police, London Underground Ltd. and officers from Brent council liaise closely not only on the day of events by additionally on a six-weekly basis throughout the year.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the revised proposals for the east London river crossing.

Mr. Channon: I have nothing to add to my reply of 12 April at column 572.

Airports

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire of 18 May, Official Report, column 276, what methods of assessment and forms of monitoring are being adopted by his Department to assess how far local authorities are co-operating actively and fully in the ownership, development, management and running of airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ministers and officials frequently discuss these and other matters with local authority airport representatives.

Stratford Station (Incident)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what caused the incident at Stratford station in the London borough of Newham on 24 May; how many passengers received hospital treatment; what members of staff of London Underground Ltd. were present at the scene of the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A Central line train was halted at Stratford station at about 08.30 when overheated brake blocks began to emit smoke. The problem was dealt with by the train crew, but the fire brigade was called as a precautionary measure. British Rail manages all train services at this station and its staff correctly detrained passengers from the defective train and from following trains. One passenger was taken to hospital.

London Underground's main concern was to release passengers on the two trains halted in tunnel between Stratford and Leyton. Instructions were passed by radio from the line controller to the drivers of those trains. A London Underground carriage examiner was in attendance at Stratford and was able to declare the previously defective train fit for service at 09.35.

ENERGY

Advanced Gas Reactor Power Stations

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate has been made of the costs of shutting down advanced gas reactor nuclear power stations in circumstances where the facilities for the storage of spent fuel prove inadequate.

Mr. Parkinson: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to reply.

Spent Advanced Gas Reactor Fuel

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the results of assessment by BNFL and the Central Electricity Generating Board of the corrosive qualities of spent advanced gas reactor fuel.

Mr. Parkinson: British Nuclear Fuels plc has carried out considerable research into techniques incorporating the use of corrosion inhibitors in its fuel-handling plants. These techniques are being successfully applied to the storage of spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether there are any proposals to improve the facilities at BNFL for the wet storage of spent nuclear fuel from advanced gas-cooled reactors; and what length of time it is estimated that the spent fuel can be kept in wet storage without a significant risk of corrosion.

Mr. Parkinson: I understand that the spent fuel from advanced gas-cooled reactors can be kept in wet storage at Sellafield, without significant risk of corrosion, until it is reprocessed in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant. The fuel will be stored in existing facilities and no improvements to them are necessary.

Ample storage capacity exists at Sellafield to handle spent AGR fuel, both before the completion of THORP and well into the future.

THORP Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects the THORP reprocessing plant to be completed; if he proposes to increase BNFL's borrowing limit to speed the progress of construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: THORP is expected to begin commercial reprocessing in late 1992. There are no plans to increase the limit beyond that provided for in the Atomic Energy Act 1989.

SCOTLAND

Female Police Officers (Firearms)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many female police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; what were the figures for five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Health Care International (Hospital)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of financial support given to date, including the cost of preparing the site, to the Health Care International proposed hospital at Clydebank.

Mr. Lang: Financial support levels are negotiated with individual companies on a commercially confidential basis. Expenditure to date in direct support of this project has been confined to assistance with feasibility studies, funded through the Scottish Development Agency. The cost of site works cannot be regarded as specific to this project, since these would have had to be undertaken in any event, for environmental and safety reasons.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many Scottish Development Association staff are currently employed in dealing with the Health Care International proposed hospital at Clydebank.

Mr. Lang: No Scottish Development Agency staff are currently or have ever been employed full time in dealing with the Health Care International project. In view of the major investment and employment potential of the project, a number of people in the agency have dealt with aspects of the project as the need arose.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce that financial backing has been secured for the proposed Health Care International hospital at Clydebank.

Mr. Lang: No date has yet been set for an announcement. The funding of the project is in any event a matter dealt with by the company's financial advisers.

Lowland Airports Policy

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastwood on 19 May, if he will list the other factors he took into account in commenting on the BAA's request for a review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend took into account all relevant local and national factors.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have taken action to protect human and animal health in relation to bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes, in a number of ways. It was intelligence-gathering and research by the state veterinary service which identified bovine spongiform encephalopathy as a new disease of cattle in November 1986. Further research at the CVL and neuropathogenesis unit, Edinburgh, has shown that it is one of a group of transmissible spongiform encephalopathies.

The most likely cause of the disease, which is the feeding of ruminant-based rations originating from scrapie-infected sheep, was established through research at the CVL as part of a comprehensive study of herds with affected cattle. As soon as this became clear the Government imposed, from 18 July last year, a feed ban on ruminant based protein.

When the clinical symptoms of the disease and techniques available to confirm it were firmly established through the examination of brain tissue it was, on 21 June 1988, made notifiable.

In April 1988 the Government set up an independent working party under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Southwood, professor of zoology at Oxford university, to look at bovine spongiform encephalopathy and to advise, particularly on any human health implications.

An interim recommendation was made in June 1988 that, although there was no evidence of a risk to humans, as a precautionary measure all cattle suspected of having bovine spongiform encephalopathy should be slaughtered and destroyed to take them out of the food chain. The Government acted promptly on this and the slaughter policy began on 8 August.

A research committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. David Tyrrell, has been established to advise on research in relation to bovine spongiform encephalopathy and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies following another interim recommendation.

Further interim recommendations were made in November 1988, first, again as a precautionary measure, to destroy milk from suspect cattle and secondly to extend the feed ban indefinitely. Legislative measures came into force in December to prohibit the use of that milk for human or animal consumption (except the cow's own calf) and to extend the feed ban. It will continue in force unless methods which destroy the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent can be identified.

Following the publication of the Southwood report on 27 February 1989, which welcomed the Government's action to deal with the disease, including the pre-empity and present implementation of interim recommendations, and which concluded that the risk of transmission to humans was remote, the Government agreed to take further measures as part of a comprehensive response to all the working party's recommendations. These are:

Following expert advice, the establishment shortly of a research project which will continue the study already under way to determine whether cattle to cattle transmission can take place.

The issuing by 15 March of additional guidance to medicine manufacturers using bovine material on good manufacturing practice.

A continuing and thorough research programme into the epidemiological background to the disease, its transmissibility, and genetic and microbiological aspects. The Government will also be taking into account the advice given to them by the Tyrrell committee.

A review by the Health and Safety Executive to determine what guidance may be appropriate in relation to all diseases of animals, including BSE, that may present a hazard during occupational exposure.

Although there is no evidence of a link between Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease and scrapie, the monitoring of the former so that any change in the pattern of the disease is detected.

As a matter of extreme prudence, following a suggestion in the Southwood report, the introduction of legislation to guard against any future use of certain offals in baby food, even though they are not currently used in their manufacture.

The Government's commitment to protecting human and animal health following the emergence of BSE is clearly shown by the action already taken and the further action which will be taken if it is shown to be necessary. In financial terms it will probably mean a resource commitment in excess of £6 million in this financial year.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 18 May, Official Report, columns 291-92, what methods are used in attempting to transmit spongiform encephalopathies to the various species involved in the experiments.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Three methods of inoculation are used: intracerebral, intraperitoreal and intravenous.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 18 May, Official Report, columns 294-95, what certification is supplied to Germany and Israel in respect of meat and bone meal and bovine spongiform encephalopathy; what monitoring and analysis of the meat and bone meal is carried out by the United Kingdom authorities; how long this certification has been required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At the request of the authorities of the Federal Republic, the certification will confirm that the consignment does not contain material derived from cattle which, when slaughtered, were under official restriction due to suspicion of BSE. No analysis or monitoring in respect of BSE is required. Local veterinary inspectors appointed by the Ministry sign export certificates and are responsible for ensuring that consignments have been produced in accordance with the requirement of the importing country.

No certification is being supplied at present for the exports to Israel. We are entering into discussion with Israel about its requirements. We were first advised by Israel and Germany of new certification requirements in November and December 1988 respectively.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 22 May, Official Report, column 375, whether he intends to initiate legal action for libel against the BBC Radio 4 "Face the Facts" programme over its allegations concerning the Southwood committee's recommendations on compensation for bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received concerning the level of infectiousness of protein derived from bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle which have been slaughtered prior to the onset of clinical symptoms of the disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Proposals for research into this area are currently being considered by Dr. Tyrrell's research consultative committee.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been done to ensure that meat and bone meal exported from the United Kingdom are free of the agents causing bovine spongiform encephalopathy or scrapie.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The conditions under which meat and bone meal is exported from this country are a matter for the importing country to determine.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations or interim reports from the Tyrrell committee on research into transmissible spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No, but I understand that the Tyrrell committee will be making an interim report shortly.

Crayfish

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to combat the crayfish plague.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have no specific programme to combat crayfish plague which has been established in our main crayfish river systems for a number of years. To combat this disease effectively would be both difficult and costly.

Carp

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to combat spring viraemia of carp.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Spring viraemia of carp is one of eight notifiable fish diseases in England and Wales. My Department investigates suspected cases of this disease, designates those sites found to be infected, and imposes appropriate movement restrictions. In February this year we issued an advisory leaflet on the disease including guidance on the steps that could be taken to safeguard against its spread.

Salmon Dealers

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects to implement a scheme for the licensing of salmon dealers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As my noble Friend the Minister of State at the Scottish Office announced on 4 May, the Government have decided that further consultations should take place on schemes for salmon dealer licensing in England and Wales and in Scotland. We intend to issue consultation papers shortly inviting early comments. The details of the schemes, and their timetables for introduction, will be considered in the light of comments received.

Salmon Stocks

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to receive a report from the advisory committee on salmon stocks.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The salmon advisory committee is continuing to work on aspects of its remit on the factors affecting salmon stocks though I cannot predict when the committee will be ready to submit its next report to Ministers.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he carries out tests on strawberries imported from Holland to establish whether they have been irradiated; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he carries out tests on vegetables imported from Holland to establish whether they have been irradiated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Irradiation of fresh fruit and vegetables is not permitted in the Netherlands. A small quantity of dried vegetables is irradiated for quarantine purposes on import to the Netherlands, but these are used within that country.

Hepatitis A

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has carried out tests to establish whether hepatitis A can be killed by irradiation at the 10 kgy level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No tests have been carried out on this specific subject. Other treatments are effective in eliminating hepatitis A.

Baby Foods (Offals)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he intends to introduce regulations barring the inclusion of specified offals from baby foods; if he has any proposals to extend the prohibition to other offals or other foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Following the advice in the Southwood report, I indicated that I would be introducing regulations prohibiting the use of specified offals in foods intended for babies. I am aware of the suggestion that such a prohibition should be extended to all meat products even though the Southwood report did not identify any such general need. There is already a prohibition on the use of specified offal in uncooked meat products. I am considering whether further action should be taken to reinforce the present law.

Meat and Bone Meal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 18 May, Official Report, columns 294-95, what requirements on heat treatment of meat and bone meal exported from the United Kingdom are sought by (a) France, and (b) West Germany.

Mr. Donald Thompson: France has requested that the temperature and duration of the heat treatment which has been applied to the consignment should be recorded on the export health certificate. West Germany specifies that consignments must be heated to a minimum temperature of 80 deg C for at least 30 minutes.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the total quantity of meat and bone meal exported from the United Kingdom to the United States of America for each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) what was the total quantity of meat and bone meal exported from the United Kingdom to Holland for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: United Kingdom exports of meat meal and bone meal to the Netherlands in the last three years are given in the following table. There were no exports of meat and bone meal to the United States of America during 1986 and 1987 and only 4 tonnes were recorded in 1988.

	Tonnes
	1986	1987	1988
Flours, meals and pellets of meat or offal (including tankage), unfit for human consumption; greaves	139	805	1,826
Bone meal	51	11	[1]670

[1] From 1988, bone meal is combined in the statistics with other bones and their derivatives apart from "ossein and bones treated with acid". Therefore the tonnage of bone meal exported to Nertherlands in 1988 could be slightly lower than 670 tonnes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Trade Unions

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of the recent ballot in which members of the Ministry of Defence staff association voted in favour of a merger with the Electrical and Engineering Staff Association, he will make a statement about political affiliation by Civil Service trade unions.

Mr. Brooke: As I made clear in my statement in the House on 7 February 1986, in the Government's view political affiliation by a non-industrial Civil Service trade union would run wholly counter to the need for political neutrality of a Civil Service which has to serve Governments of any political persuasion. The Government remain of this view and would be seriously concerned if such a union, or any section of a union representing non-industrial civil servants, were to seek to affiliate to a political party, either directly or subsequent to merger with another union. In such an event, the Government would need to consider what action would be necessary to prevent political affiliation from taking place. The Government are reassured to note that, in seeking merger with the EESA, the MODSA has already indicated its wish to remain politically non-affiliated subsequent to the merger taking place.

Inflation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any further measures are planned to control inflation.

Mr. Lilley: Inflation is a disease of money. The way to cure this disease is through monetary policy of which short-term interest rates are the essential instrument.

Interest Rates

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 14 per cent.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest official projection for the growth of manufacturing investment in 1989.

Mr. Major: The latest DTI investment intentions survey published in December projected manufacturing investment in constant prices to rise by 11 per cent. in 1989 on a year earlier. The latest CBI quarterly trends survey published in April confirms this buoyant outlook.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale, 5 May, Official Report, column 255, what proportion of the actual numbers of all purchases of premium bonds are currently made under the value of £100.

Mr. Lawson: About 80 per cent.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last reviewed the value and number of the prizes awarded in the premium savings bond monthly draw; and whether there are plans to increase the number of values of the prizes during 1989.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The prize structure and the underlying rate of interest which determines the prize fund for premium bonds are kept under continuous review. The number and value of prizes increase automatically in line with increases in the value of bonds eligible to participate in the prize draw. There are no present plans to alter the existing prize structure or the underlying interest rate.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to increase the use of national savings gift tokens for the purchase of premium savings bonds.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: As previously announced, National Savings gift tokens will be withdrawn from sale on 30 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current cost of translating a sale of premium savings bond worth £10, £50, £100 and £1,000, respectively.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The transaction cost is nearly £2 irrespective of the value of the sale.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of premium savings bond sales to adults buying on behalf of children in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The estimated value of premium savings bond sales to adults buying on behalf of children (under the age 16) in the financial years 1986, 1987 and 1988 is as follows:

Financial year	Value £ million
1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987	3·5
1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988	4·6
1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989	8·4

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the United Kingdom gross domestic product was represented by the financial sector (a) in 1980 and (b) in the latest available year; and what information he has as to corresponding figures for France and West Germany, respectively.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 23 May 1989]: Figures for the contribution of the financial sector to United Kingdom gross domestic product are given in the 1988 CSO national accounts Blue Book. Figures for France and Germany, and for the United Kingdom on a comparable basis, are given in "OECD National Accounts" volume II 1960-1986 published in 1988. Both publications can be obtained from the Library of the House.

VAT

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Customs and Excise will produce guidelines on how the sporting value of land will be assessed for VAT.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 May 1989]: Customs and Excise have no plans to issue any guidelines. VAT is a self-assessed tax and it is for vendors and lessors to make a fair and reasonable apportionment of the contract price or rent as between on the one hand the value of the exempt land and on the other the value of the taxable sporting rights. Most vendors and lessors will in any event be professionally advised in determining their asking price and the valuation of the sporting rights could be dealt with in that context. Customs will not, however, insist on a professional valuation and land owners will often have an indication of value by reference to rating assessments or to the income generated from the fishing, shooting and so on. Where, after 1 August 1989, a vendor or lessor had opted to tax his agricultural land transactions, there would be no need for an apportionment.

National Savings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of sales per employee in national savings in 1988 for each of their products.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The value of sales per employee for each of national savings' products in 1988 was as follows:

	Sales 1988 £ million	Average sales per employee £ million
Fixed-interest Certificates	1,371	1·1
Index-linked Certificates	683	1·0
Yearly Plan	119	0·8
Save As You Earn (share option schemes)	64	0·3
Income Bonds	2,039	3·6
Investment Account	1,852	1·8
Premium Bonds	323	0·2
Ordinary Account	651	0·4
Deposit Bonds[1]	203	2·3

[1] Withdrawn from sale 19 November 1988.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of all seizures of live creatures and articles derived from endangered species imported or exported in contravention of the restrictions imposed by national and international regulations in each of the last three year periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The table shows numbers of live creatures and articles derived from endangered species imported or exported in contravention of the restrictions imposed by the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 or Council regulation (EEC) No. 3626/82. The central records of articles for 1988 have not yet been finalised.

Year to 31 March	Live creatures	Articles
1986	264	4,500
1987	1,604	6,304
1988	2,284	more than 3,000

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the seizures of live creatures imported or exported in contravention of the restrictions imposed by the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 or Council regulation (EEC) No. 3626/82 in the year to 31 March; and what information he has concerning related criminal proceedings taken with penalties and costs imposed.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The information is as follows. Details relating to proceedings indicate the number of persons successfully prosecuted under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 for attempted evasion of the restrictions.

Seizures	Number of persons convicted	Penalties/Costs
Imports
1 African civet	—	—
2 common marmosets	—	—
1,518 reptiles and amphibians	1 person	£100 penalty £400 costs
380 birds	—	—
Exports
4 snakes	1 person	£200 penalty £25 costs
10 finches	—	—

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the quantity and country of origin of all raw and worked ivory detained in each of the last three years because of documentation difficulties; and what was the subsequent outcome of each case.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: Records of such detentions are not maintained centrally and the information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of the disposal of endangered species of animals, birds and articles seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 May 1989]: The disposal of seized specimens, parts and derivatives is in accordance with the Washington convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora as put into force by the Endangered Species Act and Community regulations. Each case is dealt with on its merits.

The disposal of live creatures is arranged in consultation with the Department of the Environment, the management authority. The preferred option for the most endangered species is return to a natural habitat.

Productivity

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other major industrialised countries.

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the other major industrial countries.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in tabular form the growth of productivity each year for the whole economy since 1980 in the United Kingdom and in each of the other industrialised countries.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1989, c. 778-79]: The figures given for Canada, and also, as a consequence, the Group of Seven average, were incorrect. The correct figures are as follows:

Growth of whole economy productivity
(percentage change on a year earlier)

	United Kingdom	United States	Japan	Germany	France	Italy	Canada	G7[1]

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 153

SESSION 1988–89

15th May—26th May 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
